THE LIFE QUESTION IN ENGLAND.

FURTHER REMARKS OF MR. ROBERTS IN HIS APPENDIX.

Parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus.—Luke xvi. 19. (See page 35.) This is either a literal narrative or a parable. If literal, it destroys the very theory which Mr. Nightingale has quoted it to support. It clashes with the popular theory of the death state, in the following particulars: We read—verse 22—"that the beggar died and was carried"—not his immaterial soul, but he, his bodily self, "by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died and was buried, and in hell," where he had been buried ("hell" and "grave" being synonymous)—"he lifted up his eyes, being in torment, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom;" "and he cried, and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue." Abraham denied the rich man's request, adding as a supplementary reason, "Between you and us there is a great gulf fixed, so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot." Immaterial souls or spirits can "wing their flight" in space; to them a gulf ever so deep, would offer no obstruction in the transit. The rich man asked Abraham to send Lazarus to his five brethren, to testify to them, lest they should come to the same place of torment; Abraham answered, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." According to the popular view, rising from the dead would not have been necessary in the case. A spirit commissioned from "the vasty deep" would have been quite sufficient to communicate any warning necessary in the circumstances. The whole narrative has an air of reality, of tangibility about it which does not comport with the common view of the state of the dead. Besides, what an incongruity to think of heaven and hell being within sight of each other, and of conversation passing between the occupants of the respective places! Yet if we insist upon the story as a literal narrative, we are committed to all these minutest particulars—bodily conveyance to heaven or hell—material finger, material water, material tongue, &c., and therefore compelled to reject the popular immaterial theory with which it is so thoroughly at variance. But is it a literal narrative? Few will say it is. None will say so who fairly confront the difficulties of the case. What then? It is a parable. Clearly so. Mostly all are agreed upon the point. If so, its strength as an argument for the orthodox side ceases; for the essential characteristic of a parable is, that its intended import is something very different from its literal outline. "Well, but all parables have their foundation in fact," says the orthodox advocate. Truly so; and so has this, in a certain way. The death-state theory which it embodies was the belief of the Pharisees, to whom he was addressing himself. This is apparent from the treatise on "Hades," by Josephus, (himself a Pharisee), which will be found at the close of his compiled works, and in which the reader will find a clear account of "Abraham's bosom," "the gulf fixed," "the carrying angels," &c., calculated to convince him of the wide dissimilarity of the Jewish theory embodied in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, from the commonly received doctrine of going to heaven and hell. The parable was founded on a theoretical fact; but it may be asked, Why did Christ parabolically employ a belief that was fictitious, and thus give it his apparent sanction? We answer that Christ was not using it with any reference to itself, but purely with a view to an effect on those to whom it was addressed. He wanted to impress upon them the lesson conveyed in the concluding words of Abraham, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead;" and in no more forcible way could he have done this than by framing a parable based upon their own theory of the death-state. This did not involve his sanction of the theory, any more than he approved slavery by introducing it into his parable of the ungrateful debtor (Matt. xviii. 25). It may be urged that it was unlike Christ to perpetuate delusion and withhold the truth on such an important question. To this, the reply will be found in the following (Matt. xiii. 10, 13): "And the disciples came to him and said, Why speakest thou to them in parables? Jesus answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, and to them it is not given. For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundantly; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that which he hath. Therefore speak I to them in parables, because seeing they see not, and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand."

"Their angels behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. xviii. 10. See page 35. Whose angels? the angels of "the little ones which believe." Matt. xviii. 6. Mr. Nightingale endeavors to synonymise "spirits" with "angels," and to make it out that "their angels" means "the little ones" themselves; but this is a liberty so entirely at variance both with the sense and philology of the case, as to be undeserving of reply. The "little ones" are those who "receive the kingdom of God as a little child" and "their angels" are the angels of God who supervise their interests. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him." Psalm xxxiv. 7. "Are they (the angels) not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. i. 14. This fact is a good reason why we should "take heed that we despise not one of these little ones." But adopt Mr. Nightingale's version of the matter, and the reason vanishes. "Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones, for their redeemed spirits are in heaven." This would involve a paradox. Yet without it, the proof for immortal soulism which Mr. Nightingale sees in it, is nowhere to be found.

"In the ways of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof is no death." Prov. xii. 28. See page 39. Mr. Nightingale quotes this to prove that as regards the righteous, at any rate, there is no such thing as even momentary extinction of being. If the passage proves this, we claim that the converse be admitted as established also, that in the way of unrighteousness is death and in the pathway thereof no life. The terms of an affirmative proposition have the same value in a negative. Hence, if this passage prove the literal immortality of the righteous, it proves the literal mortality of the wicked, which is more than Mr. Nightingale is prepared to accept. The passage in fact bears out the proposition that the Bible is against the doctrine of the immortality of soul. I have not said that the Bible is against the doctrine of immortality; very far from it. The Bible reveals immortality as a gift of God in reserve for a certain class who fulfil his will in righteousness. All others are excluded. Hence personified wisdom in Prov. viii. 36, says, "All they that hate me love death" The passage quoted by Mr. Nightingale falls in with this doctrine and destroys his own. It therefore requires no further comment.

"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Matt. x. 28. See page 39. This was Mr. Nightingale's great triumph. He felt he had here some little foothold, and he recited the passage with an emphasis entirely absent from his other efforts, but he snatched his triumph too early. He began comment before finishing the verse. He exultantly inquired why Mr. Roberts had not given them that passage, and so on, and then stumbled over the concluding sentence, "but rather fear him that is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Instantly perceiving the disaster which this elaboration of Christ's exhortation brought upon his theory of imperishable and immortal-soulism, he suggested that "destroy" in this instance meant "afflict," "torment." It was necessary to make this suggestion in order to save himself from utter discomfiture; but a more unwarrantable suggestion was never hazarded by a theorist in straits. In all the instances in which apollumi—the word translated "destroy" is used, it is impossible to discover the slightest approach to the idea of affliction or torment. We append all the New Testament instances in which it is used: "The young child to destroy him"—Matt. ii. 13; "Might destroy him—Matt. xii. 14; Mark iii. 6; xi. 18; "Will miserably destroy those wicked men"—Matt. xxi. 41; "Destroyed those murderers"—Matt. xxii. 7; "Persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus"—Matt. xxvii. 20; "Art thou come to destroy"—Mark i. 24; Luke iv. 34; "Into the waters to destroy him"—Mark ix. 22; "and destroy the husbandmen"—Mark xii. 9; Luke xx. 16; "To save life or to destroy"—Luke vi. 9, "Not come to destroy men's lives"—Luke ix. 56; "The flood came and destroyed them all"—Luke xvii. 27, 29; "Of the people sought to destroy him"—Luke xix. 47; "To steal, and to kill, and to destroy"—Luke x. 10; "Destroy not with thy meat"—Rom. xiv. 15; "I will destroy the wisdom of the wise—"1 Cor. i. 19; "Were destroyed of serpents"—1 Cor. x. 9. "And were destroyed of the destroyer"—1 Cor. x. 10; "Cast down but not destroyed"—2 Cor. iv. 9; "Is able to save and to destroy"—Jas. iv. 12; "Afterwards destroyed them that believed not"—Jude v. In all these cases, "destroy" has a very different meaning from "afflict" or "torment." The reader has only to substitute either of those words for "destroy" in any of the passages, to see how utterly out of place such a paraphrase of the word would be. If "destroy" in every other case has its natural meaning, why should an exceptional meaning be claimed for it in Matthew x? No reason can be given beyond the one already hinted at, viz., the necessities of Mr. Nightingale's theory. This is no sound reason at all, and therefore we put it aside, and inquire what Jesus means by exhorting his disciples to "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but fear him that can destroy both soul and body in hell." We reply, there is a life in relation to those who are Christ's, which cannot be touched by mortal man, however they may treat the body and the poor mortal life belonging to it. This life Paul says "is hid with Christ in God" (Col. iii. 3), "and when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory." Verse 4. This life is the "treasure in the heavens which faileth not," spoken of by Jesus, and said by Peter to be "reserved in heaven." Now when men kill the saints, they only terminate their mortal existence. They do not touch that real life of theirs, which is related to the eternal future, and which has its foundation in their connection with Christ in the heavens. This is in Christ's keeping, and can be touched by no man. We are not to fear those who can only demolish the corruptible body, and cannot do anything to prevent the coming bestowal of immortality by resurrection. We are to fear him who hath power to destroy both body and soul (life) in Gehenna; that is, in the coming retribution by destructive fire-manifestation, which will utterly consume the ungodly from the presence of the Lord. We are to fear God, who has the power to annihilate from the universe, and who will use the power on all such as are unworthy. We are not to fear those who can at best only hasten the dissolution to which we are Adamically liable.

INHUMANITIES OF PARENTS.

CORPOREAL PUNISHMENT.

A few weeks ago a Presbyterian minister in Western New York whipped his three-year old boy to death for refusing to say his prayers. The tiny fingers were broken; the tender flesh was bruised and actually mangled; strong men wept when they looked on the body; and the reverend murderer, after having been set free on bail, was glad to return and take refuge within the walls of a prison to escape summary punishment at the hands of the outraged community. At the bare mention of such monstrous cruelty every heart grew sick and faint; men and women were dumb with horror; only tears, and a hot demand for instant and extreme retaliation availed.

The question whether, after all, that baby-martyr were not fortunate among his fellows would undoubtedly be met by resentful astonishment. But it is a question which may well be asked, may well be pondered. Heart-rending as it is to think for an instant of the agonies which the poor child bore for four or five hours, after his infant brain was undoubtedly so bewildered by pain and terror as to be utterly unable to understand what was required of him, it still cannot fail to occur to deeper reflection that the torture was short and small in comparison with what the next ten years would have held for him if he had lived; and that while to earn entrance on the spiritual life by the briefest experience possible of the physical is always "greater gain," it is most emphatically so where the conditions of life upon earth are sure to be unfavorable.

If it were possible in any way to get a statistical summing up, and a tangible presentation of the amount of physical pain inflicted by parents on children under twelve years of age, the most callous-hearted persons would be shocked and surprised; and if it were possible to add to this an accurate and scientific demonstration of the extent to which this pain, by weakening the nervous system, and exhausting its capacity to resist and endure disease, diminishes the chances of life, the world would stand aghast.

Too little has been said on this point. The opponents of corporeal punishment approach the subject habitually, either from the sentimental or the moral point of view. An argument strong enough one would suppose to palsy every hand which might be lifted to strike a child, can be made on each of these grounds. But the question of the direct and lasting physical effect of a blow—even one blow—on the delicate tissues of a child's body, on the frail and trembling nerves, on the sensitive organization, which is trying, under a thousand unfavoring conditions, to adjust itself to the hard work of both living and growing, has yet to be properly considered.

Every one knows the sudden sense of insupportable pain, sometimes reaching, for a moment the point of positive dizziness and nausea, which is produced by the accidental hitting of the ankle or elbow against a hard substance. It does not need that the blow be very hard to bring involuntary tears to adult eyes. But how much does this amount to in comparison with a dozen or more quick, tingling blows from a heavy hand on flesh which is and must be as much more tender and sensitive than ours as are the precious souls which dwell in it purer than ours! Add to this physical pain the overwhelming terror which only utter helplessness can feel, and which is the most recognizable quality in the cry of a very young child under whipping, and the instinctive sense of disgrace and outrage, which often keeps the older child stubborn and still, and you have an amount and an intensity of suffering from which even tried nerves might well shrink. Again, who does not know, or at least what woman does not know, that violent weeping for only fifteen minutes is quite sufficient to cause a feeling of languor and depression, a positive exhaustion of the nervous system, for a whole day? And yet, it does not seem to occur to mothers that little children must feel it far more than grown people, in proportion to the length of time and violence of their crying. Who has not seen, who has not often seen, a poor little child receive a second whipping within an hour or two of the first, for some small ebullition of nervous irritability—perhaps a sudden and uncontrolable fit of crying over some little disappointment—which was simply inevitable in its spent and worn condition.

It is safe to say that, in families where whipping is regularly recognized as a punishment, few children under ten years of age, and of average behavior, have less than one whipping a week. Sometimes they have many more. Sometimes the whipping is very severe. Here you have, in one short year, sixty or seventy occasions on which, for a greater or less time—say from one to three hours—the child's nervous system is subjected to a tremendous strain from the combined operation of fright, physical pain and prolonged crying. Will any physician tell us that this fact is not an element in that child's physical condition at the end of the year? Will any physician tell us that there may not be in that child's life crises, when the issues of life and death will be so equally balanced that the tenth part of the nervous force lost in these fits of crying, and in the endurance of that pain, would be sufficient to turn the scale?

Nature's retributions as well as her rewards are cumulative. Because her "sentence against evil works is not executed speedily, the hearts of the sons of men are fully set in them to do evil." But the sentence always is executed, sooner or later, and that inexorably! In the first flush of his manhood, your son, oh, unthinking mother, may fall by the way for lack of the strength which God gave him, a constitution fitted to accumulate, and which but for you he would have attained!

It is easy to say, and it universally is said by people who cling to the old and antagonize the new: "All this outcry about corporeal punishment is sentimental nonsense. The world is full of good men and women who have grown up so in spite of being whipped; and as for myself, I know I never had any more whippings than was good for me, and I deserved." Are you, then, so clear, and pure, and strong in your physical and spiritual nature and life that you feel sure that no other system and condition of training could have made either your body or your soul better? Are these men and women, of which the world is full, so able-bodied, pure-minded, and whole-souled, that you think it needless to look about for any method of making the next generations better? And above all, do you believe that it is a part of the legitimate outworking of God's plan and intent in creating human beings to have more than one-half of the whole number who are born die in their childhood? And if you do not believe that this fearful mortality is a part of his plan, is it wise or christian to refuse to consider all the possibilities, even those seemingly most remote, of diminishing it?

No argument is so hard to meet (simply because it is not an argument) as this assumption of the propriety and good policy of "the thing that hath been." It is one of the devil's very best sophistries, by which he keeps good people undisturbed in doing the things he likes. It has been in all ages the bulwark behind which evils and cruelties have made stand and have slain their tens of thousands. It is the last enemy that shall be destroyed!

Among the lower classes, the frequency and severity of corporeal punishment of children are appalling. The facts only need to be held up closely and persistently before the community to be recognized as horrors of cruelty, far greater than some which have been made subjects of legislation.

It was my ill fortune to be obliged to spend several of the hottest weeks of last summer in New York. Within near neighborhood of my rooms were blocks of buildings, occupied by stores on the first floor and by tenements above. In these lived the families of small tradesmen and mechanics of the better order. During those scorching nights every window was thrown open, and all sounds were borne, with great distinctness, through the hot, still air. Chiefest among them were the shrieks and cries of little children, and blows and angry words from tired and over-worked mothers; at times it became almost unbearable; it was hard to refrain from a wild attempt at rescue; ten, twelve, twenty sharp, hard blows, whose sound rang out plainly, I counted again and again; and mingled with them the convulsive screams of the poor children, and that most piteous thing of all, the reiteration of "Oh, mamma! oh, mamma!" as if through all the helpless little creatures had an instinct that the word ought to be, in itself, the strongest appeal. These families were all the better class of work people, comfortable and respectable. What sounds there were to be heard during those nights in the really wretched haunts of the city the heart struggled away from fancying. But the shrieks of those children, those babies, will never wholly cease in the air; ever since then the question has been ringing in my ears, "Why does not the law protect children before the point at which life is endangered?" If a cartman can be arrested in the streets for brutal beating of a horse, which is his own by right of purchase, and which he can kill, for the sake of hide and hair, any day that he so chooses, ought not a man or a woman to be at least as severely dealt with for the cruel whipping of a child, who is not theirs, but God's, and the taking of whose life by one blow is murder?—N. Y. Independent.

Would any one suppose the author of the foregoing rational remarks could be a believer in eternal torments? Must he not "stand aghast" at the idea of a God, who is the Creator of all men, having determined, for their sins, in this short and trying life, to torture them eternally, and to remain deaf to all the cries and entreaties of the tormented victims for a release or mitigation of their agonies; and all this torture with no design to reform or make better, nor to bring about an end of such a miserable existence, but with a fixed purpose to perpetuate that existence and increase, without limit, its capacity for suffering and woe? To use the emphatic language of an eminent minister, in his sermon on the "Future Misery of the Wicked"—he says:

"God is present in hell, in his infinite justice and almighty wrath, as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture—the presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there manifest his love, so hell would be no hell if God did not there display his wrath. It is the presence and agency of God which gives everything virtue and efficacy, without which there can be no life, no sensibility, no power. God is, therefore, himself present in hell, to see to the punishment of these rebels against his government, that it may be adequate to the infinity of their guilt; his fiery indignation kindles, and his increased fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their nature will admit?"—Benson.

There, neighbor Independent, what is your baby-whipping compared to that account of your God's inflictions? Why, your clerical whipper, who whipped his child to death in that barbarous manner which made "men and women dumb with horror," was a saint compared with your God; for his child's sufferings ended with his life; but your God takes care that his victims shall not die; "he maintains their being"!

How long will good men continue thus to dishonor God and furnish infidelity with food? Moloch was kind compared with the God that theologians, claiming to be "orthodox," present, pretending that such is the God of the Bible! Moloch devoured his victims almost instantly. Not so the God of Mr. Benson and his school. If our friend of The Independent is so disturbed in New York, with the "shrieks and cries of little children," during "those scorching nights," we wonder how he will stand it in heaven, during an eternity of such operations as those described by the "evangelical" BENSON! Will he listen and look on unmoved? Will his heart then be turned to stone? Will he shout "Hosannah," as "the wails of the damned" eternally vibrate on his ear? If so, will he not be a worse man then than now? Think, O, think of the shocking character you give your God: more unfeeling than you now are! One word more and we have done. Remember "The wages of sin is death." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Rom. vi. 21. Ezek. xviii. 4, 20. Cease to reproach the God of the Bible by such blasphemy as that uttered by BENSON and those entertaining such views.—EDITOR OF HERALD OF LIFE.

MEMORY.—Many are discouraged from studying the scriptures, because, as they say, their memories are so treacherous and unfaithful they can retain nothing. More pains will supply this defect. Memory is the soul's steward; and if thou findest it unfaithful, call it the oftener to account. A vessel set under the fall of a spring cannot leak faster than it is supplied. A constant dropping of this heavenly doctrine into the memory will keep it, that, though it be leaky, yet it never shall be empty. If scripture truths do not enrich the memory, yet they may purify the heart. We must not measure the benefit we receive from the word according to what of it remains, but according to what effect it leaves behind. Lightning, you know, than which nothing sooner vanishes away, often breaks and melts the hardest and most firm bodies, in its sudden passage. Such is the irresistible force of the word; the Spirit often darts it through us—it seems like a flash, and gone, and yet it may break and melt down our hard hearts before it, when it leaves no impression at all upon our memories. I have heard of one, who, returning from an affecting sermon, highly commended it to some, and being demanded what he remembered of it, answered, "Truly, I remember nothing at all; but only while I heard it, it made me resolve to live better, and so by God's grace I will." To the same purpose I have somewhere read a story of one who complained to an aged holy man, that he was much discouraged from reading the scriptures, because he could fasten nothing upon his memory which he had read. The old hermit (for so, as I remember, he was described) bid him take an earthen pitcher and fill it with water: when he had done it he bid him empty it again and wipe it clean, that nothing should remain in it, which, when the other had done, and wondered to what this tended: "now," said he, "though there be nothing of the water remaining in it, yet the pitcher is cleaner than before; so, though thy memory retain nothing of the word thou readest, yet thy heart is the cleaner for its very passage through."—Bishop Hopkins.

THE PAPACY: WHAT NEXT?

Within a short time the Pope will be deprived of his temporal power. He has ruled as a king in the seat of the Cæsars for about 1,260 years. Napoleon has been compelled, willingly or unwillingly, to leave him to his own resources, and that seals his fate. There are causes at work stronger than the power of earthly monarchs can overcome, to consume that great wickedness. The French Emperor has no love or respect for the Papacy, and his hate is most cordially returned by the Pope and clergy. To avert danger from that quarter, he has given up his wife and child to embrace and practice the grossest acts of superstition of the Catholic religion, just as he has made Prince Napoleon side with the progressive or liberal party to keep out of danger from that quarter. But he is sinking, notwithstanding all his cunning and chicanery, down to the abyss prepared for him, so that he has little to spare to aid in bolstering the fated "Man of Sin."

The question now presents itself, What are the consequences to follow the loss of temporal power by the Pope? Will he be able to continue his sway over the minds and consciences of his deceived followers? Or will the veil be rent, and the hideous deformity of that monstrous superstition be discovered to their astonished gaze? The tradition is common among the Catholics, as among the Mahometans, about their system, that their destiny as a religious organization would close about the middle of this century. Among both of these classes there are many sayings to show this, derived, no doubt, from devout christians who had applied themselves to the study of the declarations of scripture in relation to them. Paul says, speaking of the "Man of Sin," 2 Thess. ii., that it would be "consumed by the spirit of his mouth and destroyed by the brightness of his coming." What is this "consuming?" Apparently the loss of its temporal power and influence, which has been going on for the last century. But will the consumption be complete when the last vestige of that power given to it by the Roman Emperor Phocas, decreeing the Pope supreme ruler, in 607—1,260 years ago—is taken away?

Austria, lately so imperial, on which the Pope leaned with so much confidence, has been withered in an hour, like Jonah's gourd. It undertook to prevent the purpose of God in the destruction of the great apostacy, and was smitten and is being destroyed and rooted out of the earth. Blind Spain, long the stronghold of all the evil birds of that foul cage, Papacy, became leprous and impotent a century ago, as its chastisement, and now has little interest in, and less aid to proffer, the crew of vampires that sucked every drop of generous blood from the nation's veins. Portugal, for a similar crime, has found herself helplessly and hopelessly prostrated. Those two powers are but a mockery of national greatness. They have been warring against the privileges of the Catholic clergy and eating the flesh of the "Harlot." Italy, the child of misery—the blind Samson grinding in the house of Dagon, has shaken herself free, for a moment, from the enchantment that bound her to her cruel work, and is giving sorrow for sorrow into the bosom of the corrupt Mother of Harlots. There are sure indications among the rest of the surrounding powers that she will encounter henceforth nothing but evil and dismay, until the last spark of life is quenched from her corrupt carcass.

But Paul says the "Mystery of Iniquity" is to be destroyed by the "brightness of his coming," speaking of Christ. It therefore follows that the time is near at hand to rejoice and say "Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth; break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein; for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob and glorified himself in Israel." Amen. W. M.

A Few Thoughts.

BY S. S. CALL.

First: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. xii. 7. This text is used as proof, positive, that the soul goes to God at death; and is frequently quoted to show that there is an immortal something that goes direct to God. The same teachers, also, tell us that, a good man's soul goes to God, but a bad man's soul goes to the devil, in a place called hell. Now the thought arises, how can he, (the soul) go to both places? and why don't people see the absurdity of such teaching?

Next. How can God raise the wicked from the grave, if the soul is the him, the me, the I, &c., and is in hell? And if God promises a resurrection through Christ, by obedience to his requirements, how can the disobedient be raised through Christ, when they die in their sins? Where is the "first-fruits" of their harvest? for, "if the first-friuts are holy, the lump" must "also be holy." We have no account of a wicked man ever being raised; or that he ever will be. There is no promise that will reach a wicked man while he continues in his wickedness; but he is under the sentence of death; and if he allows the sentence to be executed while in his Adamic nature, he is dead: for "in Adam all die." He should have got into Christ: for, "in Christ all shall be made alive;" (not out of him).

Again: we read, "Ye are of your father the devil." Now, can the devil furnish immortal souls for all, or any of his children? or, does God furnish the souls for him? I think God must be on good terms with him to furnish him with souls: very accommodating, indeed. Again: God holds man accountable for sin, in committing adultery; yet He furnishes the immortal soul, according to modern theology; and in punishing the man for the act, he is compelled to punish the part He furnished himself; and in order to have the body stand it, He is compelled to make it indestructible. O foolish teachers, and simple hearers, when will you learn that whatsoever "is born of the flesh, is flesh;" (not flesh and spirit, as ye tell us.) Let God be true, if it makes every man a liar. Like begets like; so we must be born again, in order to be spiritual beings. For, "that is not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural: afterward that which is spiritual."

Once more. They tell us, we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ, there to give an account for the deeds done here in the body; and this, they tell us, is at the last day; the final judgment. Now, I contend they do not believe what they preach; for they contradict themselves, by saying, if they repent of their sins, "God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins;" and we read, our sins shall be blotted out of the book of remembrance; and be remembered no more against us for ever. Now, if our sins are forgiven and blotted out, how can they appear against us in judgment? Thus do they make the word of God of none effect through their traditions. May God help us to choose the good part that shall not be taken away from us. Yours in the faith of "Life only through Christ."

CHARLES H. SUTTON, Manayunk, Pa., writes: My father has been very sick, so that we did not expect his recovery; but the Lord, in his tender mercy has been pleased to bless the means used, and also answered the prayer of his children in restoring him to us again. His great age (79 years) made his sickness bear hard on him. We now say with heartfelt gratitude, praise the Lord for his goodness. While father was at the worst, he was asked, if he had any fears as to the future? His reply, in substance, was, that he expected to rise again at the coming of Jesus. I had no doubt as to his future life, but for the information of those who differ with us in doctrine, I was glad he gave such evidence of his faith in Christ the LIFE-GIVER.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We rejoice that our aged brother is still spared to his loving children and to the church. He will accept our thanks for his remembrance of us at "Christmas;" also accept our gratitude for your own kindness at the same time. These tokens encourage our heart, because they show that we are not forgotten by our old associates in the life views. Many are the precious hours we have passed with our aged brother in his village and beneath his roof, and do not forget the self-sacrificing spirit of his kind daughter, whose life has been devoted to make her father comfortable and happy. Blessed is the aged father to whom God hath given such children.

DR. JOSEPH TREVER, Lockport, N. Y., writes: I have read with interest the debate in England, and almost feel inclined to pity poor Mr. Nightingale. From present appearances, his self-esteem must succumb to the mighty power of truth. Why will men hold so tenaciously to error? Where are we, as a nation, drifting to? Surely the times are sadly out of joint. The Lord have mercy on us, and save us from error, and give us a firm and abiding hope of immortality. Yours, in that blessed hope.

The New Year.

DEAR FRIENDS:—We are entering on another year, and we are desirous that we should prepare to spend it well. Let us offer a few words of counsel on the subject, and present some questions for consideration.

1. The first thing necessary, if we would spend the year on which are entering as we ought, is to resolve to spend it well; to aim at spending it well. If men do not resolve to live right, or if, when they have resolved, they allow themselves to forget their resolutions, their life will run to waste, as a matter of course. It is impossible for men to live well, if they live at random. Man must exert himself, or fall a prey to evil. If therefore we would spend the year on which we are entering to advantage, we must arouse ourselves and daily remember the great end for which we were created, and for which we are kept alive, and exert ourselves with vigor and determination for the accomplishment of that end. Let us aim well, friends. Resolve that we will spend our time and employ our powers and our resources for God. Resolve that we will live and labor for the spread of truth, for the promotion of righteousness, for the glory of God in the improvement and welfare of mankind.

2. Let us resolve to abide by the great principles which we believe to be the truth. If we should find out any of our principles to be false, reject them; but so long as we regard a principle as true, act according to it, and carry it fully out. We believe the principle of toleration,—the principle that nothing should be required of a person as a condition of fellowship but faith that worketh by love, to be true. Then carry it out. Do not let us act upon it at one time, and set it aside at another. Do not carry it out in one case, and then shrink from carrying it out in others. Let us act upon it in all cases; carry it out fully and impartially. If it will not bear to be carried out in every case, let us reject it, and have nothing more to do with it: but if it will bear to be carried out, let us carry it out without fear. Have no trimming, no compromising, no temporizing. Do all things faithfully and thoroughly. We press this advice the more urgently, because we know that some will be greatly tried on this point. In many places, a great deal of the old sectarian prejudice yet remains.

Our desire is, that we cleave to the principle of toleration, through all trials, or provocations. If we find our theories or views of religious truth will not allow us to carry out this principle, there must be something wrong in us or our theories. However well satisfied we may be of the correctness of our views, let us not dare to make them a test of the acceptance of other men with God. Let us beware of taking the seat of God to judge another's servant. Remember, God himself is the judge. Decide as we may as to what truth is—and expose as we may what we regard as error, let us take heed that we let no intolerant spirit find place in our heart.

Let us now propound various solemn questions for our meditation, as we enter on the new year; and may we find it exceedingly profitable to consider them often.

What are we living for? What is the great end we are aiming at? Are we trying in all we do to please God? Are we doing our best to promote the welfare of our fellow-men? Are we laboring to promote the spread of knowledge and piety? What have we done during the past year for this end? What have we done towards promoting the improvement and welfare of our fellow-men during the past year? What have we done for this, since we first became professors of christianity? What would we like to do for this end? Do we feel any interest in the instruction and for the eternal life of our fellow-men? Do we ever feel troubled;—does it ever make us feel uncomfortable, when we think of the multitudes of our fellow-creatures that are living in ignorance and wretchedness? Do we ever feel any anxious, restless, longings, to have them instructed and regenerated; to have them made wise, and good, and happy? Do we ever read the history of Christ? Have we studied his character? Are we aware that Christ is our example, that he is the pattern of what his followers should be? Are we like Christ? Are we living for the same end? Have we the same dispositions? Are we as zealous for God's glory? Is it our whole endeavor to do God's will, and to finish the work which he has given us to do? Are we as true and as hearty a friend to mankind as Jesus was? Is it the business of our life to do good to men? Do we feel pleasure in doing good? Do we feel sorry that we cannot do more good? Do we use our money in doing good? Do we exert our minds and employ our tongues in endeavors to do good? Are we wasting no money? Are we employing none in doing lower kinds of good, or less measures of good, than they might enable us to do? Are we endeavoring to do the highest, the most important good within our reach, and the greatest amount of good in our power? Are we making as much of our advantages as Christ would make if he were in our situation? Are we as zealous, as devoted, as diligent, as persevering in the service of God and of mankind as Paul was? How would we feel if we were now to meet Jesus Christ? Would we feel as if we had done our duty in the world? Would we feel as if we had done as much as we ought, to forward his interests, to promote the ends for which he lived and died? Or would we feel ashamed, as if we had spared ourselves, and allowed his cause, the cause of truth and human happiness, to languish for want of our support?

Are we afraid of reproach or persecution? Are we afraid of losing our situation, or of losing our friends? Are we allowing our fears to prevent us from receiving or confessing the truth? Are we allowing our fears to prevent us from renouncing, or rebuking, or opposing error? Are we afraid of being expelled from religious societies? And do we allow our fears of expulsion to cause us to use violence with ourselves, and to keep back our judgment and our conscience from acting freely?

Let us answer these questions to ourselves before God. Let us deal truly with ourselves and on no account allow ourselves to neglect the great business, or to miss the great end for which God has brought us into being.

"Voice of Elijah."

We noticed, a short time since, that the second installment of this work has made its appearance. It is published at indefinite intervals, in installments of 32 octavo pages each. No issue is perfect, in itself; but the whole, when completed, is designed to be united in a volume. It is difficult, therefore, to judge of the merits of the work as it proceeds, not knowing what use, exactly, the author intends to make of some of his positions already presented.

There is hardly any one with whom we are acquainted that we should differ from with greater reluctance than the Author of the Voice of Elijah. It is well known that we have ever highly esteemed him; and his able defence of the doctrine of life only in Christ has endeared him much to us; and the hope of leaving such an able defender, as he has been, to carry on the work with others when infirmity or death might, and probably will, lay ourself aside, has been a matter of joy and comfort to us as we saw our sun of life declining.

It cannot be supposed, therefore, that we would take a stand in opposition to views he might promulgate, unless we felt impelled by a conviction that our Lord and His truth demanded it of us. Saith Jesus, "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me." The author of the Voice of Elijah has labored untiringly, and, we might say, excessively, in seeking out the things of the Bible, and fearlessly promulgating what he believed to be the truth. Few men have studied so hard, and persevered in the work so constantly, as he has. It would not be strange if it should be found that he has embraced some things for truth which may have to be abandoned. Who of us have not done so? He that has not, has made no advance in knowledge, and is not likely to make any.

There is one topic introduced into the Voice of Elijah that seems to us to call for notice, and on which we design to make remarks. It is mainly under the head of "THE MYSTERY OF SIN," commencing on page 39. We hope and pray that what we write and publish on this topic may be under the guidance of the truth and Spirit of God; that we may not "seek our own, but the things which are Jesus Christ's;" and that love to God, his truth, his Son, and to the author of the remarks we are about to examine, may influence us in all we may present to our readers on the subject before us.

We had, heretofore, some knowledge of the author's views on the question, but had never seen them drawn out so distinctly as in the Voice of Elijah. As they are now given to the public, we feel imperatively called on either to receive or reject them. So far as we understood the views on the subject, we have felt, some years since, that we could not possibly harmonize them with the character of God or his revelation to man. Still, till they had taken their present form, in a work designed to be circulated widely, we had not felt it our duty specially to oppose them, hoping that more mature thought would modify or lead to an abandonment of them. The following expressions from the Voice of Elijah will open the subject:

"Before Adam knew 'good and evil' his condemnation was ordained"...."the first Adam was condemned to give way to the last."—p. 42.

Had our author have said, Before Adam knew good and evil it was the design of God to bring a spiritual element into man's nature, or superadd such an element, to control the animal till it should have accomplished its designed work, then to be changed to that which was wholly spiritual, we would not have dissented. But for God to condemn his own work before trial, before it developed good or evil, it seems to us, is unlike the God of infinite wisdom, and to represent Him as practicing duplicity with the man he had made, by putting him on trial at all, seeing he was already condemned without trial. If our author had simply said that, God did not design the animal man to be a permanent existence, but to be superseded by a spiritual one, if he obeyed the law of his animal being when tried, we should accept the position as true. But the idea that God "ordained Adam's condemnation before he knew 'good and evil,'" we cannot accept: we are not prepared to believe that the Creator practiced double dealing with the intelligent work of his hands. Our author says:

"God in his unchangeable purpose gave man dominion over the earth. But his purpose was not in the first Adam, but in the last. Therefore God in his unchangeable legislation condemned the first Adam and his posterity as unworthy of the dominion."—p. 41.

But God did not condemn him till he had first tried Adam; and the trial was one in which man might have obeyed, or he was not blameworthy. No soul can be justly condemned for not doing that which is to him an impossibility. Suppose God had commanded Adam to fly to the moon or he should surely die! Would not all intelligent beings have regarded the command as unjust, while no capacity was given for such work?

But how does our author know that Adam never had dominion over the inferior animals of the earth? "Male and female created he them: and God blessed them, and God said unto them (Adam and Eve), be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have DOMINION over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."—Gen. i. 27, 28. It seems evident the first Adam had the dominion here clearly given him. This seems, also, probable from the account of the creation of the animals in Gen. ii. 19. "Out of the ground the LORD God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, and brought them to Adam, to see what he would call them: and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof."

This transaction indicates that Adam had the dominion over "every living creature:" all came before him. He, as their lord, gave them names which God accepted. It will certainly be difficult to prove that Adam had not, at that time, dominion; even that dominion which God gave him Gen. i. 28. Adam, afterwards, lost it, by refusing subjection to his Maker; and now it remains to be restored by the second Adam, "in the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets," &c. Acts iii. 21. But our author says:

"As the first Adam and his offspring are only animal, therefore they fail of the dominion."—p. 41.

Not "therefore;" but because the dominion was forfeited by transgression; by refusing to exercise that dominion in subjection to their Maker. Not till Adam developed himself out of harmony with God, did he fail of dominion. It was not, then, because he was "only animal;" for he was just what his Creator made him before He gave the dominion to him.

Our author, after quoting the language of God to Adam, in which man was prohibited the eating of a certain tree, says:

"This commandment was certain condemnation to Adam; for the animal nature knows of no higher commandment than its own innate desire."—p. 43.

That is, God made Adam and so constituted him that He knew he could not possibly obey a command he was determined to give him. "Condemn" man, for what? Why, because he was so formed by his Maker that he could not possibly do that required of him. That this is our author's position is clear from what follows. He says:

"Adam could not appreciate a law that arrayed itself against the passions of his nature; and to obey a law simply because God was its author was beyond his power."—p. 43.

So Adam had not "power" to obey his Creator's law; and yet his Maker, who was the author of the "passions of his nature," put him under a law for "certain condemnation." We dare not impute such an administration to the "Judge of all the earth," who always has done, and ever will "do right." "Are not my ways equal?" asks YAHVEH, the LORD God of Israel. Ezek. xviii. 29. "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." James i. 13. Yet, to all intents and purposes, He did tempt Adam by placing him in circumstances where Adam had no "power" to obey, and thus made "certain the condemnation of Adam." If "the partaker is as bad as the thief," and if "an accessory to a crime is guilty with the principal," what shall we conclude of an administration that first makes a man unable to refrain from a crime, then places him where he must commit it, on purpose to have him do it, and yet pretends to condemn him for doing it, when, in fact, his "condemnation was ordained before" the man was driven into the temptation? Who can reconcile such an administration to any true idea of justice or truth? We cannot.

But the most singular part of our author's position is yet to be looked at. He says:

"If Adam could not appreciate the law, he could the penalty; for it appealed to one of his passions."—p. 43.

So the law was "spiritual," but the penalty was "animal." But our author goes on:

"God has implanted in every animal the love of life; therefore when he said to Adam, 'Thou shalt surely die,' he touched the passion of fear in his nature. And he well knew what God meant in this threat: for, if he had not known what death is, he could not have understood the commandment. He had seen other animals die before he was put in the garden, and he knew God would only have to expel him from the garden and the tree of life to bring the penalty upon him."—p. 44.

Here is an assumption which cannot be admitted without proof. That Adam "had seen other animals die before he was put in the garden" ought to be proved, but cannot be; and, therefore, has no weight in the argument. That Adam "knew what God meant in this threat" is undoubtedly true: he could not but understand it was to "return to dust," out of which he was formed—to lose the life and consciousness he now possessed by the gift of his Maker. Whether Adam was formed in the garden or outside, cannot be proved. The work of creating everything, except man, seems to have been accomplished in the five days previous to man's creation; and we have no account that God created anything on the sixth day except man. In six days God "created the heavens and the earth.... and every plant of the field," &c., and He said to man, "Behold I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of the earth, and every tree, in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat: and to every beast of the earth.... I have given every green herb for meat."—Gen. i. 29, 30; and ii. 4, 5.

Now, as the other animals were created at least one day before man, and they were to live by the herbs and trees, yielding fruit, it is evidence that this part of God's work was finished before Adam was made; and, hence, that the garden in Eden was not an after work, but was completed before Adam came into life, and no information is given us that the man had any other residence except that given him in the garden. Besides, the mission of the first pair is thus expressed by God, "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it," &c.—Gen. i. 28. Then it is said, chap. ii. 15, "God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it, and to keep it;" indicating that as his first residence, and as furnishing a pattern after which, when he had "multiplied," he was to "subdue" the whole earth, by means of his offspring, bringing it into the perfection of the garden, which was God's work and His copy for the use of Adam and his posterity. Passing all these matters, our author says:

"At first there was no inducement to lead Adam to transgress. The fear of expulsion from the tree of life and consequent death was stronger than the desire for the forbidden fruit. While this fear controlled him, his real disposition in relation to the commandment could not be developed. But the introduction of Eve created the sufficient inducement."—p. 54.

Thus it seems Adam would have remained firm in obedience if there was not some other contrivance by his Maker to get him to develop sin, on which He determined, beforehand; for our author has said, as we have seen, "Before Adam knew 'good and evil' his condemnation was ordained." Hence, as Adam, personally, could not "at first" be "induced to transgress," Eve is to be created to make "the sufficient inducement." Our author says:

"The woman being created in the garden, did not understand the penalty."—p. 44."

So ignorance was essential to get sin developed, it seems. And as Adam knew too much, a less knowing one must be produced to carry out the design of getting the pre-ordained condemnation into active operation. Unfortunately, however, for the idea of Eve being created to get Adam to transgress, the Mosaic account cannot be made to agree with it. That affirms, "God said, It is not good for man to be alone; I will make him a help-meet for him." Gen. ii. 18. Now, either sin was a good thing, or Eve could not be a help-meet; for, without her Adam could not be induced to sin, our author asures us. Another item of difficulty in our author's position is, he assumes Adam was created outside the garden and Eve in it; and that Adam had seen death and Eve had not. The record is clear that Adam and Eve were created in the self-same day; for, it is said, "On the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." Gen. ii. 2. Eve being "created in the garden," it follows that Adam was, also, or had only a few hours outside, as both came into life before the "seventh day;" for on that day God had "ended his work."

But our author's difficulty does not stop here; for he not only states Eve's knowledge to be less than Adam's, but clearly insinuates she was more ignorant than a "beast of the field;" thus, in fact, not only placing her below Adam, but below the beast, in intelligence. A sad "help-meet," that, for the infinitely wise God to give Adam. Our author tells us that the woman, owing to her ignorance "was easily led astray."—p. 44. So God succeeded, by contriving an ignorant woman—calling her a "help-meet"—to get sin developed; or, rather, we should say, to make manifest the "condemnation" of Adam, which "was ordained before Adam knew 'good and evil.'" Thus God is represented as using all manner of "plans" to get his own work condemned, as if justly, when the whole affair, from beginning to end, was his own "plan" with various contrivances to cover up his designs.

That the animal man was designed to be "superseded" by a spiritual element, we freely grant. But that He designed to do this only by death, we cannot credit. On that supposition, the whole trial looks like a cruel mockery. Had man resisted the temptation as he might have done—and as our author admits he would have done, if a more ignorant victim had not been introduced—he would have advanced into a higher life, either by the influence of the tree of life or a divine impartation of a spiritual element, which would have produced immortality or deathlessness, such as is to be experienced by translation "at the last trump."

Mortal and Immortal Together.

Some object to the idea of a future age of probation, of the, "left of the nations," because they cannot reconcile the idea of mortals and immortals dwelling together, and of the latter preaching to the former. Do these objectors not believe that angels visited Abraham, Lot, and others, and conversed with them? yea, even eat with them? And more strange still, do they not believe that the only begotten Son of God, "by whom he made the worlds," came to this earth, and dwelt among mortal beings many years? and even laid down his life among and for mortal beings? Yes, and after his resurrection still remained among mortal beings forty days, teaching and instructing them in "the things pertaining to the kingdom of God?" Acts i. 3. All this the objector believes, we presume. Is the disciple above his Lord? If our LIFE-GIVER has done these things, is it either impossible, improbable, or unlikely that his immortal saints may be among, teach and rule over mortal beings? Shall we say "any thing" is "too hard for God?" If God has said it shall be so, is not that sufficient to satisfy faith? And what, we pray, are the immortal saints to be kings over and priests to, during the reign of Christ on earth? Who, if not those who are "left of the nations," after the "LORD my God shall come and all the saints with" him?

The idea that mortal and immortal beings cannot dwell together, is founded in prejudice; is unscriptural, and subversive of the christain faith. It limits the power of God, and makes our weak judgment the rule to determine what God can, or will do. If He please to have it so, it can be done. The only thing faith asks, is, the proof that God has said it. That point settled, faith asks no more; it "staggers not," but is "strong, giving glory to God." "That point" was "settled" in our mind twenty-three years ago; and nothing that we have since seen or read has changed it; but we do not disfellowship those who see not as we do.

MRS. J. G. HEATH, Brockport, N. Y., writes:—My husband wishes me to write and inclose $2 for the HERALD. We prize the paper much. God is with it. The Spirit bears witness to its precious truths, and our prayers are for it and for all connected with it, that God may continue to give heavenly wisdom and much of his Holy Spirit to those who write for the paper. Your sister, looking for life when Jesus comes.

Letters and Extracts.

From N. M. Catlin, Esq.

It gives us much pleasure, after an interval of several years, to hear from one who was one fellow-laborer in times past, and for whom we have ever felt a sincere affection, though differing with him in some things. We really hope he will favor us with communications, now that he has an "open door." Let us hear from you often, Br. Catlin.

KINGSBURY, N. Y., Dec. 22, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—I received HERALD OF LIFE for 12th Dec. bearing your familiar frank. I am thankful; and the reading has induced me to act in a matter I have long been contemplating—that is, to order the paper. Please to consider the enclosed as part of the "New Year's present to the HERALD OF LIFE" spoken of.

I feel it due to you personally to say, that though all difficulties hindering are not yet removed from my mind, still, I am strongly inclined to adopt the views of Life as they are held and advocated in the HERALD. You will see it is a long way toward your views, when I say, that to my mind there are fewer texts of scripture to be harmonized with the theory, that none only the righteous, will have part in a resurrection from the dead—than there are with our view of the non-immortality of the wicked.

The other subjects discussed enunciated through the HERALD, such as the approaching kingdom, Probation after the Advent, Ages to come, &c., I am very fully confirmed in. Wishing you a happy New Year, and an "open door," I am, as ever, truly your brother.

From John R. Greene.

MOUNT KISKO, N. Y., Dec. 10, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—I am a carpenter by trade, about 32 years of age, and have a family of six children. Some ten years ago, I was converted in the 43d street Methodist Church, New York city, under the ministry of J. B. Wakely, united with that society, and have continued a member ever since. During that time I have endeavored to live and obey the doctrines of that church; and I supposed them to be the doctrines of the Bible. But some time during the year 1865, I went with my wife and family to hear Eld. Matthias. He preached in a hall in this village. It was a new thing to me; he made this announcement, that, man has not an immortal soul. I thought it was blasphemy; and said, I would not hear any more such preaching as that; and so it passed off. He did not preach here again until some three months ago. I saw his notice to preach on Sunday evening. Some friends of mine were going to hear him; they asked me if I would go? I said, No: I did not think I could get any good there, but was afraid that I would imbibe some false notion. But after they went out, I thought to myself, I will go. This passage of scripture coming to my mind in approval of my going: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." I went alone, by myself, and prayed God to be with me; and if there was truth spoken to let me receive it and profit by it; and if not, that I might not receive it. Well, I went, and he preached from the passage of scripture where it tells of Christ's going through cities and villages teaching and preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom, and of great joy; and as he went on to explain what the doctrine of the kingdom was, it appeared to me that every word went right home to my heart, and with such force that I was sorry when he stopt, and could have sat and heard him all night. It appeared to me that I must have a new understanding; and yet, could it be possible that this doctrine, so opposite to what I had been taught for ten years, and in fact all my life before, could it be possible, I say, that that is true, and mine false? But reason said, Yes, it is according to scripture; for what struck me the most forcibly was, his giving so much scripture to prove his position; and as I thought of it, more and more, and got the Bible and looked and searched that, to see if it really agreed with his preaching, or if he had not wrested the scriptures to make it suit his views, the more I thought and the more I searched the more I found to convince me he was right and I was wrong; and, since that time, I have heard him preach on the parable of the Rich man and Lazarus, and on the Judgment; and the more I hear, the more I am convinced that the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," and life only through Christ, and by a resurrection from the dead, at the last day, is the doctrine of the Bible; and with all my thinking and hearing, I have prayed most earnestly that God would guide me into the truth, and only the truth. I felt that I had no will of my own in the matter; but could say, Thy will be done: and in truth to myself and to my God, I must say, I really am convinced, and believe that the doctrine, as you advocate it in your HERALD OF LIFE, is the doctrine of the Bible. Br. George Gorham lives in the place and has helped in my search after the truth by lending me tracts and papers and talking with me on the subject. I read the "Gospel Hope," and it appears to me that any one that reads that, with a mind unbiased, cannot but see the truth it contains; and then another, "The Doom of the Ungodly." Br. Gorham kindly sent me a subscription to the HERALD OF LIFE, and I think it far ahead of any religious paper I have ever read or seen; there is so much plain truth in it; so much scripture and I often wish that it might take the place of these trashy novels that are flooding the country, and destroying all taste for reading he word of God. I am poor and cannot do much for the cause; but as soon as I can spare a dollar I want you to send me your book, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST;" and I shall also try and support the HERALD. The Bible appears to be altogether a new book to me, and I love to search and read it. It appears that almost every chapter teaches something of the gospel of the coming kingdom.

With my new convictions has come more real enjoyment of mind that I ever before experienced, and that in the face of the strongest opposition from not only my friends and relatives, but brethren in the church. They express a great deal of wonder and sympathy for me, to think I have been so foolish and weak-minded as to believe such "nonsense," as they call it, and foolishness; and our minister says, he is perfectly astonished; and that in one year from this time I will lose my relish for every thing that is good, as he never knew it to fail; and he had known a number of such cases. But I feel different, and believe, if I do my duty, God will continue to bless me, and make me happy here and in the world to come. Pray for me, that I may be faithful, and be accounted worthy to obtain a resurrection from the dead.

Yours in hope of eternal life.

MODE, ILL., Dec. 14, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—Having a sore foot which disables me from travelling, I have had time to reflect on the past and contrast it with the future; and notwithstanding we have not done as much as we could wish, yet we feel to rejoice and praise our heavenly Father that he has "cast our lot" in this vast field of labor, which is white unto the harvest; but the laborers are few. The cry is constantly coming from every quarter for help; and it is truly painful to think that we must be subjected to so much inconvenience. But so it is, and we must submit, hoping for the time when others will rush to our aid. Br. Walter is in a very important field of labor, and is doing all he can to build up and comfort the household of faith in his locality; and we trust the brethren will look after him, that he will not suffer for want of the common blessings of life. Br. Campbell is wanted here. It is the general desire for him to return. Will he do so the coming spring, with his family? May the Lord direct; and we want others to come. Can't Brn. Curry, Wendell, and others visit us? We appeal to all for help.

Now we are about to make another appeal for help. We have to travel full two thirds of the time without a single book or tract; when the call for them is great. We will say in conclusion of the whole matter, that we do hope the brethren will take the Western Mission into consideration, with deeper interest than ever, and send us a good supply of books and tracts, so that we can supply all that want; and by so doing the glorious truth of No Life out of Christ will soon triumph out here. Let all help by sending to Br. Storrs, and we will send the money back to aid the Tract Fund, whenever we get enough for a money order. Pray for the old one-armed preacher.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The Eastern friends are doing all they can in aid of the West. It must be remembered, we have very few men among us who have much money; and that few are doing all they can to keep the machinery in working order. The HERALD OF LIFE, all will grant, is of more importance to the general cause than any local mission, however desirable such may be. But let all who can, help the Western Mission; especially the friends in the West.

From Samuel L. Walter.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL., Dec. 17, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—I am well, and arrived here two days since, after riding in an open buggy twenty-five miles through a storm of hail and rain that froze as fast as it fell; so that I was in a coat of ice, which saved me from getting wet; thus I was quite comfortable, only annoyed by the sharp hail that struck me in the face. I found the road very rough, and crossing the ravines very perilous to the horse, as the descent was so steep that we came down on the ice with a crash, and breaking the ice, plunging horse and wagon in ice and water up to the hubs of the wheels. Once I did not know whether we could get out without help; then how dreary when winding through the timber three miles, down steep hills; then along the creek, winding in the bottom; then up hills (that I would not ride down) and then on top of the mountain among the roads that lead to the various coal mines, and rain coming down. But, thank the Lord, I had great peace; my faith in God never failed. All will work for good to them that love God. I met Br. Lewis in the city, and as the storm increased, I stopped and found a good home with Edward Shellingburgh, and visited Dr. Penniwel. Had quite a profitable visit in talking about things pertaining to the kingdom in the coming age and life from the dead to those only who believe in the LIFE-GIVER. They want to hear, and receive the truth in the love thereof. They wonder why the advent brethren do not see that, to get life from the dead they must be in Christ by being "baptized by one Spirit into one body;" and without this induction into Christ, there is no life; hence the wicked cannot live again.

We shall leave town to-night and preach about three miles from here. We had our first snow storm on Saturday night and Sunday. Br. Lewis and myself thank those stewards of the Lord for their kind remembrance of us. May the Lord bless them; and I pray that the LIFE-GIVER may raise them up in the last day; and may the Lord bless you, and all the elect of God, unto eternal life. Yours in hope of life through the LIFE-GIVER.

From Geo. L. Hart.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN. Dec. 17, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—I would say as encouragement to you, that the cause is progressing in New Britain, in spite of opposition from some preachers who answer objections by proclaiming that the majority of the "non-resurrectionists," as they term us, are backsliders. The glorious unfoldings of the christian chart reveal anon, new light upon what once looked dark. My heart often beats with emotions of joy as I view, but a short way in the distance, the dawn of that morn whose sun shall never be clouded by the darkened clouds of natural philosophy. Long has the bark of the christian sailor buffeted the wave. Soon shall the potent arm be again extended, and then the calm; then how beautifully shall she glide, on the placid waters of the coming age, onward, till, on the boundless ocean of eternal wisdom and delight, the howling storms, the roaring breakers are forgotten amid the full fruition of the gospel hope. How unworthy I am of the promised blessings found in holy writ. But still they are mine; yea mine by virtue of another, in whom I have believed. His by right of heirship and obedience. His character, found in me, makes me a participant of all his joy. But I must bear the cross to wear the crown, till it is given. My earnest desire is, to know and do my Master's will, The gospel of life, to Israel's dead, is an inspiring power, if we receive it from heaven, free from all man's inventions. Yours, hoping that you may be spared to the church militant till she becomes the church triumphant.

DR. JOHN K. TINLEY, Niles, Mich., writes:—I hope you will not suppose because you don't hear from me as often as you used to, that I am losing my interest in the Life question. The contrary in part is this case; there is scarcely a day passes without my giving more or less attention to the glorious theme of "Life only in Christ." I am not idle either, in endeavors to propagate the views, and think it will not be long before I shall be able to do something for the HERALD by getting subscribers to it.

ELD. R. V. LYON, Suspension Bridge, N. Y., writes:—I see that Br. Lewis, of Ills., is frequently calling for works to circulate. I propose to send $4 worth, good measure: works that he can sell; (I sold $75 worth the ten weeks I was west) hence, help him for the HERALD OF LIFE. If this proposition suits you, let me know, and I will send my best works to him. I was in the West ten weeks, constantly preaching: congregations large in most places; and in all, good attention and converts made to the truth. I immersed 23.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—All we can say about the works, to send to Br. Lewis, is, if Br. Lyon wishes to make a donation of works to our Western Mission, we have no doubt they will be acceptable; and they can be sent direct to Eld. J. Lewis, Mode, Shelby Co., Ill.

THOMAS WISWELL, Hampden Corner, Me., writes:—I send you $1 for the HERALD. I am poor—too poor to do without the HERALD OF LIFE. Yours in hope of eternal life.

A. G. HUDSON, Lake City, Minn., writes:—The cause is on the gain here, notwithstanding the opposition is strong. Thank the Lord, we are able to maintain our position, and the opposition know and feel it. The truth is mighty, and some will see it.

NATHAN TEFFT, Otto, Ill., writes:—Some are late in getting their dinner; some in getting to meeting; and some are late in paying the printer, which is the worst of all. Inclosed find $5 for the HERALD OF LIFE. Continue it to me.

ELD. W. H. BARNES, Hamburg, Iowa, sends $3, making $5 he has paid for his paper, this volume, and says:—I would try to write a few lines for the HERALD, but I am afflicted with sore eyes so that I can scarcely see one letter from another. All I can say at present is, to bid you "God speed" in the glorious work in which you are engaged, and also suggest the thought, that, in the HERALD OF LIFE we have the fulfilment of Rev. xiv. 6. This has rather been my view on that point for several years, as I regard the Bible Examiner and the HERALD as the same. It seems to me that the signs that were to follow the preaching of that angel are the same which are likely to follow the proclamation by these two periodicals, viz., the fall of Babylon, &c. The doctrine the angel preached was the same these messengers have been and are proclaiming, viz., "Fear God, and give glory to him that made heaven and earth," &c.; and not fear man and glorify his work, viz., an "immortal soul" and the doctrines that legitimately follow that. Yours, in hope of life in Christ.

A. F. CRESSY, Seymour, Conn., writes:—Since I last wrote, it has been my lot to stand by the bed-side of my dear sister and to receive her last farewell, and witness the closing of her eyes in death. This sister, MRS. MARY E. BARD, was for a short time, during the absence of her husband to the war, a subscriber to the HERALD OF LIFE. She was a great sufferer; but was enabled to meet the last enemy with the full assurance that she should rise again. She spoke of death with composure, and gave directions in regard to her funeral. It was trying to me to part with her who had been my play-mate in childhood; but it was sweet to be with her in her last hours, and to witness the sweet smile on her countenance as she said, "Jesus will accept of me." She fell asleep Nov. 11, in the 27th year of her age.

Asleep in Jesus! Blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep.

MRS. R. A. OLMSTED, East Hartford, Conn., writes:—I send $1 for Helen Robertson's Mission. May the good Lord provide means for the spread of the truth among the poor freedmen, is my prayer. Yours, looking for redemption.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

THE large accumulation of money in the hands of bankers and others, especially in the form of bonds, owing to the late rebellion, has induced robberies on a large scale. Every week there are reports of this kind of robbery, ranging from $10,000 to two millions of dollars. The evils of extravagant ostentation induced by the increase of wealth, from the same cause, are far more serious than robbery alone. Gambling, speculations, drunkenness and licentiousness prevail to an unprecedented extent all over the country. This is so remarkably different from what was supposed must be the result of the extraordinary expense incurred in suppressing the rebellion. The wisest shook their heads in dismay at the appalling amounts called for year by year, as certain to bring, if not starvation, some form of general distress. And yet they were mistaken. Or is it all a delusion? Certainly fullness of bread is now a greater danger than the want of it. After such great waste, whence is the source of all this luxurious living?

Congress, like the HERALD, has been keeping the holiday week, only more of it. Consequently there is nothing of interest to report from that quarter. The condition of things in the South has been of late as badly mixed as in Mexico; but according to present appearances, from the late decision of the Supreme Court, the conflict of authorities, from Virginia to Texas, will very soon be "confusion worse confounded." This conflict is already becoming so sharply defined in various causes and places that with the re-assembling of Congress after New Year's the attention of the two Houses will probably be drawn to the question of some decisive course of action in reference to the present status of the rebel States.

A general order is in preparation by the President, to be directed to the commanders of the Southern military departments, informing them of the Supreme Court decision against the illegality of courts-martial for the trial of civilians, and directing them to confine themselves strictly to military duties, leaving judicial questions to the civil courts. An order to this effect has already been issued.

In this city 97,587 arrests were made during the year, and of 999 prisoners charged with the worst offences known to the law, but 394 were convicted.

"Louis Napoleon" is the title of a portly volume by David N. Lord, maintaining that the Emperor of the French is not the Antichrist, nor one of the line of monarchs represented by the seventh head of the wild beast of the Apocalypse. The author ruthlessly demolishes his opponents on that question, and shows himself an adept in the romance of history.

Ninety millions of gallons of whisky were made in the United States in 1860, according to the census, while the last report of the Revenue Commissioners returned but ten millions.

FOREIGN.

The Fenian revolution excitement remained at fever heat. There were sixteen British war vessels in and off Queenstown harbor, and the "loyal" and wealthy inhabitants of the rural districts were flocking into the garrisoned towns for safety. Stephens was thought to be in the South. It was said that the "rising" would take place simultaneously in the counties of Cork, Waterford, Limerick and Kilkenny—the Fenian centre thus forming a sort of headquarters quadrilateral.

Garibaldi and his disbanded legionaries are turning their attention to Crete. Beside the avant-garde which reached Syra on their way to the island, the nucleus of a larger detachment has landed at the Piræus, and Garibaldi has offered his sword to the Athens Committee.

No one can read the address of Pope Pius to the French troops previous to their departure from Rome without mingled sentiments of pity and surprise—we will not say of indignation. It was to be expected that the occasion would call forth some strong expressions of feeling, but we were certainly not prepared for the extreme bitterness which his Holiness manifested. Common prudence, if not common fairness, should have prevented him uttering the slanders and insults which he gave expression to in regard to the Italian King and people:

"On the eve of your departure I am here, my dear children, to bid you farewell. Your flag left France with the mission to uphold the rights of the Holy See. To-day it is going back. I wish that it may be received with the same feeling that it left. I am informed that all Catholic hearts are moved; they tremble in thinking of the difficulties in which they see the Vicar of our Lord Jesus Christ, the head of the Catholic Church. There must be no illusion—the revolution will come here. It is proclaimed; it has been said and it is repeated. An Italian in high position has said that Italy was constituted but not complete. Italy would be undone if there still remained here a corner of the land where order, justice and tranquillity reigned. They desire to display their flag from the Capitol. You know, as well as I, that the Tarpeian rock is not far distant. About six years ago I was speaking to a representative of France. I told him to inform the Emperor that St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo (which now belongs to the French Empire), terrified by the calamities which he foresaw while the barbarians were besieging the city, asked the Lord to be permitted to die before witnessing them. The representative said, in reply to me, 'The barbarians will not enter.' But he was no prophet. Another said to me that Rome could not be the capital of a kingdom, but that it could be the capital of the Catholic world. But I fear the revolution. What am I to do? What am I to say? I have no resources. Yet I am tranquil, for the mightiest power, God, gives me strength and constancy. [Here the Pope became affected, and all present participated in his emotion. Then, placing his hand on his heart, and raising his eyes toward heaven, he proceeded.] Go, with my blessing, and my fatherly farewell. If you see your Emperor you will tell him that I pray for him. It is said his health is not good; I pray for his health. It is said that his soul is not at peace; I pray for his soul. The French nation is christian. Its chief ought to be christian also. Prayers offered with confidence and perseverence are necessary, and that nation, so great and so powerful, will obtain what it desires. As for me, I live in God's mercy, and my blessing will accompany you on your voyage.

In time of peace Europe maintains an effective force of 3,815,847 soldiers. The maintenance of the different armies forming that number costs $700,000,000 per annum, which is 32 per cent. of the total expenditure of the different governments.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by DR. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny," being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover, to 70 cents—and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

ALIKE IN THE DUST.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.

A few days ago I was out to Greenwood. I have never been there before except when flowers were in bloom and everything clothed with beauty. It was such a change; the tombstones and monuments seemed to stand out more prominent through the leafeless trees; the usual number of visitors were not here; the large fountain on the hill was hushed—no sound save the rustle of the dry leaves under the horses' tread, and the swaying of the leafless branches—mournfully back and forth. I fancied it a requiem for those buried beneath. Never did I realize more fully that this was the "City of the Dead." I have heard a number remark that they thought Greenwood far surpassed Central Park; but I do not think the two places can be compared; the associations are so very different. A number of elegant monuments have been added since I was last here. The monument of Charlotte Conde, (the young lady who was killed by being thrown from a carriage when on her way to a party,) which a few years ago was considered the finest one in Greenwood, is sadly neglected. The family are in Europe, a number of the statues that used to surround the monument have either been stolen or taken away, and the fine work of the monument itself is growing black for want of care. They are Catholics, and the Catholics are trying to get it over here in one of their churches, St. Peter's, I believe. I had a very large circular lot pointed out to me, in Greenwood, as belonging to a wealthy man, who said he purchased this large lot so that no poor man should be buried near him.

[A DREAM.

I dreamed I died, and mixed with fellow clay.
Close by a common beggar's side I lay;
And as so mean a creature shocked my pride,
Thus, like a corpse of quality I cried:
"Away! away! thou scoundrel? touch me not;
More manners learn, and at a distance rot."
"Thou scoundrel," in a louder tone, cried he,
"I scorn thy very words, and more scorn thee;]
We are equal now, I'll not an inch resign;
This is my rotting place, and that is thine."
"Alas! too true; the sickening thought," I cried;
"The beggar and the prince are side by side."
Trembling with horrors dire of such a scene,
I woke, and glad to find it but a dream,
And musing still, in solemn mood, I prayed,
'Great God, whose hand the earth's foundations laid,
And spanned the seas, and curb'd the headlong wave,
Tell me, is there no hope beyond the grave?"
Then Faith sublime, with heaven-plumed pinions, smiled,
With golden anchors cast, "Ah! yes, my child,
See yonder, midst the gloom of night forlorn,
A brilliant star of resurrection morn."
Then Hope sprang up, who seemed a youth divine,
And 'gan to paint the golden view sublime!
First in the scene, the angelic trump of God
Breaks on the ear of those beneath the sod.
The earth casts out her dead; nor more the slain
In dusty beds—they break the monster's chain,
And forth anew to life immortal spring—
Victory o'er death, and loud hosannahs sing.
With rapturous awe sublime I viewed the scene,
Nor dreaded more of death's dark vale to dream,
But triumph'd in the hope of victory won
Through Him who bid me pray "Thy kingdom come."—Selected.

WILLIAM TYNDALE.

The name of William Tyndale should be known and held in remembrance by all who love the word of God. He lived many years ago in England, and was one of the first persons who translated the Bible into the English language. At the time he was born and for several hundred years before, the people were in darkness regarding the word of God. The Roman Catholic religion prevailed over the greater part of Europe, and the Bible was entirely unknown among the common people, it being only in the hands of the Romish priests, who were glad to keep the people in ignorance. As it was written in Latin, the unlearned could not read it, even if they got possession of it, which the priests were very sure to prevent.

You have, no doubt, all heard of Martin Luther, the great German Reformer, who was once a Romish priest himself, but from studying the Bible, became convinced of the many errors held and taught by his church, and finally renounced them and gave to the people of Germany, the Bible in their own language. Other men in Germany and Switzerland soon embraced the truth, casting off the shackles of error, and assisted in spreading the reformation throughout the country. This brought upon their heads the vengeance of the Pope of Rome and his emmissaries, who persecuted them and tried in every possible way to hinder them in their work. But the Lord, who is stronger than man, was with them and sustained them.

William Tyndale lived at the same time with Martin Luther. He was born one year after Luther, in 1484, at the village of North Nibley, in the valley of the Severn river, England. Of his childhood we do not know much, only that he early evinced a love for study, and when of a proper age he was sent to Oxford, and became a student in St. Mary Magdalene's Hall, where he made much proficiency and became an excellent classical scholar. About this time a man in Germany by the name of Erasmus, who was a great scholar and a very good man, published a Greek New Testament with a Latin translation. This was sent to England where it was gladly received by very many who could read it, especially by the students in the universities, who, up to this time, only had the Latin Vulgate, which was full of errors.

Perhaps I ought to say here, that previous to this, there had never been an English translation of the Bible printed. A man by the name of Wickliff had, many years before, translated the Bible into English; but as the art of printing was not then in use, it was written on manuscript, and on account of the labor of writing it, together with its size and expense, it had never been largely circulated. It is said that a copy of Wickliff's New Testament cost over one hundred dollars of our money; so you can judge that only the rich could own one. The Romanists did all they could to suppress Wickliff's book, and would have been glad to have killed him, but they did not. After he had been dead many years, however, they dug up his bones and burned them, and scattered the ashes in an adjoining river. They showed the same wicked spirit at the time that Erasmus sent his testament to England, and tried hard to prevent its circulation. It was, however, received with joy, as I before said, by many who were eager to read the word of Life for themselves; and the result was, that they learned that it is through faith in Jesus our Saviour that we are saved, and not by works, penances, fastings and prayers, as the priests had taught them. These priests were very jealous of all whom they knew owned or read the Bible. Still the truth spread and the good seed, thus sown, afterward brought forth a plentiful harvest.

Among those who received into their heart the precious truths of the gospel, was William Tyndale. He rejoiced in the new light he had seen, and fed with delight upon the pure word of God. Not long after, we hear of his giving instruction privately, in the scriptures, to the students of his college. Being a man much respected and of an unspotted life, his influence was great, and his name and fame were soon sounded abroad. There was a great outcry against him, and he was obliged to leave Oxford, and for a time he lived at Cambridge. Here he found other believers; among whom were a young doctor by the name of Thomas Bilney, and John Frith, a Cambridge student, about eighteen years of age, remarkable for his proficiency in mathematical studies. These three soon became great friends, and were much in each other's society, so that it attracted attention, and they were denounced by the priests as being teachers of new and dangerous opinions. But they boldly proclaimed their views, which caused so great an uproar that Tyndale was obliged to leave Cambridge, and return to his native county, where he became a tutor in the family of Sir John Walsh, who was a firm friend to him. Here we find him in 1520, at the age of thirty-six. He often met at the table many distinguished leaders in the church, and had many conversations with them. It would be very natural for them to refer to the great stir in Germany caused by the efforts of Luther and Erasmus, and they were ever ready to denounce them, and especially the Testament recently published. Of course Tyndale could not be silent at such a time, neither did he fear to give his opinion. He always had a New Testament at hand, and out of this he argued, showing from the word of God itself, the errors of the Romish doctrine. He was so great a scholar that they could not despise him, while he opposed them so boldly and plainly that they both feared and hated him. He soon became a marked man, while his enemies laid a plot to ruin him.

"THY KINGDOM COME."—No. 5.

BY SAMUEL MASON.

In further confirmation of our views, that the kingdom of heaven is synonymous with the Saviour's inheritance, we continue our investigation. "Abraham said, behold to me thou hast given no seed, and lo, one born in my house is mine heir." (Referring to Ishmael, his son by Hagar, the Egyptian, the bondwoman). "And behold the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, This shall not be thine heir, but he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir." Gen. xv. 3–4. Here is the promise of Sarah's son, Isaac. "And he brought him forth and said, Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars if thou be able to number them. And he said unto him, so shall thy seed be." Gen. xv. 5. Again, in reference to his son Ishmael, the angel said unto Hagar, "That he should be a wild man; his hand shall be against every man, and every man's hand against him; and he shall dwell in the presence of all his brethren." Gen. xvi. 12.

Again, God appeared unto Abraham and said, "I am the Almighty God; walk before me and be thou perfect, and I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly. And Abraham fell on his face, and God talked with him, saying, As for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of MANY NATIONS." Gen. xvii. 4. Here is another covenant, and it includes many nations, and then God says to him, "that he would establish his covenant with Isaac, his son, for an everlasting covenant, and with his seed after him. And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee, and behold I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes also shall he beget, and I will make him a GREAT NATION; but my covenant will I establish with Isaac. And Sarah saw the son of the Egyptian mocking; whereupon she said unto Abraham, cast out this bondwoman, and her son, for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac. And the thing was very grievous unto Abraham, because of his son; and God said unto him, let it not be grievous in thy sight, because of the lad and because of thy bondwoman, in all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice, for in Isaac shall thy seed be called; and also of the son of the bondwoman will I make a nation, because he is thy seed. Then were she and her son cast out; and as they wandered in the wilderness of Beersheba, she lifted up her voice and wept. And the angel of God called to her out of heaven, and said unto her, Fear not, for God has heard the voice of the lad where he is. Arise, lift him up and hold him in thine hand, for I will make him a great nation." Gen. xvii. 1—20. xxi. 9—18.

We have in these passages the history of two distinct covenants, entered into between the Almighty God on the one hand, and Abraham on the other. The one covenant is that God would make of Ishmael, Abraham's son by the bondwoman, a great nation The other was, that in Isaac all nations of the earth should be blessed. The establishment of this covenant, in distinction to the other, was declared to be everlasting. It also includes a multitude as the stars of heaven and as the dust of the earth for numbers. This covenant includes, also, the possession of heaven and earth by Abraham himself, and also his seed.

After making a few remarks, we shall, in our next, introduce the apostle Paul's commentary on this subject. There are two classes of events growing out of these two covenants, and which are inseparably connected with them; namely, two Jerusalems; the old and new. Also, two worlds; the one that now is, and that which is to come. One of these covenants has its fulfilment in this world, and the other in that which is to come. There are, also, two lives; the life that now is, and and that which is to come. The one is temporal, and the other eternal. There are, also, two births; the one introductory to the present life, and the other to immortal life. And since Abraham's time we have also two heavens and two earths; the one that is now, and the new heavens and earth, which God is to create. And there are connected with these, two Adams; first and second. These two classes of events are either directly or indirectly connected with these two covenants, or with their establishment or fulfilment.

Now, it is recorded that Abraham did not inherit the land included in this promise, nor any of these things contained in either of these covenants, while he lived. For the promise through Ishmael, that God would make of him a great nation, was not accomplished, so Paul tells us, until four hundred and thirty years after it was made to Abraham. Gal. iii. 17. Neither did he possess the substance of the promise, which was to be established in Isaac. This is clear from the fact that Isaac himself was only to be an heir of that land which was promised to his father; and an heir cannot be a possessor and an heir at the same time; for the very moment he obtains the inheritance his heirship ceases; and it is not only said that Isaac should be an heir to that land of promise, but his seed after him were also to be heirs; and the apostle says, in regard to this subject, "And God gave him," that is, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, "none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him." Acts vii. 5. It is also said that, "Abraham died in the faith, not having received the promise," or its fulfilment. Heb. xi. 13.

Now as this possession was promised to Abraham himself, as well as to his seed; and as he died without receiving it, he must be raised from the dead and put in possession of that land (for, mark, it is land that is the substance of the covenant), or the promise of God must fail; this is the only alternative; and as he yet sleeps in his grave, and all the heirs with him to the same inheritance, consequently the land to be inherited by this innumerable company must now be desolate, at least so far as the rightful owners are concerned, and the promise must, therefore, have its fulfilment in the world to come; for, when the resurrection takes places, that state of the world is introduced. But there is a passage which settles the question in regard to what the inheritance consists of, which God promised to Abraham. It is this, "For the promise that he should be heir of the world, was not to Abraham or his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Rom. iv. 13. This heirship, therefore, looks for its inheritance in the new heaven and new earth. This is what was included in the address of the king of Salem to Abraham, declaring him to be possessor of heaven and earth. "In that world," says Jesus, "they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are equal unto the angels of God; neither can they die any more, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx. 36. And again, "That the dead are raised up, even Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. Now, says Jesus, "he is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Matt. xxii. 32. This proves the necessity that these patriarchs should be raised up from the dead, that this saying of Moses shall prove true. As God is only the God of the living, they must live again. And that they shall live again, says Christ, in reference to them, when speaking to the Jews, "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves shut out." Luke xiii. 20. In regard to the method of God selecting heirs for his kingdom, the apostle James says, "God chooses the poor of this world, rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him." James ii. 6. Yours, praying, Thy kingdom come.

Rochester, Pa.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—One point in Br. Mason's article, we think on reflection, he will give up. It is this: he supposes Melchizedek, king of Salem, called "Abraham the possessor of heaven and earth." If he will look again, he will see that the language is spoken of the "Most High God." Abraham replied, verse 22, to the king of Sodom, "I have lifted up my hand unto the LORD, the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth," &c. Look at this carefully, and we think no doubt will remain on the mind that it was not Abraham who was "possessor of heaven and earth," but "the most high God." Abraham clearly makes that statement, and we can see Melchizedek's in no other light.

THE COMING OF ELIJAH.

The subject of the return to earth of Elijah, the prophet, is receiving some attention just now. The recent letter of Br. White will not fail to increase that interest, as he is so careful in taking his ground, usually, and argues so clearly and with such kindly spirit, that whatever he has to say is read with satisfaction by every one. While I have agreed in all I have read of his, lately, on this subject I am satisfied he is in the wrong. His only ground of argument is, that the scriptures declare that Elijah was to be sent before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; and that John the Baptist said he was not Elijah. But he yields the ground that the scripture necessarily requires the personal appearance of Elijah in the following statement in his argument:—"Jesus added, But I say unto you that Elias has come already. In what sense had Elias come? It is said that John should go forth in the spirit and power of Elias. In these particulars he would represent Elias, and be like him and for this reason be called Elias. Jesus said of the bread, at the last supper, This is my body broken for you. And of the wine, This is my blood. How could he say this? Because these two, when used for the purpose of showing his death, were representatives of his body and blood. So Paul said when speaking of the rock in the wilderness, "That rock was Christ." Why? Because it represented Christ. So John could be called Elias, because he was so much like Elias; had his spirit and power. This view of the subject, makes no contradiction between Christ and John. But on the other hand, if it be said, all that is meant by Elijah in Malachi, was John the Baptist, we have as plain a contradiction between Jesus and John as is possible to conceive."

On this ground, surely, the declaration of Malachi is met in the person of John, without there is some necessity for a more special fulfilment. This he thinks he finds in the declaration of John himself to the Jews that he was not Elijah, because he being a greater prophet than any predecessor, could not have erred nor been at fault. But Br. W. forgets to take into consideration the circumstances of this denial. The Jews knew all about John, as one of their own countrymen born and reared in their midst, and in his addressing them they were not understood by John as asking if he were the veritable Elijah, bodily, of the scriptures, but Elijah's spirit transmigrated into another body—a common belief at that time among them. He thus properly denies being Elijah, but in no wise contradicting the testimony of our Saviour, who said he was Elijah, in precisely the spirit expressed by Br. White. But he assumes that God's people are to be brought together, all of them, so that God will have a people prepared for his coming, and he thinks that this will be Elijah's mission. In this, mark, lies what I deem dangerous ground. It alarms the timid, and excites the imaginative, and opens the door to fanaticism of a dangerous character. If we are not able to be prepared without some peculiar and still unknown demonstration on our part, how shall we be certain when we behold the prophet? There are already "six Richmonds" in the field—more or less—each of whom has followers believing with undoubting faith in their man being the genuine one, and there are others, I understand, ready to take the field to dispute the rights of all the rest. Who shall decide betwixt them? Or how will the genuine one be known by "God's people" in order that he may get prepared for Christ's advent? Br. W. says, "The wise are to understand." "Understand" what? The believers in definite time say, "the time." They have some ground, in that the declaration is made in connection with periodic events. But Br. W. says he will "turn the hearts of the children to the fathers, and the hearts of the fathers to the children." What can that mean at this juncture of the world's history? Under this assumed mission of Elijah, he says, "the watchmen will see eye to eye." In this he disagrees with Paul, who says, "Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face; now I know in part, but then I shall know even as I am known." But even in the sentence quoted by him, in connection therewith it is said (Isa. lii. 8.) "for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion;" which manifestly brings a time when preparation will be totally unnecessary, either by Elijah or any other prophet.

If Br. White had to explain all the scriptural statements as closely as he does this one, he would find, on summing up, a great deal of cross-argument and declaration. The Book of Revelation and the prophecies are fertile in expressions of a character that are being used in a similar manner. But in few instances, where so much mischief seems to lurk.

If such a great work is to be done as implied by Br. W. it surely ought to be discovered in the Gospels or Epistles. The Saviour in giving his account of the history of the world till he came to judgement is silent about Elijah, or any preparation other than to be ready in so far as avoiding the prevalent evils of the last days. The only preparation he demanded was to believe on the Lord in order to be saved. It would be difficult for any one familiar with the writings of the New Testament to tell what new preparation God's people are to undergo, in order to meet him at his coming, that all preceding christians have not had to pass through, and those who in the meantime are dying, how will they dispense with it?

Such a position as this is dangerous because it will excite the morbid fancies of a class who cannot be content to serve God in singleness of heart, if they can make themselves believe they are to do some great thing, or suffer some peculiar trial in order to deserve some prominent seat in the Kingdom, not to be enjoyed by those who follow the injunction of Christ and the apostles in getting properly prepared—as sumed up in the sermon on the Mount, and Paul's account of the christian's armor in which he was to triumph. Eph. vi. 10, 18.

EDUCATION.

BR. STORRS:—As there are numerous gifts in the church of Christ, made so by nature as well as by grace, you will pardon me if I should seem to be almost outside of the numerous gifts referred to. "The bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax he will not quench." It is my business to educate myself so that I can hear the most feeble of God's children bear testimony in reference to the goodness of God to them, in any manner, if it be in prayer, in exhortation, or in thanksgiving and praise, even if the natural and acquired gifts do not manifest themselves in as pleasing a manner as I should wish. These remarks more particularly refer to the conference and prayer meeting of the body of Christ. When the professed church shall have educated herself up to this A. B. C. of the christian alphabet, one important step will be gained, in regard to the onward march, to the progress and oneness of the church of Christ. As strange as it may appear, there are many of the advanced truth lovers who seem wholly to have forgotten that it is their duty to educate themselves to hear the smaller gifts in the ministry as well as the most powerful. Have we so far forgotten the many gifts of the church, and of their wants, as to suppose that when I myself am pleased that the multitude are edified and built up? To my mind, when we hear a brother or a sister say that they have no interest to attend meetings except they can hear some one from whom they can learn (meaning a most able man) then I come to the conclusion that their christian education is much at fault; and their responsibilities, as christians, have never been seen or felt. Can such ignorance and oppression ever pass off for education in the liberty of the gospel? K. D.

WALKING IN THE SPIRIT.

"If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit."—Gal. v. 25.

The Spirit of God lives in us, as the source of our sanctification; and we are to live in the Spirit, as if he were the atmosphere we breathed, the temple in which he is worshiped, or the habitation in which we dwell. To live in the Spirit, is to live under his influence, according to his word, recognizing his presence with us always. So, to walk in the Spirit, is to walk as influenced, directed, and assisted by him; looking to him for wisdom to guide us, grace to help us, and power to preserve us. To walk in the Spirit, is to live as a man delivered from the law, rescued from the present evil world, freed from the dominion of sin, and set apart for God's glory and praise. The Spirit is our teacher, leader, and comforter. We yield ourselves to him, and seek to please and honor him. We are careful not to grieve him, or resist him, or quench his holy influences. To walk in the Spirit, is to breathe the spirit of Christ, and exhibit the temper and disposition of Christ in the midst of opposition, persecution, irritation, and many self-mortifying duties. It is to walk as Jesus walked, taking him for our pattern, and seeking grace from the Comforter, to think, feel, and act as Jesus thought, felt and acted. Blessed Comforter! teach us to live in the Spirit in the present day, and to walk in the Spirit as we walk through the wilderness of this world. Oh, to walk as Jesus walked, to live as Jesus lived, constantly presenting ourselves to God, for his service and praise! May we render our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is our reasonable service: and not be conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of our minds. Oh, to be unearthly! Oh, to be deeply spiritual!—Rev. James Smith.

DOING AND BEING.—There is a difference between doing and being. Perfection is being, not doing: it is not to effect an act, but to achieve a character. If the aim of life were to do something, then, as in an earthly business, except in doing this one thing, the business would be at a standstill. The student is not doing the one thing of student life when he has ceased to think or read. The laborer leaves his work undone when the spade is not in his hand, and he sits beneath the hedge to rest. But in christian life every moment and every act is an opportunity of doing the one thing of becoming Christlike. Every day is full of a most impressive experience. Every temptation to evil temper which can assail us to-day will be an opportunity to decide the question whether we shall gain the calmness and the rest of Christ, or whether we shall be tossed by the restlessness and agitation of the world. Nay, the very vicissitudes of the seasons, day and night, heat and cold, affecting us variably, and producing exhilaration or depression, are so contrived as to conduce towards the being which we become, and decide whether we shall be masters of ourselves, or whether we shall be swept at the mercy of accident and circumstance, miserably susceptible of merely outward influences. Infinite as are the varieties of life, so manifold are the paths to saintly character; and he who has not found out how directly or indirectly to make every thing converge towards his sanctification has as yet missed the meaning of this life.—F. W. Robertson.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.

Be on your guard,

Against attempting to reform others, while you are unreformed yourselves. Be clean, before you urge others to be clean, cure yourselves, before you complain of the diseases or sicknesses of others. Be examples of the reformation which you wish to promote.

Be on your guard,

Against all intolerance, all bitterness, and all wrath. They will hinder the spread of truth. They will trouble and torture yourselves. They will strengthen the cause of your adversaries. They will grieve your God. Be mild; be gentle; be Christlike. Speak as plain as you please, and be as bold, as firm, as faithful as you please; but lay aside all wrath, all bitterness, all clamor. Do not temporize, but still respect men's rights, and, as far as you can, their feelings too.

Be on your guard,

Against a proselyting disposition. Be not anxious about numbers. Be anxious most of all to be thoroughly reasonable in your proceedings. Impatience is very near akin to intolerance, and intolerance, if it is not the devil himself, is one of his first-born and truest-bred children.

Be on your guard,

Against assailing people perpetually with your views; against forcing them intolerantly or impatiently upon people's attention. Have patience. Allow people time. Give a reason for your principles and proceedings, whenever you are asked; call public meetings, and circulate tracts; but do not impertinently urge your peculiar views, however true and important, on people's attention at all times. How would you like to be perpetually assailed yourself? Be right yourselves. Do not be afraid of being left alone. You are not yet fit for reformers, if you are not prepared to stand by truth when others desert and disown it. You are not thorough reformers, if you cannot stand by truth against a world. You will have numbers, when you are properly prepared for them. It would be a pity if numbers should join us, before we have joined ourselves closely to truth. The church is the mould into which new members, like melted metal, run; and if the mould be fautly, the metal will take a faulty form. Be good and do good, and trust God for the rest.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION.—It is a long time since we have had a copy of this work, bound, for sale; and for some time we have been out of it in paper covers. We have now a small edition printed so as to supply the demand for them, bound and in paper cover. For price, see Catalogue of "BOOKS AND TRACTS."

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.

The birth of an heir to a throne is usually accompanied by circumstances befitting so great an event. No place is deemed worthy of it but a royal palace; and there, at the approach of the expected hour, high nobles and the great officers of state assemble, while the whole country, big with hope, waits to welcome a successor to its line of kings. Cannons announce the event; seaward, landward, guns flash and roar from floating batteries and rocky battlements; bonfires blaze on hill-tops; steeples ring out the news in merry peals; the nation holds holiday, giving itself up to banqueting and enjoyment, while public prayers and thanksgiving rise to Him by whom kings reign and princes decree justice.

With such pomp and parade do the heirs of earthly thrones enter on the stage of life! So came not He who is King of kings and Lord of lords. On the eve of his birth, the world went on its usual round. None were moved for his coming; nor was there any preparation for the event—a chamber, or any thing else. No fruit of unhallowed love, no houseless beggar's child enters life more obscurely than the Son of God. The very tokens by which the shepherds were taught to recognize him were not the majesty, but the extreme meanness of his condition: "This shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger." In fact, the Lord of heaven was to be recognized by his humiliation, as its heirs are by their humility. Yet, as we have seen a black and lowering cloud have its edges touched with living gold by the sun behind it, so all the darkest scenes of our Lord's life appear more or less irradiated with the splendors of a strange glory. Take that night on Galilee, when a storm roared over land and lake, enough to wake all but the dead. The boat, with Jesus and his disciples, tears through the waves; now whirling on their foaming crests, now plunging into their yawning hollows; the winds rave in his ear; the cold spray falls in showers on his naked face; but he sleeps. I have read of a soldier boy who was found buried in sleep beneath his gun, amid the cries and carnage of battle; and the powers of nature in our Lord seem to be equally exhausted. His strength is spent with toil; and with wan face and wasted form he lies stretched out on some rude boards—the picture of one whose candle is burning away all too fast, and whom excess of zeal is hurrying into premature old age and an untimely grave. Was the sight such as to suggest the question, Where is now thy God? how soon it changed into a scene of magnificence and omnipotent power! He wakes—as a mother, whom louder sounds would not stir, to her infant's feeblest wail—he wakes to the cry of his alarmed disciples; and standing up, with the lightning flash illumining his calm, divine face, he looks out on the terrific war of elements. He speaks and all is hushed. Obedient to his will, the winds fold their wings, the waves sink to rest; and there is a great calm. "Glory to God in the highest!" How may his people catch up and continue the strain which falls from angel's lips? In disciples plucked from the very jaws of death, and pulling their boat shoreward with strong hands and happy hearts over a moonlit glassy sea, Jesus shows us how he will make good these sayings, "Fear not, for I am with thee; be not afraid, for I am thy God"—"I have given unto them eternal life and they shall never perish."

The divine glory of that scene is not peculiar to it. For as an eagle, so soon as she has stooped from her realm to the ground, mounts aloft again, soaring in the blue skies of her native heavens, our Lord never descends in the abasement of his meanest circumstances without some act which bespeaks divinity, and bears him up before our eyes into the regions of Godhead. The grave, where he weeps like woman, gives up the prisoner at his word. Athirst by Jacob's well, like any other wayfaring, wayworn traveller, he begs a draught of water from a woman there, but tells her all she ever did. Houseless and poor, his banquet hall is the open air; his table, the green grass; his feast, five barley loaves and a few small fishes from the neighboring lake; yet this scanty fare supplies the wants of five thousand guests.

His birth and life and death, his whole history, in fact, resemble one of those treasure-chests which double locks secure; for as that iron safe yields its hoards of gold, silver, pearls and precious stones to none but him who brings to each lock its own appropriate key, so the riches of divine truth, redeeming love and saving mercy, are open only to such as come to Jesus with a belief in his divinity on the one hand, and a belief in his humanity on the other; who behold in the child whose birth was sung by angels, the Son of Mary, and worship the only begotten, well-beloved, and eternal Son of God.

Now this mingling of divine and human characters distinguished Christ's birth as much as his death. The halo of glory that surrounded his dying, crowned his infant head. His sun rose, as it afterwards set, behind a heavy bank of clouds; but the divinity they screened, touched their edges alike with burning gold; so that he at whose death the rocks were rent, and the sun eclipsed, and graves deserted of their dead, no more entered than he left our world as a common son of Adam. Not that a world, which was to reject him, went out to meet its King with homage and royal honors. Omen of coming events, it received him in silence. But the heavens declared his glory, the skies sent out a sound; and the tokens of his first advent—unlike the thunders which shall rend the skies when he comes the second time—were all in beautiful harmony with its object. It was love and saving mercy; there were light, music, and angel forms. With this object all things indeed were in perfect keeping,—the serene night, the shining stars; the pearly dews glistening on the grass; snowy flocks safely pasturing; and the shepherds themselves, to whom the annunciation was made; men, who whether going before their charge, or carrying the lambs in their arms, or gently leading those that were with young, or standing bravely between their flocks and the roaring lion, were the choicest emblems and types of him, who, dying to save us, gave his life for the sheep. To them there suddenly appeared a multitude of the heavenly host, turning night into day, and shedding on the soft hills around, a bright, but gentle radiance. As guard of honor they had heralded the advent of the Son of God to our world. And now—ere they left him to tread the wine-press alone and returned to their service before the throne of God—these celestials bent their loving eyes on the stable, and, in anticipation of Jesus' triumphs, of men saved, death conquered, graves spoiled, and satan crushed, they sang, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men!"

KRUPTOS.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We are asked, "Who is KRUPTOS?" Our answer is found in Judges xiii. 18. "Why asketh thou thus after" his "name, seeing it is secret?" The reader knows all about it that the Editor does. We look at the matter, but know not who the writer is. If he is an inhabitant of the upper world, we are glad to give place to his interesting communications. Let us try to profit by them.

TIDINGS FROM HOOSAC MOUNTAIN.

BR. JENKS AND HIS LABORS.

DEAR HERALD:—On the 17th of November, 1864, THOMAS T. JENKS, then residing in the town of Hamden, Conn., having learned that I was to visit Winsted and New Haven on a preaching tour, wrote me at the former place and cordially invited me to call on him. This request it was my privilege to comply with on Saturday, the 24th of the following month—two years ago yesterday afternoon. I enjoyed a very interesting interview with Br. J. and his estimable companion. In a sketch of my tour, which was afterwards given in the paper, I spoke of this brief visit as follows: "I bade adieu to Winsted on the morning of Dec. 24th, and, on my way to New Haven, visited Br. Jenks at his home. Found him to be in reality 'an earnest inquirer after truth.' He moves with great caution in the matter of receiving new views. But he moves! On the non-immortality of the wicked I found him established. For several years past there has been in his preaching no endless misery or going to heaven at death. The doom of the impenitent he has been accustomed to speak of in the terms the scriptures employ, and when dwelling upon the future of the righteous he has made prominent the promises of the resurrection of the dead. His dissent from the received view he had never made public, though he had talked on the subject privately with various persons. He was, seemingly, waiting to get fully settled, one way or the other, on the question of no life for the wicked dead, before braving the perils of an open avowal of his convictions. Our pleasant interview of several hours, I felt well assured, accomplished something in this direction. The discourse which Br. and Sr. J. heard in New Haven the next afternoon did still more."

The foregoing references to our brother and his doctrinal position will enhance the interest which I presume our readers will feel in what follows. Br. Jenks rarely communicates with the Life Company through the paper (a sin of omission for which I would willingly reprove him, did I not fear that he would "surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself!" but he loves the truth, advances in the knowledge of it, and labors to spread light in the region where the providence of God has cast his lot. In the month of March last I received a letter from him, in which, after chiding me for not writing for the paper more frequently than I was doing about that time, he said:

"I shall long remember your kind visit to my house in Connecticut. I trust it was blessed for my spiritual good. I also remember the interesting time we enjoyed at New Haven, and afterwards at Providence. Those were bright spots in my pilgrimage, and may I see many more such. I now live upon the Hoosac Mountain, the place where I formerly preached. I have bought me a place here, and am laboring for the support of my family. I preached here this past winter in the Baptist church, one day, on the Hope of the Gospel as the Bible reveals it, viz., Eternal Life by a Resurrection from the dead. The discourse made a great stir among the people. Many acknowledged the weight of scripture testimony upon the points presented for consideration. The pastor of the church said he would not have let me into the desk if he had known my sentiments. [If pastors of churches were less cautious about admitting us into their desks, they would not be so lamentably ignorant, as many among them are, of "sentiments" which they ought joyfully to embrace and preach.—R. W.] The next Sabbath he preached in answer from Acts xxiv. 15. I was not present, but was told by a number who heard him that he made poor work of it. [He most assuredly made "poor work of it," if he failed to show his hearers that the passage in question can easily, and without departing from principles of exegesis that have the highest sanction, be harmonized with the irresistible evidence afforded by Acts xxvi. 6–8, that Paul's "hope" embraced no curse of any kind. His "hope" was that "God should raise the dead," but this resurrection was only that which was covered by "the promise"—not the threat—" made of God unto our fathers." —R. W.] One of the deacons told him that he did not get a single feather in his cap by bearing down so hard upon me. But he has come down somewhat, and has invited me to sit with him in the desk. A number of the church discard man's natural immortality, and one is a thorough believer in the non-resurrection of the wicked. The leaven of truth is at work, and oh that it might leaven the whole lump. Not a single brother believing in no future life out of Christ has been to see me since you were at my house. Can you not visit me this summer, and labor a few days upon this hill? 'The fields are white already to the harvest.' Come out here in the highways and hedges, and present us the truth upon the life question. You will have a good hearing, and find friends and good brethren." Etc.

Last week I received another letter from Br. Jenks. From its date it would appear that I ought to have got it earlier. I give it entire:

FLORIDA, MASS., Dec. 11, 1866.

DEAR BR. WENDELL:—I wrote you a letter last summer, but have not received any answer. [I take it that the March letter is the one referred to, as I received none at a later date.—R. W.] I concluded that you failed to receive it. I have now learned by Br. Curry the number of your residence, and venture to write you again; and shall anxiously look for a response.

I suppose you already know that I live in the town of Florida, upon the Hoosac Mountain, the place where I formerly officiated as pastor five years. I bought me a farm here upon which I labor for the support of my family. I also labor somewhat in the ministry. Have preached once in two weeks the past season—not, however, to the same church where I officiated six years ago, though some of them were my hearers. But I preached in another neighborhood, much to the discomfort of the former. When I first returned to this place I was invited to preach to the people of my former charge one Sabbath. But many of them imagined that they discovered heresy in my doctrine, and I, as a matter of course, have not had the privilege of preaching to them again. But what some called heresy others prized as the truth of God, and they secured me a place in which to hold it forth. I trust that the seed sown will take root and bear fruit to the glory of God. The friends of truth met at my house some three weeks since, with whom I had a very pleasant visit, besides their leaving me about $120, showing that my labors were appreciated. [If you have given them the truth of life from the dead for those in Christ alone, you have given them their money's worth ten thousand fold. Still, God will bless them for their kindness.—R. W.] There is, however, much oppposition by many, and I am called a fit subject for the lunatic asylum, &c. The present pastor of the Baptist church is bitter against destructionists, and yet prefers not to discuss the question. I remember you told me you would like to see me scratching gravel. Well, brother, I am into it, and I wish you were here a little while to spell me. My faith in the glorious doctrine of no future life out of Christ is being strengthened daily.

Inclosed I send you a letter I received from Elder H. Fitts, of Middleboro. He is Agent or Missionary for the Mass. Bap. State Convention, whose business is to look after the interests of Baptist churches in this State, and to secure pastors for such as are destitute, and raise funds to help poor churches. You will perceive that he has had a hint that I was running off the track. Also that I was getting upon the Devil's ground, and that Br. Burnham and others had seen his cloven feet, and were coming back into the good old way. And if I would do so he would be happy to assist me to a field of labor. I thought it would be well for you to know that our cause was about played out, so that you need not spend your time and breath in discussing what seems to be a forlorn hope! I have not yet answered his letter. I may do so when I get sufficient leisure, when he will understand that I believe he is looking through the wrong end of the telescope. What say you?

You may make such use of Br. Fitts's letter as you please. I want to see you here very much (plenty of "gravel" here). Br. Curry says I may expect him here this winter. Wife sends love. From your brother in Christ,

T. T. JENKS.

The letter of Elder Fitts to Br. Jenks is as follows:

MIDDLEBORO, Oct. 25, 1866.

DEAR BR:—I learned recently that you had returned to Florida. I did not learn whether you were able again to engage in the ministry. If your health is sufficient, why not settle again over some church where you might be useful? I hope you will not allow yourself to be drawn aside from the "old paths" by any of the isms of the day, and thus have your influence for good destroyed. The worst ism I know of is spiritualism, and kindred to it is the annihilation of the wicked. But, let God be praised, these isms, with others of modern date, have pretty much spent themselves, in so far as I am acquainted. Most persons who were drawn into them have abandoned them, or are disposed to be quiet. Like Br. Burnham, the Evangelist, they have seen their error. He once wrote in favor of the annihilation of the wicked; but he has since published a refutation of those arguments, and is fully convinced that the belief in the annihilation of the wicked is wrong. It evidently is one of the doctrines of devils and kindred to that of Universalism. The Devil is a secessionist—a rebel against God, and he would have all others join with him in his rebellion. He knows he cannot make anybody believe that they can conquer God and get above him; so he tries to make people believe that God does not care to be obeyed, or, at least, that God will take care that they shall not suffer much—that it shall be about as well with them at last whether they choose to obey him or not. This is Universalism. But many think that God chooses to be obeyed, and presents the strongest possible motives to obedience he can, both by way of punishment as well as by that of happiness and love. And here again Satan darts in and tries to weaken the power of these motives by the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked. Is it not enough that all will be saved who are loyal to God, who repent and obey the gospel? And is it not cruel to others, as well as wicked, to try to weaken any of the motives God has presented to influence men to do it?

Well, I did not think of writing so long a letter when I commenced writing to you. I thought I would drop a line to you in regard to your health and prosperity. The great work, it seems to me, is to try to persuade men to become reconciled to God. I trust that you feel like giving all your energies to this work. Let us persuade men to repent and believe in Christ. All side issues are of comparatively little consequence. Man is a rebel by nature. He must submit to God or be punished forever. I shall be pleased to hear from you, and to assist you in regard to a field of labor if you are able and disposed to build on the true foundation by preaching the good old Gospel of Jesus Christ. Yours truly,

H. FITTS.

Having given this ample hearing to our good brother Jenks and his clerical correspondent, I think the reader will coincide with me in the opinion that the former is not without a field of labor. The letter of Elder Fitts is a notable proof that the Baptist denomination stands greatly in need of enlightenment concerning the mission of the Son of God in our world. According to Mr. Fitts it would appear that the dogma of endless torment is a fundamental element in pure gospel teaching. Br. Jenks, on the contrary, has learned that the human mind never invented a fouler libel upon the character of the God of love than is involved in that terrible view of the divine government. "The good old gospel of Jesus Christ" our brother has found to be a message of Life from the dead for the dying, of Immortality for the perishing. May the Lord gird him for the work of telling this blessed story to all who will hear. If it proves to be "a hard saying" to Baptist missionaries, then so much greater the need of giving a trumpet tongue to the God-honoring and Christ-exalting proclamation. Pray, dear brethren, that Br. Jenks may have an effectual door open before him, and that he may have strength and wisdom to multiply by his faithful labors the number of those who will rally to the standard of Life only in Jesus Christ. I am glad that Br. Curry has promised him an early visit. I shall not (owing to other claims upon my time) be able myself to go to Hoosac Mountain this winter, but, if my life is spared, I do hope to be able to do so in the spring. This, dear brother Jenks, is not a promise, but a statement of what I very much desire to accomplish if the Lord shall open the way.

I trust that Br. J. will find "sufficient leisure" to write a fitting response to the letter of Mr. Fitts. When he does this, I suggest that he submit it to our Editor for publication in the HERALD OF LIFE. A further suggestion occurs to me this moment. Eld. Fitts is undoubtedly correct in saying that Edwin Burnham has given up his faith in the final extinction of the wicked; but it is news to me that the latter has "published a refutation" of the "arguments" by which in other days he supported the annihilation view. I strongly suspect that on this point Eld. F. is mistaken. At any rate, there can be no harm in Br. J.'s asking him where said "refutation" can be found. If "this thing was not done in a corner," it is only natural that the few individuals who have not "abandoned" the destruction theory and are not "disposed to be quiet," should be curious to see after what fashion Eld. Burnham has made his summersault, and especially so in view of his declaration in the World's Crisis that he had not changed his views on entering the Baptist denomination!

I have said above that it is probably true that Edwin Burnham has abandoned his belief in the extinction of the ungodly. My authority for this statement is Br. Jasper Stone, of Charlestown, Mass., a thorough believer in Life only in Chirst. I spent a night at his house recently, and he told me that he had at his store a copy of the Christian Era (one of the Baptist papers published in Boston), in which it was stated by the Editor that Mr. Burnham had told him that he no longer held the annihilation doctrine. If this paragraph meets the eye of Br. Stone, I will thank him to mail to Br. Storrs the Era in question, if it yet remains in his hands. Our Editor can then give us just what the Era Editor has said respecting Eld. Burnham. Br. Storrs has been found fault with for his article relating to B.'s going over to the Baptists—said article being headed "As We Expected." Br. Storrs has never seen fit to recall that article, and now his foresight seems to be fully vindicated; for we may feel assured that the Editor of the Era has been careful to represent Eld. B. correctly.

With Christian greetings to all who read our dear HERALD OF LIFE, and with a promise of better behavior in the matter of helping to fill its columns, I subscribe myself,

Yours for the truth,

RUFUS WENDELL.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.

BY M. O. H.

"But I say unto you that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed."—Jesus.

Much is said in these times about the coming of Elijah. I would that he might come with all, yes, more than his original power. These are days in which we need the manifestations of the marvelous power of the Almighty to turn the hearts of the children to their parents; and the hearts of vain and willful men to the living and true God. But as yet I cannot see sufficient evidence to prove, to my feeble understanding, that John the Baptist was not the Elijah that was to come.

I can find no evidence that there was to be more than one; or that the work assigned was to be done except at one time. That this work was done, and fully accomplished, at the first visitation of our Lord to this earth, we must believe, or we can but think that Christ, in some way, misrepresented John; and, also, that the angel did not understand his business, when he told Zacharias what should happen to him and his son. Let us see what he says. Luke i. 16, 17. "And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God, and he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient by (margin) the wisdom of the just: to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." Malachi says, iv. 5, "Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, and he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of children to their fathers." Malachi and the Angel use the same words; the persons spoken of are to come at the same time (before the Lord); they have the same work to do; they are represented as coming in the spirit and power of Elijah; and I can satisfy myself in no other way than to think that Malachi, by the same Spirit and power that the angel did, spake of the same person. But an objector says, John himself says, he was not Elijah, and it will not do to dispute his word.

John did not boast of himself. Hear what he says, John i. 20—23. "I am not the Christ. What then? art thou Elias? and he said, I am not. Art thou a prophet? (margin). He answered, No. What art thou? I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord." John, it seems, knew his work, and knew who was to come after him, and that he was to be preferred before himself and the Spirit was with him from his birth; yet if we take him at his word, as it here reads, he denies that he is a prophet, even; as well as to deny that he is Elias. But we will look at the testimony of Jesus concerning John.

Math. xi. 9—15. "But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet; this is he of whom it is written, Behold I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee. Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist. For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." What took place then? John instituted the ordinance of baptism. The law was fulfilled, and a new ceremony took its place. The old dispensation was past, and the gospel dispensation was to be ushered in; and this same John was the chosen one to prepare the way. "And if ye will receive it," receive what? the Elias or the law and the prophets? If it is the latter, it would make as good sense, and would read, "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John, if you will receive it: and this is the Elias which was for to come." Let this be as it may, in these texts Christ teaches us that John was a prophet, and that none greater had risen.

Again he says, Ch. xvii. 11—13, "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things; but I say unto you, Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Then the disciples understood that he spake of John the Baptist." Jesus certainly teaches that this John was the Elias; and his disciples so understood it; and he intimates in no way that there is another one to come. Why should we not understand it in this light? Are we supposed to know better than they? Have we a more sure word of prophecy? If so, I hope and trust I may yet be led to see it.

It is no proof that John did not fulfil his mission because this or that man says he did not. Christ is our light. He is the faithful and true witness. He says that "no greater hath risen." If he did nothing worthy of note, why did our Lord so extol him? If he did not fulfil the work whereunto he was sent, according to the prophecy, what did he do? The Master said, this doctrine of the kingdom shall be preached to all the world, and then shall the end come. Was Elijah to do this work, or any part of it? (he intimates nothing of the kind,) or was it to be his servants from all nations? one man, or many? Was it to be Elias himself, or the Spirit and power of God which was manifested in him, given to the ministers of the gospel throughout the world?

I fear it would be difficult for even Elijah to reconcile the varied and conflicting opinions of the present day. Who of us would receive the man of God, if he should appear to-day, as he was in his time, and as John came, clothed in a coarse garment of hair with a leather girdle about his loins? Should we not overlook the precious gem hid beneath the rough exterior? Should we not deny him, as the Jews did Christ? Would we not pass him by for the man who was seeking his own glory more than the glory of the Father? God knows our hearts. If they will not believe the word of the Lord, neither would they though one were raised from the dead to preach to them.

"God, who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." Heb. i. 1. I believe the work was committed to the Son, and he is able to accomplish it; and that it will all be done in his own good way and time. He has given us, in his word, all that it is necessary for us to know until he comes. He will be the great and last revelation of which we have any account. He is coming not to curse the earth, but to restore it. The first advent was the time when he would have cursed the earth, had he come and found none to recieve him. And who would have received him, but for the preaching of John the Baptist? It is true that he could have raised up some one else to have done the same work; but no, this was the way, foreordained, and was here fulfilled. Time has been flying with untiring wings. Death has claimed many loved victims, and is still on his rounds. The words of prophecy uttered by our Lord are nearly all fulfilled. The gospel has been preached in all the world for a witness. The sun has been darkened; the moon has refused to give her light; the stars have fallen from heaven; and the powers of heaven shall be shaken; and then shall appear the sign; then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Are we ready for this glorious event? Do we stand as men waiting for their Lord? Have we our garments about us? and are we watching, lest any take our crown? Let us be ready. Let us be prepared, for the great day of our Lord is near, even at the door. Let us watch lest it come upon us unawares.

PREACHING DOCTRINE.—Truth is a great means of converting and sanctifying souls. Every other human agency is nearly subsidiary. This one is paramount and indispensable. Let, then, the live preacher preach doctrine thoroughly, earnestly, tenderly; not as old, musty relics, but as new, living truth; not in the spirit of forgotten controversies, but as applied to the issues of to-day; not as an abstract from theological tomes, but as a fresh expression of the lively oracles; not separate from Christ's person and work, but as proved and illustrated by his entire wondrous course. Here is power, real, enduring power. Such preaching tells. It deals with themes whose resources are literally inexhaustible. All angels and archangels could not wear them out, much less can any man or set of men. Sensational, sentimental, descriptive, imaginative discourses soon run themselves out. Even practical sermons have a comparatively narrow range. But doctrine admits of statements and applications endlessly diversified, ever new and ever attractive.—Christian Intelligencer.

From E. A. Poole.

LINCKLAEN, N. Y., Dec. 14, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—Some thirty years ago I was called to preach a funeral discourse on the death of an aged lady, who was a woman of excellent character, but a Universalist. While some of her neighbors thought her christian character evinced that she was, therefore, a christian, others styled it morality, or natural amiability, and maintained that a Universalist could not be a christian. There was some feeling on the subject; and as I was to speak on the occasion, I felt a heavy weight of responsibility, and great anxiety to be enabled rightly to divide the word of truth, and give to each a portion of "meat in due season." I chose for my theme Rom. viii. 11: "But if the Spirit of him that raised Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." The investigation brought me upon the same ground occupied by yourself in reference to the righteous, if I am correctly informed concerning your position.

At the close of the exercises, one of the audience, a Methodist minister came to me and said—Your doctrine involves the non-resurrection of the wicked. My reply was—No; for although it makes no provision for them, it is silent also respecting them; and leaves their destiny a distinct question, to be settled, not by inference, but by direct testimony. And on that point the scriptures are explicit. Daniel says (xii. 2), "Many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." And Paul, Acts xxiv. 15, "And have hope toward God . . . that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." And Christ himself, the Great Teacher, whose express object in coming into the world was to bear witness to the truth (Jno. xviii. 37), declares, Jno. v. 28: "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation." These passages, particularly the last, are very explicit, clearly including both classes; and it by no means follows, because the means or manner by which he raises one class will not apply in the case of the other, that therefore they will not be raised. Such was my position then, and such substantially is my position now.

The doctrine of the final destruction of the wicked I heartily indorse as the true teaching of the scriptures. It invests the character of God with loveliness, and removes some features which I found it so difficult to love or approve. And I am frank to confess that the doctrine of "No future life out of Christ," seems a natural adjunct of the former. I can see no object to be gained by raising the finally impenitent from their graves just to die again by being cast into the lake of fire.

But the question is not, whether I can see propriety in a given doctrine, but do the scriptures teach it? And if they do, the question of propriety is settled; and I have only to bow in reverence, and bring my heart to love what God has revealed.

My attention has lately been called to this subject, by a brother, in whom I have much confidence, and who takes the HERALD and indorses your views. It is certainly a question of great importance; and if you have any new light upon it, I am anxious to possess it. If you will publish this, with a reply that shall meet and remove my objections, I shall be thankful. If you have any work containing such information as I need, please send it with the HERALD. If not send the HERALD alone. Inclosed find $2 to pay expenses.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent you "LIFE FROM THE DEAD" and "DOOM OF THE UNGODLY," which we hope may help you in your investigation, and be a sufficient reply to the texts your letter speaks of. We have examined those texts so often and so fully that we do not think best, at this time, to do it again in the HERALD.

THE more quietly we bear our sorrows, the better it is for us; we thus save strength of spirit, which would be lessened by seeking and receiving sympathy. No one can so sweetly sympathize with us as the Man of Sorrows. The wisdom and mercy of God will be found written on every event which concerns you.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

"The Voice of Elijah."

The author of the Voice of Elijah, says:

"The law" [given to Adam] "did not make man a sinner; it did not compel him to be a sinner: it simply came to show him what he was and is."—p. 43.

We do not object to this, further than it imports, that man "was" "a sinner" before he was under the law; which is virtually saying that, God created him a sinner; for he was just what God made him. But our author adds:

"The law came to show man that the purpose of God is not in the animal, but in the spiritual; it came to show him that as he is, he can never inherit the earth."—p. 43.

The method taken to learn man this lesson, as stated by our author, is certainly of questionable morality: it looks like "doing evil, that good may come;" and Paul says of such, "Whose damnation is just:" Rom. iii. 8; and we cannot but respond—Amen. Such an administration we do not believe God ever ordained, or practiced. Our author further says:

"He" [Adam] "is animal, while the law is spiritual; hence in the sight of that law he is a sinner."—p. 43.

But Adam was not under "that law;" it was a law for the animal man. "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," Gen. ii. 16, 17. It was a law for animal nature; for Adam had no other; and that nature, if tried at all, must be tried by a law adapted to it. Adam was not under the spiritual law, for the very good reason, he was not yet prepared for it; the animal is first to be proved with such a nature as he has; and a just law can make no claim where there is no capacity, no power to obey; especially where that incapacity is not the fault of the subject, but of the law-making power itself. If Adam had been "faithful in the least"—in his animal nature—God would have given him the "much," the spiritual element; and thus he would have risen above the animal, and would have "kept" his "body under and brought it into subjection" to the will of God, till the time should come for the animal to give place wholly to the spiritual and immortal; not by death, but by a "change," either "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," or by a more gradual process, as it might please God. Our author says:

"If Adam could not appreciate the law, he could the penalty."—p. 43.

So the law is spiritual, but the penalty animal. We cannot "appreciate" that mode of administration, and we doubt if others can.

Eve, according to our author, supposed the forbidden fruit was poisonous, and would be the cause of death, if eaten: but the "beast of the field," the "serpent," convinced her it was not. In speaking of the serpent's reasoning with the woman, our author says:

"This argument was irresistible. Convinced that the tree could not harm her, the passion of fear was no longer arrayed against the desire for the fruit in the mind of Eve. She was now at liberty to choose between the will of God and the will of the flesh. True to her only instincts, she chose the latter."—p. 45.

Eve, being denied, by her Maker, that amount of knowledge which was imparted to Adam, "was easily led astray," says our author; and now she is placed in a position where an "argument" that "was irresistible" should be brought to bear on her ignorant mind; and, "true to her only instincts," she took of the fruit. That is, she acted just as her Creator designed she should, when he gave her those "only instincts" which he was pleased to bestow on her. She was led, "irresistibly," to carry out God's "plan," and to develop the "ordained condemnation" determined on "before Adam 'knew good and evil.'" Did Eve "choose between the will of God and the will of the flesh?" No: God willed Adam and Eve should eat of the tree somehow; but as Adam could not be induced to eat of it, animal as he was, while alone, his Maker produced Eve, so that she could be "easily led astray"—that is, act just according to the nature God had given her—and thus the Creator's design would be consummated. Eve, therefore, chose to do "the will of God," and in doing it, did her own also. Such we regard the legitimate conclusion from our author's premises. He says:

"Until Eve was formed, fear governed his" [Adam's] "desire for the tree; but her added influence sufficed to conquer fear."—p. 45.

God's scheme was now complete, and Adam overcome by Eve's "added influence." Thus was she demonstrated to be a "helpmeet" indeed, helping Adam to disobey God's expressed will, though his secret will was just the opposite of his expressed one. We can make nothing of all this, but duplicity of the worst character—commanding one thing, but determining another shall be done exactly opposite, and that under the pretence of instructing man that he needs and must have another nature than what he then possessed. Truly, this is "doing evil, that good may come;" and to charge the God of truth with such dealings, with the work of his hands, we dare not, and sincerely pray that God may "open the eyes" of our beloved brother, the author of the Voice of Elijah, to see the dishonor done to the government of God by such representations. The theory is, in substance, the "christian fatalism" from which we were delivered more than forty years ago, and feel no disposition to return to it again in our old age. But we have not done with our author's theory yet. Having stated fully how Adam was brought to eat the forbidden fruit, he says:

"Thus the first Adam was shown his unfitness to inherit the dominion of the earth. By the transgression his 'eyes were opened' to his true condition."—p. 46.

So God was obliged to contrive the introduction of disobedience to learn the man he had made his "unfitness to inherit the dominion" he had explicity given him. He was expelled from paradise for learning the lesson his Maker took so much pains to teach him; and, says our author:

"Not until the spiritual nature should be fully introduced would man fully 'regain the blissful seat' of paradise."—p. 46.

If he is to "re-gain" it, he must once have had it, though but an animal, and lost it. Our author says:

"In the very process of passing sentence upon the animal man, the way in which the deliverence should come was intimated, an evidence that the condemnation was for good," &c.—p. 46.

Then that which led to it was for good; and Adam got a blessing instead of a curse: the "penalty" was no penalty. But our author says, it was shown by the condemnation, that,

"The Creator had designs of mercy and love toward man, that the race might not perish like the brute of the field."—p. 46.

Nor would the race have perished, if Adam had maintained obedience; for "the tree of life" would have prolonged their lives "forever"; else why exclude man from it, "lest he should eat thereof and live forever!" Our author quotes JEHOVAH's words to the serpent, as follows—"Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle," &c. What had he done? According to our author, he had skillfully managed, by the wisdom God had given him, to bring about the pre-"ordained condemnation," God had set his heart upon before Adam did the desirable thing which was to make his condemnation appear as if it was the result of man's act; when, in fact, he was "condemned at the outset" (see p. 42) and "before" any act was performed. Our author further says:

"To show the ordained means of the ultimate conquest and destruction of animalism, the Judge further said, 'I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.' This promised seed is the last Adam and his offspring. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—p. 47.

But the animal nature was "the work" of God, not of "the devil." God made "animalism." Why so anxious to work its "destruction?" It seems, according to our author's views, God worked hard and had various devices to get the animal man condemned, so that he might destroy that which he had made. It is truly strange that the Creator, possessed of infinite wisdom and power, should choose to create a being that was sure to put him to so much trouble to put out of existence again with an appearance of justice, and when he had pre-"ordained" his "condemnation." Says our author:

"The first Adam being animal, and not spiritual, was condemned by the law."—p. 47.

So the first Adam was condemned for not doing that which he had no power to do; for disobedience to a law he had no power to obey; yet he was just what his Creator made him. His condition, according to our author, was like as if God should command us to cultivate the moon, and yet furnish us with no power or means to get there; but threaten us with death, if we do not fly to that planet and perform his expressed will, while his secret will is a pre-"ordained" purpose to condemn us. We do not believe in, nor worship such a God: the thing to us would be impossible: the reason our Creator has given us revolts at such positions. Our author goes on to say:

"The last Adam, being spiritual, held the 'earthly, sensual, devilish' nature in complete subjection, and was therefore justified."—p. 47.

So the last Adam had a "devilish nature," but kept it in subjection by means of that which was denied the first Adam; and for the lack of which he was brought into condemnation. The first Adam was just what his Creator made him. If He made him not only with an "earthly and sensual nature," but also with a "devilish" one, who is to blame for his eating the forbidden fruit? Was it not clearly the author of that nature, if there was any blame at all in the matter? Our author goes on to say of the second Adam:

"After this demonstration of the perfection of the new man, God condemned the animal nature of Jesus by hanging it on the cross."—p. 47.

Thus, after demonstating that this animal nature could be kept in complete subjection, by the use of means which the Creator did not give the first Adam, God "condemned" it, even in "Jesus, by hanging it on the cross." It happens, however, that God did not do that deed; but the Jews, "with wicked hands," did it, by the help of the Romans; but God reversed their deed; for, "Ye . . . . killed the Prince of Life, whom God hath raised from the dead." Acts iii. 15. "Therefore let all the house of Israel know assuredly, that God hath made that same Jesus, whom ye have crucified, both Lord and Christ." Acts ii. 36. "Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead," &c. Acts iv. 10.

Thus it is evident, God did not "condemn the animal nature of Jesus by hanging it on the cross." The Jews hung it there, and God reversed their action, by raising "this same Jesus" from the dead; thus condemning "his betrayers and murderers." Act vii. 52. But says our author:

"If the spotless Son of God should be condemned as a sinner, man would clearly perceive that sin is in the flesh."—p. 47.

But God did not condemn his "Son as a sinner." On the contrary, He justified him, by raising him up from the dead; and although he was "quickened by the Spirit," he was no less "the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for us," and who is now, as man, "the one mediator between God and men," (1 Timo. ii. 5, 6,) and "can be touched with a feeling of our infirmities," having been "in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Heb. iv. 15. But in support of his view, our author quotes Paul's words, thus:

"God sent his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, on account of sin; that He might, in his flesh, condemn sin, (Murdock's translation of Syriac, Rom. viii. 3.)"—p. 47.

Instead of this proving what our author quotes it for, we think it proves just the reverse. God sent his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh—or in the likeness of sinners, because men were sinners—"all had gone out of the way" of obedience—so "in his flesh" he "condemned sin." How? By demonstrating that the flesh could be brought into "complete subjection;" and, therefore, sin was without excuse, and justly condemned; for sin was committed by men's refusing or neglecting the offered aid of God by his Spirit. That God's Spirit was always in the world, and always ready to help man's infirmity, is evident from many portions of scripture. The work of creation was the work of God's Spirit. Thus, Gen. i. 2, "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the deep," and the work of creation began, on earth. Elihu saith, "The Spirit of God hath made me," Job xxxiii. 4. What was true of Elihu, is true of every man, and of every living creature. The Psalmist speaking of the "creeping things, both small and great," says, "Thou sendest forth thy Spirit, they are created." Psa. civ. 30. That Spirit was always in the world, and was ever at man's service, to enable him to do whatever God required of him. It was in the ante-diluvian world; and because men resisted it, and thus hardened themselves in sin, God said, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man."—Gen. vi. 3.

God's Spirit has always been near to help man; and has been continually urging upon men its aid. It was with the people of Israel in the days of old; and their great and condemning sin was, their resisting and refusing to follow the Spirit's teaching. Stephen said to the Jews, "Ye do always resist the Holy Spirit: as your fathers did, so do ye." Acts vii. 51. The Spirit's aid is always at hand; but men may refuse or neglect to accept the proffered help. If they had not this power there would be no accountability, and man would be a mere machine—a toy in the hand of his Creator. Here is man's condemnation; he sins not because he is an animal being, but because being an intelligent being, he does not appropriate the Holy Spirit's aid, which God more freely gives to "them who ask him" than the most tender parent gives good gifts unto his children. So saith Jesus.

Jesus, when in the likeness of sinful flesh, condemned this plea of the inability of the flesh to be in "complete subjection" to the will of God. God never commanded the flesh to perform spiritual acts. But He required man, in the enjoyment of his animal nature, to gratify his desires in subjection to his Maker's authority. God gave man no propensities or "passions," at his creation, but what He intended man should gratify, but in the manner and to the extent his Maker should, in His wisdom and love, prescribe. "Of every tree in the garden thou mayest freely eat," except one. Here was a wide field for the most perfect enjoyment of man's animal nature; only one prohibition, to teach man self government and an acknowledgment of his dependence on God. An easy trial. No man since has had so easy a lesson to learn. Animal as he was, there was no lack of power to do all that God required of him; else that had been no sin; for "sin is the transgression of the law;" but there can be no transgression of a righteous law, where there is no power to obey it. If a man should be brought into a merchant's Counting House, and be required to keep the accounts of the establishment without books, paper, ink, or any other means to do the work, and then be flogged and turned out, because he did not do what was required of him, none would doubt the savageness of the merchant, or the iniquity of dealing thus, and calling it a "transgression of law."

Man had power in himself, or at hand by asking, to do all that God laid on him; or there was no sin in his act. That fact ought to be considered beyond all controversy, if we would not charge God himself as being the criminal in the case, if any crime was committed.

The Durability of Matter.

The following article seems to be going the circuit of secular and religious papers, and, we suppose, with their approval. Do they know it expresses very nearly our views? Probably they do not; and yet such is the fact. The specific form of a thing may be destroyed, but the "simple elements" which go to make that form "cannot be destroyed;" and that Being who produced a particular form—say that of man—can reduce it to its original elements, and, afterwards, if he wills it, revive the being, or thing which He had caused to be dissolved. We maintain, indeed, that the godless sinner, when once dissolved into his original elements, will never again be revived, because he is "punished with everlasting destruction" for his willful refusal of the aid of God's Spirit to give him everlasting life. They rejected life in the method God has seen fit to ordain; thus they chose death; and "verily they have their reward." The article is as follows:

ANNIHILATION.—It is ascertained, and is capable of the clearest proofs, that the simple elements of which all substance is composed, cannot, by any conceivable means, be destroyed. They may indeed be so changed as to present not the least resemblance to their previous form; they may be so mingled with other bodies that their identity cannot be traced; they may be dissipated into invisible vapor, and be apparently annihilated; but we learn from the science of chemistry that in every shape, the same elements remain inextinguishable and unaltered. The phenomena of solutions afford some of the most obvious illustrations of complete change produced in bodies without causing their annihilation. If a piece of silver be immersed in diluted niter, in a short time the silver will be entirely dissolved. Its hardness, its luster, its tenacity, its specific gravity, all the characteristics which distinguish it as a metal, are gone. Its very form has vanished, and the hard, splendid, ponderous opaque metal, which, a few minutes before, was immersed in the mixture, is apparently annihilated. The liquid, however, remains as limpid as before; it presents no difference in appearance to indicate a change. What, then, has become of the solid piece of silver which was placed in the liquid? Must we conclude that it is annihilated? Put some pieces of copper into the solution, and the silver will reappear and fall to the bottom of the glass in small, brilliant, metallic crystals. Though solution is one of the simplest processes of nature, the limited faculties of man will not permit him to comprehend the mode in which it operates. There is not one phenomenon of nature that the mind of man can fully comprehend, and, after pursuing the inquiry as far as the mental capacity will admit, he is obliged to confess that there is an operating power beyond the reach of his comprehension.

The Conference of the church of God, in the State of Iowa, in its December session, in the year of our Lord 1866, adopted the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved: That this Conference recognize BR. ALBIN CHANDLER as a competent expounder of the word, worthy of its sanction and support; and that this resolution be published in the columns of the Prophetic Watchman and HERALD OF LIFE.

Letters and Extracts.

From James Grant.

MONTROSE, SCOTLAND, Dec. 20, 1866.

DEAR CHRISTIAN BROTHER STORRS:—I had purposed to send you my mite for the benefit of the HERALD long before now, but my purposes and my purse do not at all times exactly harmonize. I rejoice that the generous hearted brethren and sisters in America have resolved to sustain the HERALD in its present form. The finest developed specimen of humanity was once a child, unable to stand alone, and the HERALD, though a child in years and financial resources, is already manifesting the strength of a "Samson" and the skill of a "David" with his sling; and I trust that by and by its exchequer will be as fertile and productive as its pages.

I am thankful to learn, through the HERALD, that some of my English neighbors are beginning to see the light of truth. I would be glad to see signs of life to the same extent in Scotland; but some here (to whom I have shown the HERALD) say, they don't wish to disturb their peace of mind by reading such things; they are perfectly satisfied with the views of the Bible truth they already possess. Some few others eagerly read, but are afraid to venture an opinion on what they do read, lest "orthodoxy" should excommunicate them.

Yours, in hope that the HERALD may live, till "Christ, who is our life, shall appear."

From James Malcolm.

WOODSTOCK, C. W., Dec. 30, 1866.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—It is my painful duty to inform you that my father, Francis Malcolm, has gone the way of all the earth. He fell asleep in Jesus on the 30th day of last September at the age of 75 years. But we mourn not as those who have no hope. At a very early age, he gave himself to his Saviour; and through his whole life, we, his family, can testify that he walked with God. He was a native of Aberdeen, Scotland. Leaving his native land he came to Canada in the year 1832. Buying a piece of land in the then wild, wild woods of Canada, he with hard toil and perseverence, made himself a comfortable home. He had much to contend with not very congenial to his nature. Before leaving his native land he was one of the leading members of the Baptist church in Aberdeen. But now he was almost entirely deprived of what he then considered the means of grace. But after a few years he had the pleasure of seeing a few baptist families settle round him. A small church was formed, to which he was chosen deacon. He also felt it his duty to contribute liberally of his substance to the support of the ministry. A new chapel had very soon to be erected, to which he was one of the principal donors, besides giving the land for the site. His heart was soon made to rejoice by seeing a goodly number gathered into the church, including his own family. Things moved on in this way very agreeably up to about eight years ago, when a person came along holding the views, "No immortality nor eternal life but through Christ." His mind appeared to be prepared for the truth; for no sooner did he hear, than he believed; being as I believe free from bigotry he was always ready to receive the truth whenever proclaimed. A few others, including his own family, adopted the same views. Things now came to a crisis. The church, including priest, as well as people, with one consent, branded him as a heretic. To deny the immortality of the soul, and the eternal torments of the wicked, were enough of themselves to consign him to the hottest place in hell. The church with one consent, expelled both him and his party; at the same time giving them over to Satan that they might learn not to blaspheme. Before going out of the chapel he asked the privilege of his old brethren to allow him to meet in the chapel, promising not to interfere with their appointments. But this they would not grant; telling him plainly that they would not worship under the same roof that he did. He now began to see that he must suffer persecution for Christ's sake. But nothing daunted, he felt satisfied to suffer affliction for the sake of the truth as revealed in the word of God, rather than to enjoy the pleasure of being a member of a Baptist church.

He always prized your writings very highly; especially BIBLE VS. TRADITION, which, I believe, was the means of entirely obliterating his old orthodox views from his mind. He adopted your views of the non-resurrection of the wicked. And, although he had at one time published a small work on baptism, after reading your views on the ESSENTIAL BAPTISM, he let go his Baptist principles altogether. A short time before he died, he bade me be sure and not forget the HERALD OF LIFE; which I am sure I never will, until the object for which the HERALD is published is accomplished; namely, our LIFE-GIVER's return to give us immortal life. We are not so independent as our orthodox friends; they have immortal life without Christ. But we have to wait to get ours when he returns to set up his kingdom. I sometimes think they are really to be pitied. Christ might well say to them, as he said to the Jews, "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life."

Since changing my principles, I can see plainly that the immortal soul dogma is the foundation of all orthodox error. It immortalizes sin, and consequently makes God the greatest tyrant in the universe. Of all the theories I have yet heard propounded, concerning the wicked dead, I consider yours the most consistent with the character of a just God. It seems to me very clear that death is all that God requires. "The wages of sin is death;"

not two deaths; just one death. The apostle says, He that sows to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption. But they that sow to the Spirit, shall reap life. If the wicked get a resurrection, why did Paul strive to get a resurrection. John iii. 36 settles the point with me. Jesus says, He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; but he that believeth not the Son shall not see life. What further evidence need we? Christ never promised a wicked man life. They in this life sowed to the flesh, therefore corruption is their doom. Dear friend, I envy your position in holding forth life through Christ as the only hope of man. Hoping at the same time that God will spare your mortal life until Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

From H. Young.

PITTSFIELD, N. H., Dec. 26, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—While reading the three letters of Helen Robertson in the last HERALD, which speak of the freed people, I am made to feel anew for them. I say anew, for I have long been troubled on their account. Many years ago, when one hundred dollars was a large fifth of all I possessed, this sum was freely offered as my part of a fund with which to buy the freedom of every bondman in this nation. And later, when the nation was threatened with war from this cause, we offered $500 for the same object. But as very few looked at the matter in the same light, nothing of course was done in this direction; and so the "thing that I was afraid of has come upon me;" and the cost cannot now be reckoned in dollars.

Three of our sons were soldiers. One is now at home, an invalid for life, from injuries received in the war. Another, a noble boy of 20 years, sleeps in New Orleans, La., and he was one which we felt we could not spare. A third, with broken constitution and ruined health is in a neighboring city, trying to do a light business. But still, we have not, we do not, we cannot murmur; but I have faith to say, "The Lord giveth, and the Lord hath taken, and blessed be the name of the Lord."

Sister Helen says of these people, "They are a mighty, powerful people. They will be powerful for good or evil. Hence the necessity of getting them on the right path."

We have sometimes thought of this people as bearing some comparison with the captive Hebrews, when freed from their oppression. Those Hebrews were powerful and mighty, just because the Lord was with them; when they left him their power was gone. Now, if the freed people of our time are powerful from the same cause—and we too are God's people—then their strength is on our side already; for God's people are never strong against each other, but only against their common foes; and so, if this people shall leave God, and forget his wonders, as his people of old did, they will no longer be "powerful and mighty," for "there is no power but of God;" and we must fear none but him. But while we fear only him, we can love, pity, and do good to all who are in want, "as we have opportunity;" and especially those whom, as a nation, we have wronged. The amount we have already sent to these people, and to wounded soldiers, in clothes, bedding, books, tracts, money, &c., is more than $50, and would have been much greater if our means were more ample. But still demands are made, and our hearts still pity the suffering ones, and we cannot withhold.

We expect to soon greet the loved ones now covered for a little while from our sight, with as many as by our feeble efforts can be reached and won. Yes—meet all the ransomed hosts, when God shall "destroy the face-covering, cast over all his people, and the vail spread over all nations;" when he shall "swallow up death in victory, and so take away the reproach of his people from off all the earth;" when He shall "bid the new creation rise, and bring us back our paradise."

The $5 enclosed is an offering to God for the children in Sister Helen Robertson's school.

From your afflicted brother in Christ.

From Helen Robertson.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., Jan. 6, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Yours, with five dollars inclosed, came in due time. Thank you for it. Thanks also for the two dollars from Abby L. Perry, Scotland, Conn., for shoes to make the suffering poor comfortable. A few days ago I had one dollar fifty cents from B. D. Wolcott; also a letter from Brn. T. and C., with twelve dollars for eight pairs of shoes, and saying that they had sent a box of hosiery, hoods, comforters, &c., for the comfort of our suffering fellow creatures. These brethren remembered myself, also, with a present of money. "Those tokens encourage our heart, because they show we are not forgotten."

It is cheering to be remembered by the children; but how much more by our dear heavenly Father, from whom we have many tokens of tender love and regard.

A sister, who did not wish her name to be mentioned, sent me a dollar for my scholars, and wished me to say, through the paper, how clothing ought to be directed to me. Direct, "Helen Robertson, Payne St., between Prince and Duke." Sr. Wendell, also, notifies me that the Salem, Mass., friends are preparing to send supplies for our need. Our needs are really great in this place; and how thankfully we receive and distribute all that is sent. We also pray that our Father may supply the needs of those who remember the poor. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor, the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble." He won't forget his promise, either.

I would like to say a few words about a fellow laborer here, a missionary from Boston, who has been in this field three years, and all testify that a more faithful missionary never labored in any field either home or foreign. She occupied the next room to mine, and I found her to be eminently pious. She and I often studied the word, and took sweet communion together. When she understood my views of truth, she expressed her interest in them, and desired to investigate; said she had heard of them before, but had never had an opportunity of searching into them. I lent her "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," and she devoured it in a short time. She was much pleased with it, and often spoke of the consistency of such a theory. Her only difficulty, it was hard for her to give up the conscious state of the righteous between death and the resurrection. I also lent her Br. Hudson's "DEBT AND GRACE." She had a well-cultivated mind, and was much pleased with that work. She had labored so hard in this field that she entirely broke down her constitution. She went home in the spring and was sick all summer, yet could not be dissuaded from returning. She got back here about the beginning of November, but found she could not do much. Finally she was taken down; and, after about two weeks' sickness, fell asleep in Jesus on Christmas morn. We feel her loss much; but hope to greet her when Jesus comes. She believed in her Lord's near coming and personal reign on the earth. So we "mourn not as those who have no hope. If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so, also, them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Precious, comforting hope.

Christmas is more thought of than any day in the year South, here. They celebrate it much as we do the fourth of July, North. They commenced at midnight, and all outside seemed merry, while we, with sad hearts, watched by the bedside of our dear sister. Still, something good was in store for us before the close of the day, for a little after noon, as I sat down to study my Bible, a boy announced that three gentlemen from Mass. wanted to see me. At home that would not be much thought of; but down here, I tell you, it seemed like something. I went out, and there stood Br. Williams, from Bristol, Conn., Br. Munger, from Chicopee, Mass., and Br. Libby, from Newark, N. J. It seemed almost too good to be true; but so it was, and Sister Corwin and I had a real good, short visit with them. They could not stay long, as they had promised to return to Washington to dinner. Br. M. had preached in W. the Sunday before; but we did not know it. Br. W. was to preach the following Sunday. I went on Saturday, and stayed over till Monday, making my home at Sr. Dull's. Br. Williams preached three times. In the morning brought out Life only through Christ very plain, proving it from the word; and in the afternoon and evening he was on the prophecies. What a feast we had, and we felt encouraged to go on, feeling surely that the coming of our Lord drew nigh. That event assumes a feeling of nearness to us now that it never did before; and we feel the necessity of seeing that our garments are unspotted from the world.

O, brethren and sisters, let us see to it that we are walking before him unto all well pleasing, so that when he appears, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming. He is ready to forgive past failings, and give grace for the future. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

SCOTLAND, CONN., Dec. 30, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—As I always feel an interest in others of "like precious faith," and love dearly to hear from them, I thought perhaps there might be some who would like to hear from me. I would say to all who love God and his truth, that I am one with them.

It is 15 or 16 years since the light of the glorious gospel of the kingdom of God began to dawn upon my traditionized mind, with its kindred doctrines; and, O, I cannot tell you of the beauty and glory I now behold in the wondrous plan of Redemption! "This is the record, that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for those that love him; but God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit," (through the prophets and apostles) "that we may know the things that are freely given to us of God, which things, also, we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things that be of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

We need not wonder, then, that professing christians in these last days of Gentile rule, do not understand anything about the eternal life being in God's dear Son, or that "the kingdom and dominion, and greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heaven," is soon to be "given to the people of the saints of the most High;" and that the literal seed of Abraham, are to be gathered from all the nations whither they have been scattered, and are to be "planted again upon the mountains of Israel, and One King, (even Jesus) is to be king over them all;" I say, if these things are spiritually discerned, we need not wonder that so few discern these great and glorious truths; for O, how few are spiritual!

I have occasion often to refer to what Paul said to his Corinthian brethren, viz., "I have fed you with milk, and not with meat; for hitherto ye were not able to bear it; neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal; for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal and walk as men?"

How many who profess to be looking and waiting for the coming of their absent Lord, are spending their time in finding fault and condemning others, because they have not been immersed in water; or because they do not see as they do on all points of doctrine. But, brethren and sisters, when I see those who have been immersed, living self-sacrificing lives, searching after truth, and proclaiming it to the world, I conclude they feel as Paul did, when he said, "But with me it is a very small thing that I should be judged of men's judgment." "But as then, he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now."

Brethren, we have been called unto liberty, only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another; for all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

BR. STORRS:—Please find in the within five dollars for the HERALD OF LIFE. When I tell you that I live seven miles out of the city, and have no other preaching than the HERALD and the Voice of the West, you can better know how much I do welcome these messengers of love. Since I commenced reading your paper, I feel like one from the dead. I like the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ." It harmonizes with my views of the word of God. I do most fully believe that those who sow to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; and those that sow to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit, reap life everlasting. Believing this, how can I enjoy the popular preaching of the day. I confess, for one, I do not. Why this great change? It appears to my mind like changing the darkness of night for the mid-day sun. Now the Bible is a new book: all is harmony; the chain is perfect, &c.

Now, brother, I do long to see you face to face, and hear you preach. I have learned to love you; and where we see the Spirit of Christ, how easy it is to love. The Spirit of Christ is the same, and if we have it we will have no respect of persons. The signs of the times are interesting, to see all things ripening for the harvest. My prayer is, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as in heaven." What a change that will be for those that look for his appearing. Not my will, but thine, O Lord; and may the Lord keep you perfect unto the end. Then we will understand why our path has been strewn with thorns, and our names cast out as evil. Yours in hope of eternal life until Christ shall come. Amen.

JOSEPH K. MARSHALL, North Chester, Mass., writes:—We feel to praise the Lord for his blessings to the children of men in preparing the way of life, in Christ, to all who will come and take of the water of life freely. We are thankful for the love that binds the children of God together. We never felt a greater desire to glorify him in our body and spirit, which are His, than at the present time, and to stand out before the world for the truth, as it is in Jesus; and praying that all who love our Lord and Saviour may be kept by the power of God, through faith, unto salvation. We praise the Lord for the establishment of the HERALD OF LIFE as a means of spreading the truth of "Life only in Christ." The paper is all that we could wish. I send you one new subscriber. Your brother in Christ.

MRS. ROSELL GLASS, Hinesburg, Vt., writes:—I send herewith $5, my subscription to help sustain the HERALD OF LIFE. It is given freely unto the Lord. I rejoice in the life and prosperity of our dear HERALD as a "weekly." May the Lord sustain and bless his servant in proclaiming Jesus as "the way, the truth, and the life" to a lost world. If you think best I would like to have the following "orthodox" picture of hell torments published in the HERALD, that it may not be lost or forgotten. It is an extract from one of Spurgeon's sermons in addressing the sinner. He says:

"When thou diest thy soul will be tormented alone; that will be a hell for it; but at the day of judgment thy body will join thy soul, and then thou wilt have twin hells; body and soul shall be together, each brim full of pain, thy soul sweating in its inmost pore drops of blood, and thy body from head to foot suffused with agony; conscience, judgment, memory, all tortured; but more, thy head tormented with racking pains; thine eyes starting from their sockets with sights of blood and woe; thine ears tormented with thine heart beating high with fever; thy pulse rattling at an enormous rate in agony; thy limbs cracking like the martyrs in the fire, and yet unburnt; thyself put in a vessel of hot oil, pained, yet coming out undestroyed; all thy veins becoming a road for the hot feet of pain to travel on; every nerve a string on which the devil shall ever play his diabolical tune of hell's unutterable lament; thy soul forever and ever aching, and thy body palpitating in unison with thy soul. Fictions, sir? Again I say, these are no fictions, and, as God liveth, but solid, stern truth. If God be true and this Bible be true, what I have said is the truth, and you will find it one day to be so.

'Sullen moans and hollow groans,
And shrieks of tortured ghosts;'

"There is a real fire in hell as truly as you now have a real body—a fire exactly like that we have on earth in everything except this—that it will not consume though it will torment you."

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We like these men, who, professing to believe it, speak out in plain language about the torments of their hell. As much as we abominate such fiction, we honor the men who do not hide their belief in it. If their God is more cruel and heartless than Moloch, tell the people so, as plainly as Spurgeon has done. Do not attempt to hide his hideousness. In this age of investigation all that is necessary is for the various religionists to present the objects they worship just as plainly as this eminent Baptist Minister has done. The God of the Bible differs as widely from Spurgeon's imaginary God, as his heaven and hell differ from each other and the truth. "GOD IS LOVE;" and "he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him." Mr. Spurgeon's representation will drive men into infidelity, or they will inquire if the Bible teaches such things. This inquiry will lead them to reject Spurgeonism, but not the Bible, which shows the loveliness of God in all its teachings.

GEO. W. ALLSHOUSE, Rochester, N. Y., sends $2, and writes:—When I can do more I shall do so gladly, having been sick a great deal, with an enfeebled constitution, at times scarcely able to do anything; and yet, I thank God that I am no worse. Though often in want, yet not utterly forsaken. I should hardly know how to do without the HERALD. Yours, in the Lord, looking for eternal life at his appearing.

DOMESTIC.

Congress has resumed its sessions, but has not been able to do much business as members have not returned to Washington from the holiday visits. Its action will be interesting owing to the important matters to be settled. The society at the South remains in a deplorable state. Bitterness against the North for supposed wrongs; hatred against the colored people, as being held somewhat responsible for their distresses, and general depression with much suffering from lack of food by the poorer classes, are the reports which fill the daily papers. The President remains inflexible against the action of Congress, and the latter body proceeds in its legislation regardless of his views. Notwithstanding all this, there is more reasonableness in the tone of the leading politicians, as though preparing to bow to the inevitable. Measures of reconstruction will soon be acted upon, no doubt more stringent than what has been offered, before the States South will be permitted to resume all their relations to the Government.

The Massachusetts Legislature, with two hundred and thirty-eight white and two black representatives, met this year. The first instance in this country of the selection of colored men for State representatives.

There is considerable speculation in diplomatic circles here regarding the secret mission of Assistant-Secretary of State, Frederick Seward. Facts of significance lead to the inference that his mission is to convey to the French Court dispatches explanatory of the Secretary of State's cable message to Napoleon, which, it is asserted, was conveyed to the Emperor by Minister Bigelow in language at once so objectionable and insulting that Napoleon refused to receive it. The statement that the Assistant Secretary's orders relate in some respect to the failure of the Campbell-Sherman mission is improbable, and consequently the deductions above made have a semblance of truthfulness.

The revolution in trade anticipated through the working of the Atlantic telegraph begins to be realized. English orders on the California markets for wheat pass under ocean and over land, and advices of the purchase return by the same path within business hours of a single day.

A few days since as the train from Richmond reached Petersburg a small boy jumped from the truck under a car, covered with frozen mud from head to foot. An inquiry revealed that he had slipped under the train when it started from Richmond, and getting upon the rod to which the breakers are attached had placed his arms through the truck, and in this position rode the whole distance.

FOREIGN.

The New Year addresses of every European government are of the rose-color order. Peace is their great burden, and they paint the future as full of the rich blessings of general tranquility. At the same time each of their authors is aware of the utter falsity of all such declarations. There has never been a moment in this century, that such confident anticipations were expressed in every quarter of the certainty of a terrible clash of arms all over Europe shortly to take place. Since the humiliation of Napoleon by Bismark, the former has been actively engaged in increasing his military power; to such a magnitude has he already carried it, that excitement and discontent has prevailed throughout France, even his sycophantic legislative body have expressed grave fears about his measures. Bismark has gone on steadily consolidating his conquests, and will soon be ready to control the whole of Germany; and if his health does not fail him, he may be the aggressor against France. Napoleon has, however, detached Italy from Prussian influence, and she with Austria, seems preparing to bring these two powers to his help against the rising star of Europe. In the meantime affairs in the East are general attention. Rumors are current that Austria meditates an invasion of Turkish dominions as her only hope of continuing a great power in Europe, when Prussia secures her remaining German population. There is no doubt that Servia and Roumania, the Turkish possessions in Europe, are disposed to place themselves under Austria. The number of Serbs in European Turkey amounts altogether to 4,000,000, and a union of Roumanians and Serbs would mean the proposed establishment of a Christian confederation of about 8,000,000 inhabitants. It may be regarded as certain that Turkey, without foreign aid, will be unable to prevent the success of this scheme, which would be another step—and probably the most important yet taken—toward the speedy disintegration of the Ottoman Empire.

England is not as yet a party to it; but, in spite of her expressed determination to steer clear of Continental complications, she will eventually be forced to take part in them.

From appearances within the next three years the whole of the European powers will be arrayed against each other in two great hostile camps. The Eastern question is assuming an aspect which may precipitate a collision within even a shorter period. These probabilities are anything but tranquilizing to financial and commercial interests, whatever assurances they may receive to the contrary from royal lips.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y. in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is actually animalism. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD: OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly [illegible] up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's body of divinity as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement; bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR OF THE HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION; in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested; showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNCONVERTED; or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy: by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

GEO. STORRS;
Box 4658, New York.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1; in paper covers to 70 cents; and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchasers of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the [illegible], will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous prices, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing [illegible], are hereby revoked.

PERFECT PEACE.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." Isa. xxvi, 3.

The rains descended, and the floods
My soul's foundations tried,
While one by one each cherished hope
Like waning rush-lights died,
And, lone and desolate, I heard
The elemental din;
Yet light amid the darkness broke—
A sunbeam shone within.

Out on the crested surge I rode,
When mighty seas arose,
And challenged with their thunder cry
The stormy winds as foes;
Then barks were wrecked, and men went down
Beneath the billowy brine;
But in that tempest of despair,
The sunbeam still was mine.

The trust in God—I'll hold it fast,
In peril and in pain,
Until that glorious Sun arise
That ne'er shall set again.
And if, by death's grim phantom led,
I tread the shadowy vale,
Still may that perfect peace be mine,
Though flesh and heart should fail.

SANTA CLAUS AND CHRISTMAS.

December 25, 1866.

Dear Children:—I suppose all of you are aware as to the import of this day! Some I am sure are; else why that expectant wish on going to bed on the eve of the day, that "Santa Claus" would bring you something, just what you want? I wonder how many of you know who this famous "Santa Claus" is. We have all in our time had the same expectations you have. Some of us have awoke on Christmas day to find no good gift in or out of our stocking. That poor child, with ragged dress and worn out shoes! Look at her, with all the desires we have; see how she hopes—again to be disappointed—see her look, and nothing is found! Think you her young heart does not fail her, when she sees others no better (if as good) than she is, who have had more bestowed on them than heart could desire! We sometimes think the affairs of life are not fairly distributed, and sometimes murmur when we ought rather to thank God and loving parents and friends that we are so well off. Dear children, let us, if we have not yet learned how to be thankful; even though we are not as others; it is well for us, perhaps, that we are as we are. I think it wisdom so to decide.

But who is "Santa Claus?" and what is Christmas? This is what I wanted to write you about. You know in nearly all ages of the world men have been the worshippers of something. At one time it was Pan, Diana, Jupiter, and a host of others too numerous to mention. The Sun and Moon, also, have been objects of worship; but so far as I can learn, Santa Claus is simply a good natured old fellow, bent on pleasing the children, and not hurting anybody. Of course, none of you believe in the real existence of the old fellow: he stands, you know, as the representative of good for the little folk; that is all. Some of you, perhaps, have seen what I mean, illustrated in the three figures of women leaning one on the other representing Faith, Hope, and Charity. So when we talk or think of old Santa Claus we can only think of him as a representative character. In my next I will talk to you about Christmas; tell you how it came to be observed; and, if I can, when. I have not been asleep, but very busy. I hope to talk more with you, if our Editor is pleased to let me.

Uncle William.

MIRACLES.

BY T. W. VAUGHN.

It cannot be expected that the gift of miracles could be obtained by any but the obedient, humble children of our heavenly Father; and none are such but those who believe his work, obey the precepts, and follow the example of his Son. Let it be understood that there is a class who are identified as "the wicked," and none are so identified but those who have subscribed to God's covenant, and violated it. This point I think is sustained by "Moses and the Prophets," and also by Jesus and his disciples.

To believe the doctrines and follow the customs of "the wicked" is, at all times, a cause of impotence in the children of God, and renders their works abortive. Their services, therefore, become vain services, and consequently not wrought in God. Let us examine a few of those customs.

Prayer. What is prayer? My earnest desire, and solemn petition. To whom addressed? To my heavenly Father, and to him alone. Not to a mixed audience, to make hypocrites of some and scoffers of others, and to hang out my own sign. But do "the wicked" pray? Let us see. The Church of Rome prays for the prosperity of her cause; and her sun is setting in darkness. The Church South prayed, during the rebellion. Their cause did not prosper. The Church North prayed; but God answered in vengeance. Volumes might be written of the excessive wickedness, and even blasphemy of this forbidden practice, which every day presents itself to our eyes and ears. The maddening scenes of a modern revival prayer meeting, or the chilling and unmeaning exhibition, by some professed christian churches to render God propitious to their selfish ends, and vain pursuits, ought to teach us that the precept of Jesus, Math. vi., 5—13, was uttered to warn his followers not to practice these vices, which he calls hypocrisy, and is also in contempt of the third commandment. "Be not ye therefore like unto them," Math. vi. 8. Jesus never prefaced his sermons with such an exhibition; and his disciples were seldom favored with his method of petition. He invariably retired from public gaze, to seek strength and wisdom for the mighty achievement of his mission.

But I shall be told, "the Apostles met for prayer." I answer, never in a promiscuous assembly; and only on special occasions, and with an understood positive object upon which they were all agreed; none others being admitted; and thus prayer had a legitimate object, and rational foundation; immediate answer and miracles were the result.

But I hold that Apostolic customs, in the face of the precept as above, can have no force, as their minds were in a transition state, and therefore fallible. See Acts xv. 7; xxi. 23, 24; Gal. ii. 11—14. No misstep of the disciples can invalidate the precepts of the Master; and I have yet to learn that the Apostles were infallible. I ask again, Can God hold any man innocent who presents himself before an audience, and under pretence of addressing the ear of Infinite Wisdom, cuts and carves his words and sentences, to please the passions and tickle the ears of a mixed multitude? To suppose so, would be to ignore all former precedents of his dealings with the sons and daughters of Adam. It is, therefore, necessary that we guard with vigilant care every temptation to stray from the straight and narrow path, leading to the fountain of life, if we would escape the snares of death.

Public prayer, therefore, has become a crime of such magnitude that it must, eventually, bring down the most terrible judgments upon the offenders; even if their apparent piety and zeal be like Jehu's, God will not always be mocked with impunity, and his name profaned without punishing the transgressors.

As the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is the crowning falsehood, so public prayer is the crowning sin of the anti-christian church. Every conceivable crime is veiled beneath this dark pall of hypocrisy. The most debauched wretch that walks the earth conceals himself behind the fervent pathos of his prayers. The miser hugs his gold, obtained by fraud, and prays for mercy on his victims; the unfeeling master oppresses his servants, and prays long and loud for the poor and downtrodden, everywhere; the haughty churchman prays for a humble and contrite heart, and exhibits the dignity and pride of the most insolent tyrant, coupled with selfishness and lust. Ambitious princes and rival states employ officious priests to present their respective claims to the God of battles to favor their murderous designs; some political demagogues get up conventions, and a pragmatic clergyman is invited to preface the stormy debate with prayer; a pic-nic, or tea-party meets, and is not complete without prayer. A murderer is to be hung, but justice must be robbed of its due through the intervention of a praying machine; a convivial feast, ending in a drunken debauch, must have the presence of a Rev. gentleman to do the agreeable, or it would not be aristocratic! Well might the prophet say, "All tables are full of (this) vomit, and there is no place clean."

"And when ye pray, be not as the hypocrites are, who love to pray standing in the synagogue and in the corner of the streets, that they may be seen of men; verily they have their reward." "Be not ye, therefore, like unto them." "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."

The fearful position of one who spurns these precepts, by attempting to worship the Most High in a manner by him forbidden, is not a desirable one; much less could we expect such an one to become the medium of those mighty works, promised by Jesus to all his obedient followers. The question will be asked, "Is it wrong to engage in a prayer-meeting, where we all get happy?" My answer is: Such transports are not peculiar to any kind of religion, or confined to moral character; but may always be looked for from negative minds, under the manipulations of minds that are positive. God's people always prayed in the midst of trial, affliction, persecution, sorrow, and despair. Witness Gethsemane, "And being in an agony, he prayed the more earnestly."

And now, Brethren, let constant prayer be made to the Father of light, that he would vouchsafe to give us the Holy Spirit, to teach us his truth, to purify our affections, to enlighten our understanding, and to qualify us to do all his will; and I can assure you that miracles will not be withheld.

LIGHT AND DARKNESS.

The lovers of truth will not fail to appreciate the following: L. J. B.

The Owl wrote a Book.—The owl wrote a book to prove that the sun was not full of light; that the moon was in reality much more luminous; that people had been in a mistake about it; that the world was quite in the dark on the subject.

"What a wonderful book!" cried all the night birds; "and it must be right; our lady, the owl, has such very large eyes, of course she can see through the mists of ignorance."

"Very true," cried the bats; "she is right, no doubt. As for us, we cannot see a blink; the moon and the sun are alike to us, and for anything we know, there is not light in either. So we go over in a body to her opinion."

And the matter was buzzed about until the eagle heard of it. He called the birds around him, and looking down on them from his rocky throne, spoke thus:

"Children of the light and of the day, beware of night birds! Their eyes may be large, but they are so formed they cannot receive the light, and what they cannot see they deny the existence of. Let them praise moonlight in their haunts, for they have never known anything better; but let us who love the light because our eyes can bear it, give glory to the great fountain of it, and make our boast of the sun, while we pity the ignorance of the poor moon worshippers, and the sad lot of those who live in darkness."

REFLECTIONS IN SICKNESS.

BY ELD. B. MATTHIAS.

Armonk, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1866.

Br. Storrs:—I wish to speak a little of experience and training. There is a power in affliction to go deeper into the heart than prosperity can reach. The Psalmist said, "Before I was afflicted I went astray." Peter, "If need be ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than gold, ... might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ." Paul, "For they verily, for a few days, chastened us after their pleasure; but He for our profit, that we may be partakers of his holiness." Dr. Payson says, that Dr. Owen renders this text, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. Yea also, he severely chasteneth, above the ordinary measure, those sons whom he accepts and peculiarly delights in." Payson again, "Indeed I have been ready to doubt whether pain be an evil; for though more pain was crowded into last week than any other week of my life, yet it was one of the happiest weeks of my life."

Mr. Jay says, "It is a pity to lose a trial." Mr. Wesley said to Dr. Dodd, when in prison under sentence of death, "courage brother; perhaps the Lord saw that nothing else would do." Joseph said to his stricken brethren, "The Lord sent me here." Jacob said, when the big waves of his stormy life came upon him, making a clean breach, "All these things are against me." But when he saw Joseph alive and covered with glory, he said, "It is enough." All amends were now made to him, as if he had not been wayward. No affliction "for the present is joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby."

I am sick with inflammation of the lungs. I think it happened to me in good cause. I was unexpectedly and suddenly invited to preach to a gathered congregation; other speakers having failed to be present. I had been refused this place by the trustees up to this time. But now I had a free, fair time, which I improved to the best of my abilities. I preached the kingdom and the high honors that await its subjects. After occupying reasonable time the door was open for questions, when they were asked, pertinent and otherwise. This took a long time. All the while, the house was more than conveniently filled with smoke, doing me rapid harm that I did not perceive at the time. I hope the meeting will be a success. It certainly will be, if the devil doesn't catch away the seed.

Going into the air, I took a chill; dismounted from my horse and walked a mile; found relief. But the chill returned; then fever-pains, &c.; and now, ten days since, I am still confined to the house, but improving, I trust, by the grace of God. The effect on my mind, and the lessons taught me, I will just say, by the way, as a rule, I go against night meetings.

Next I found myself under investigation before the Lord. I saw more to repent of since conversion than before. Such a life! Fifty years a christian! but what blunders; shortcomings and unbelief; sectarianism and bigotry; such folly and stupidity; and barbarous ignorance of God; of his nature and government! More than forty years of this time, an exhorter or preacher; ten years as a pastor; nearly half of this 40 years preaching fables; preaching for "doctrines the commandments of men." As far as I can see, I had nothing right or in the right place, except the bits of law I preached. My ethics may have been right; but doctrines, alas for the poor doctrines! what mutilations they suffered. Faith misrepresented; the motives to repentance a great lie; the omnipotent wrath of the Almighty God forever active and fervent against a live sinner! in the worst imaginable place and condition! as helpless as his tormentor was potent! I am sure that is something to be repented of. Salvation, the great subject that calls so many thousands into the ministry, was misrepresented. It was instituted to save men. I supposed it was for an abstraction of a man: in this case, identical with a shadow. Salvation, as illustrated by our Saviour, teaches—as any man with eyes and ears open, may perceive—was for the body; but the fable drops the substance, like the dog crossing a stream with meat in in his mouth, seeing the shadow in the water, opens his mouth to catch it, when the stream took the substance beyond his reach. Salvation to be given at the second advent, was taught to be a present possession, by a random, or insignificant faith. Faith that had no data or meaning; that expressed no object, and had no connection with any power. For instance, the opposite of the faith that Paul illustrates, Heb. xi., and gives form to, in Rom. x. 9, "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Of this salvation Peter says, "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired, and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you." Paul said, "Now is your salvation nearer than when we believed."

Again; we—I—repent that I offered salvation to the wrong party: making a distinction where there was no difference: offering salvation to the soul, that could not be lost, by any possibility, and letting the devil take the body, instead of offering salvation to the man; sinners redeemed by our Lord; it was offered to an imaginary being, not known in the history of redemption.

I preached the penalty of sin, infinitely out of all proportion to any amount of guilt possible for a sinner to contract. Think of the folly! Because God is infinite, therefore he must treat a sinner as if he were a God, only a little inferior in strength; must keep him in a heated prison; can't trust him at large; can't destroy him if he should wish to: or, if he can, his laws will not allow him to commute the punishment of an infinite offender to that of death.

This "abomination of desolation" creates a great many necessities for God; would rob him of his independence, and his own identity. God does not ask their counsel, nor ask them to legislate for Him, nor expound his laws.

Then the reward of the righteous. Here I erred two ways; by sending them to the wrong place, and offered a reward at the wrong time; and a third way I erred, offering it to the supposed immortal soul! There is not a right thing about this. What a deceptive gospel! In this way tens of thousands are ignoring the promise made to the fathers. In one word, there was no gospel in these things which I preached. Not apprehending the promise, the inheritance, the coming and kingdom of our Lord; and so of the kindred doctrines. I do remember asking myself, Who were to occupy the new earth? but never stopped for an answer.

The leading minds of the schools led us. Institutes were imposed upon us. We must understand the Bible according to these standards. So we were led and did lead. "The blind leading the blind." I hope that those who continue to do so, will soon fetch up "in the ditch."

I am tired, and sick, and grieved, almost beyond endurance, at seeing so much shocking abuse of mankind. I can't be indifferent to these abuses. I would not, if I could. Indeed I never felt more desire to proclaim to all Jesus and the resurrection, than now. I thank God that he has in the Herald of Life, a bright shaft for his quiver. May it be in every way worthy of his use; and may he give it a fair field. Amen.

I had other convictions. Thought I, Why should God care to keep christians alive that would withhold praise from him, when he expects it from them, as a deserved homage?

Hezekiah, in his appeal, assigns as one reason for asking his life, that God would have one less to praise him should he die. "The grave cannot praise thee: death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit, cannot hope for thy truth. The living, the living, he shall praise thee as I do this day; the father to the children shall make known thy truth."

David says, "The dead praise Thee not." That is as much as to say, the living do, of choice. The right minded will.

There is another passage in Psa. lxv. "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion, and unto thee shall the vow be performed, O thou that hearest prayer; unto thee shall all flesh come." Many of the dear saints have died with praises on their lips. Hymns of praise half sung out, sentences broken off, and words half spoken. These are all waiting to finish their songs, sentences and words interrupted by the rude hand of death. All flesh shall come before him and praise him.

Sunday, Dec. 16.—I am better; thank the Lord. I hope all the readers of the Herald will praise the Lord daily. It is written, "And daily shall he be praised."

My dear brother, I congratulate you, that you have come so safe and well, with your armor on, to your 70th year. Look upward! I am only a step behind you in years: only a year and a half your junior. I wish it were more. No matter. No time to go to sleep now. Sluggards go to sleep after the day has broken. There are stirring events at hand. Among other things, sectarianism is to be destroyed. The fall of Popery is the signal for the fall of all false systems. Babylon fell; and then "the cities of the nations fell." So may it be.

PRECIOUSNESS OF FAITH.

Precious, indeed, is that faith that leans upon God in adversity, that goes to Jesus in trial, and that repairs to the Spirit in sorrow. Precious faith that finds a promise for every condition, a helper in every emergency, a soother for every sorrow; that can hope against hope, taste a sweet disguised in every bitter, and see a bright light veiled by each dark cloud. This is the true gold that procures all blessings, and enriches its possessor with all good. He that hath faith in God has every desire of his heart fulfilled. He can dive into the treasures of God's word and say: "All these are mine, for they are my Father's epistles of love." He can turn to the Redeemer's fulness and exclaim: "It pleased the Father that all this fulness of grace, and truth, and love should dwell in Jesus for me." He can repair to the throne of grace and say: "Here I am permitted to draw near to God, burdened with sin, laden with want, oppressed with trial, assailed by temptation, crushed with sorrow, casting, by an act of faith, all my care upon him." Is it not that precious faith that enriches my poverty, that dignifies my meanness, that guides my perplexities, that cheers my loneliness, that calms my grief, that defeats my foes, that paints a bow upon every cloud, and that brings all heaven into my soul? Yes, such is the fruit of that faith of which God is the giver, the Spirit the author, Christ the object, and a poor, empty, unworthy soul the happy possessor.—Dr. Winslow.

HOW I WAS TAUGHT.

BY H. ROCKWELL.

Westfield, Mass., Dec. 11, 1866.

Br. Storrs:—Please permit me to say, by way of preface, that I am an ignorant, unlearned man; never having had even the advantages of a common school education, with the exception of a very few months in early childhood. Through the abundant grace of God in Christ Jesus, I have been called from darkness to light, and from the power of satan to serve the living God. As soon as this blessing was conferred, O the unspeakable, sweet, holy joy that sprung up in my heart, overflowing my entire being; O, I could not refrain myself; my heart expanded and I could not withhold from telling the glad story of the just and holy one, the lovely Crucified.

But with much trembling, and in great weakness, and from the lowest depths of ignorance, the Lord, who worketh all things according to his own power, saw fit to thrust me out into the vineyard to labor for the salvation of others. I did not dare to confer with flesh and blood, but became obedient unto the heavenly calling; and having connected myself with the Methodists, I commenced my ministerial labors in the high-ways and the by-ways; climbing the rugged mountains and searching the lonely vales, seeking a bride for my Master; with what results, the sublime page of eternity must unveil; but, alas! how I tremble, and what fear comes over me, lest my ignorance, or my errors should turn the feet of any down the pathway of eternal death: but this is my only consolation, that I acted honestly, and did the best I could. The time of this ignorance, God winked at; but now commandeth men everywhere to repent.

Well, what is it to repent? I think it is to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. How can we do this? Can we do this by refusing to accept any Bible truth, because it is considered unpopular? Can we not better do it by honestly accepting the truth as it is in Jesus? I think we can. Well then, as I must abridge somewhat, I will come to the revelation. What shall I reveal? I will reveal what the word and the Spirit reveal to me, and the manner in which it was made known, and the effect that it produced on me.

First. I was presented with the second coming of Christ; and although I was always dull, yet there was something in it that was so comforting that I embraced it at first sight, and believed that I should realize the blessing of the coming One in '43. O, how sweet was that little book in my mouth; but how bitter in my belly; or rather the reproach that followed. O, the trial of our faith, how severe, and yet more precious than gold tried in the fire. Well, the second doctrine was the non-immortality of man and the sleep of the dead. Here permit me to say, these truths were presented to me by our dear Br. Samuel G. Mathewson; one in whom I had the most implicit confidence. What was the effect, and what the result? The effect was, the communication being made as I was passing from my work to my dinner, after the Br. had made it, and perceiving in some degree that I was astonished beyond measure—with a few other words spoken to me in great kindness, he extended the friendly hand and gave the parting farewell. He said to me, well Br., consider this matter prayerfully; take your Bible and search as for hidden treasures; and when we meet again you may feel differently: then mounting his horse he rode away, while I stood in the middle of the street, not exactly petrified with astonishment, but partially paralized, looking at his retiring form until the last footstep of his horse had died away in the distance.

As I turned away from looking after him, never in my life did I experience, on account of another, such overwhelming feelings of sorrow as at that moment; and I said, Good God, what ails the man? is he deranged? This for the moment was the awful conviction of my mind. I then went to my house, and for the first time in my life I entered it and passed by my wife without speaking to her—passed through the dining room into my private apartment, took my Bible and Concordance and seated myself with exultant feelings, not so much for the purpose of searching for hidden treasures, but with perfect self-confidence that I should readily find a hundred passages that would, at a glance, annihiliate the whole of Br. Mathewson's argument. No sooner was I seated than my mind was filled with malice and hate, not that I hated Br. Mathewson; and certainly not my wife; but not knowing what manner of spirit I was of, I found it difficult to answer her questions pleasantly. When she urged me to dine, I abruptly replied, that I had bread to eat that she knew not of, and when I retrospect that scene, I am very glad she did not know; for the bread that I was then eating was made of wild gourds and bitter herbs; the devil being chief baker, and the loaf was not fit even to be given to swine.

Well, the Lord is merciful. Praise his holy name!

Now, brother, is it not wonderful that when we have been caught in the snare, we should not be able to avoid it when set for our feet again in the same form? Well, so it is, I have been caught again in the same snare. Pardon this digression.

Instead of finding one passage to overthrow the point in debate, every one of my weapons were turned against me; and after examining from 12 in the day until 12 at night, I closed my Bible, kneeled before the Lord, confessed myself the crazy man, instead of Br. M.; acknowledged my stupidity; wept freely over the rebellion of my heart; found truth in advance; asked God to forgive me; received pardon, and arose a better, happier, and more enlightened man. Thank the Lord!

But now comes the same snare. On the night of the 9th of this month, after administering the symbols of the broken body and streaming blood of Jesus to the little flock in this place, gathered under our dear Br. Weaver's consecrated roof, by the united effort of himself and companion, in which I remarked to the communicants that I had been especially blessed and comforted, and that as I was entering on my winter's evangelical mission, which I expected, unless the Lord came or I should fall asleep, I should end in Ohio; after saying to them that I had enjoyed unbroken peace for a long time, as the result of holy living, I then felt moved by the Spirit of God to charge Br. W. to feed the flock of God, taking the oversight of them, as he would be in a great degree held responsible for present or future life. After they retired, he commenced opening to my mind the horrid doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked. Well, I listened till past 12 o'clock, and when he lighted me to my room, after finding myself in bed, I said to him, that not a word that he advanced had or ever would make any favorable impression on my mind. I considered my case, in that direction, hopeless; but there was one thing I considered somewhat favorable, and that was, when any Bible truth that was not understood by me. was presented, it looked so awful and so God dishonoring that I felt like crushing it out of existence. This was my only hope in the case.

Well, thank the Lord, I arose in the morning; went to Br. Bush's; took the Bible and Concordance, and commenced searching, but with a better spirit, and for better purposes than formerly. As I prayed for light, and while examining one of my impregnable, and, as I supposed, "fire proof" fortresses, the light of God's lovely, holy, and ever blessed Spirit poured right down upon me, insomuch that I was so completely filled and baptized that before I was aware of it I laughed, wept, and rejoiced, all at the same breath. And now, as I said, at the close of our communion, when I am convinced by the word and Spirit of God of any, and all Bible truth, I shall embrace it and endaavor to live it right out, fearlessly, although it cuts off right hand friends, and plucks out right eye brethern; not excepting Br. Grant; for he is, and always has been a kind benefactor and brother greatly beloved. Say, Br. Grant, shall living truth sever the golden chain of Jesus' love that binds us to the eternal throne? Oh, no, my dear brother; it cannot, it must not be so. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword?" Rom. viii. 35. "As it is written, For they sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter:" verse 36. "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us:" verse 36. Now, brother, please insert this in the Herald of Life, although it expose all my ignorance, for the benefit of all that may read your paper.

Happy Through Grace.—Christians might avoid much trouble and inconvenience if they would only believe what they profess—that God is able to make them happy without anything else. They imagine that if such a dear friend were to die, or such and such blessings to be removed, they should be miserable; whereas God can make them a thousand times happier without them. To mention my own case, God has been depriving me of one blessing after another; but, as every one was removed, He has come in and filled up its place, and now, when I am a cripple, and not able to move, I am happier than ever I was in my life before, or ever expected to be; and if I had believed this twenty years ago, I might have been spared much anxiety.—Last Days of Dr. Payson.

New York."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

All names of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

GLORIFICATION IN DEATH.

BY L. C. T.

So dear to adherents of popular theology is the dogma of glorification in death, that if we except its parent error, inherent immortality, none is harder to eradicate. The most expeditions and effectual method of rooting out such theological errors would seem to be, to dry up the principal fountain, by demonstrating the true nature of man and the utter absurdity of the soul's immortality. But so much is that item of popular faith idolized, so thoroughly is it regarded as one of the cardinals in gospel truth, that to attact it abruptly, without first undermining it by setting forth the real truths of inspiration, is, in most cases, to arouse the opposition of its advocate and induce in him a frame of mind in which he is ready to denounce our teachings as false and corrupting, and ourselves as nearly or quite precipitated into the terrible abyss of infidelity. They who would, at death, be transmitted to a state of happiness are not long in comprehending the weakness of their position, when called upon for Bible evidence to sustain it; and, therefore, more than else, because of a deep-seated prejudice against any theological principle not bequeathed to them by their ancestors, are very fond of seeking refuge under the hackneyed plea of the gross materialism of the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, and that it is invested with a cheerlessness and gloom incompatible with the manifest goodness of God. A large majority, perhaps, of this class hold that the happiness of the immaterial, uncompounded something, (comprehend the term, who can) which, at the death of its habiliment of clay, wings its way to some celestial sphere, is not complete until, at the resurrection, it is again simply settled in its old prison-house. So if there were any force or truth in the charge of grossness and materialistic to entail it to serious notice it would apply with equal power to their own theory.

Religionists of the popular schools are very willing to decry that which does not accord with their own notions, and that, too, with a persistency intensified in proportion as those notions are impractical and untenable. What an inexplicable thing is this prejudice. Though a man desire the truth, it does sometimes beguile him into the assumption that the brightest and loveliest of gospel gems are but dross, owing existence to the erratic speculations of unsanctified enthusiasts. It puts a lie in his mouth, and he feels fortified with truth. It oftimes boldly assures him that truth itself is unimportant, and nought less than divine assistance in rich display can enable him to withstand its subtle power.

Was death instituted as a thing to be desired? The "Word" does not so represent it. That it was announced as the penality for sin none can reasonably deny. Can it, then, be at the same time an object of desire? It is deliverance from the dominion of death that inspires the victor's song; not passing into it. But, says one, "Death is sometimes desired." Nothing more true. There have been instances of individuals becoming so reduced, morally, mentally, and physically; so thoroughly outcast of society, that they have committed crime for the purpose of being sent to prison, and there sustained without care or responsibility to themselves. But would they have acted thus if some friend had kindly said to them, "I present you with a fortune, and will cause you to be respected?"

Upon something of the same principle is it, that people desire death. Poverty, disappointment, or anything that produces intense anxiety, may impair the mental faculties and produce a morbid desire for death; or the racking torture of disease and pain may destroy all hope of recovery, and induce the subject to welcome it as the only means of relief. Assure the poverty-stricken man that affluence and ease aw it him, inspire the ambition, wrecked, with new hope, and promise him success at last say to the writhing sufferer, I have a medicine that will put pain to flight and restore you health and happiness, and their object of "desire" is at once transformed into one of hideousness and dread, notwithstanding the fact that they may regard death a deliverer. Why is it? Chiefly, because there is in their minds a lurking distrust fostered by the indefiniteness of their theory.

Nor could this well be otherwise; for the most ardent defender of the theory of going to heaven at death is unable to produce, from the Bible, a single promise to support it, as it is nowhere recognized by any scripture writer. Unto no child of God was it ever promised that he should receive his reward until Jesus shall come to possess his inheritance and reign upon the throne of his father David.

The great poet who wrote, and the multitudes who shout, "there is no death," are very far astray. There is such a thing; and that it is no friend, nature and revelation both attest. The real "gate to glory" is translation; and through it many will pass. But in the mean time death reigns triumphant. It is an enemy; but he who hath attained victory over it will soon destroy it. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. xv: 26. Inspired authors, with perfect unanimity, treat it as a power unto which all must yield, but to be sought by none. It is, then, just what it was intended to be, dark, gloomy, and repulsive; but faith forms a triumphant arch and spans the chasm. Though we face the grim king of terrors, we know that his "sting" is withdrawn, and the germ of a better than our present life inserted.

Is the impartation to us of a power to sustain such an unfaltering trust, in the most trying moment of our whole experience, inconsistent with the "manifest goodness of God?" It is cheerful and consoling beyond expression; secure, by perfect faith in the timely fulfilment of all God's promises, to contemplate that point in the eternal future when the word of infinite power shall speak into spiritual existence all those whose names are written in the book of life, to flourish in immortal glory. Ought not all, whose faith leads them to cherish the hope of being glorified in death, be able to give a reason for the hope that is in them?

THE IMAGE OF GOD.

In the first chapter of Genesis we learn everything that has been revealed about the creation of man. In the second chapter the same terms are repeated with the addition, however, of supplying the information out of what man and other creatures were made—the dust of the ground. Although this account is referred to elsewhere in the scriptures, no additional light has been cast on the subject, probably for the very good reason that nothing could be added. It is a simple fact stated in the simplest way possible. Yet because it is so clearly stated, devoid of all ambiguity, that very fact is taken advantage of, and its literalness discredited to bolster up the popular teachings of modern theologians.

The record then makes this announcement. Gen. i. 26. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." And in Chap. ii. 7, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." Here is man made of the dust of the ground in the image of God, before his life is added. So that whatever that image is it must be formed in the material organism, and not in what is popularly termed the spirit or soul—that is said to have been added to this organism subsequently. Many of us may hold views as unscriptural as our opponents; and on this point especially have we yielded almost half the ground to them by not adhering to the statement made as plain as words can, that man was formed of the dust of the ground in God's image. It is honoring God to take him at his word, and not attempting to help him out of an apparent difficulty to please the false philosophy of the day. "Man," says the scripture, "is fearfully and wonderfully made." How so? Because he is the image and likeness of his Maker. He is the head of all living creatures. Our bodily organization constitute the entire man, and therefore must include that likeness. These organizations, endued with the Holy Spirit, are to continue throughout eternity—that is one attribute or image of God. We shall continually go on attaining knowledge—our mental capacity is unrestricted; it will draw from the infinite store-house, through that infinite existence; our minds are, therefore, the image of another of God's attributes. Our moral purity is assured us—another attribute of God which we shall image. Christ is the express image of his Father, and we shall be like him when we shall see him as he is. He in the Father, and we in him. We to be one with him as he is one with the Father.

To make my idea plain as to what I consider the image in us, I will offer some illustrations. Take our external senses—hearing, seeing, &c, these image God's attributes. We see in the action of these senses, precisely how every other faculty and power of man's mind operates. This is done through mechanism, in the form of nerves, each having some appropriate duty; these again, act in groups in concert, to accomplish certain labor; they act, again, as one entire, simple power; which is termed the judgment. This is precisely the same in the machinery of the body controlled to effect the great design of existence. The hand has one power, the foot another, the eye another; several of these parts have often to act as one to accomplish a certain purpose; then, again, the entire body moves to attain a certain end. Our bodies are to be like the glorious body of our Lord; our minds will operate and be operated through the machinery of the brain, in perfectly blended harmony, also; and it will then more clearly be manifest that those living frames embody machinery representing all our Creator's attributes in a finite degree, certainly, but enough to be his image and likeness.

But to break the holy indignation of some, who may incautiously condemn the idea here put forth as evidence of the evil effects of our freedom and independence in the study of the word, I will offer the views of Mr. R. G. Hazard, a Methodist, an eminent writer on metaphysics. He says in a late work of his: "The finite mind of man, made in the image of God, has finite powers, corresponding to omnipotence, omniscience, and other creative attributes of the Infinite; and, as far as we know, exerts these powers in the same mode and under the same conditions. This creative power is exercised by the finite in the only way in which we can conceive of its exercise by the Infinite Intelligence, and under the same conditions."

Here is one who holds the popular views in relation to the duality of man, but whose intelligence compels him to admit the correctness of the above position, that the incomprehensible author of all things has so designed and organized man, in material form, as to shadow forth himself. The perversion of these powers expresses the freedom of the will, the independence from mechanical control, while undergoing the necessary training to develop a creature that God desires to abide in his presence forever.

MESSIAH: THE DELIVERER.

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."—Isa. ix. 6.

"The path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Such was the progress of the prophetic announcements, which prepared the way of "The Holy one and the Just:"—the promised Messiah. In Gen. iii. we see how the first day-spring from on high visited a world of darkness and despair; how amidst the gloom of sin, a gleam of golden light appeared, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." As time advanced, the light shone brighter; one distinguished family was selected to be the depositary of the promise—"To Abraham and his seed were the promises made;" and not only made, but in a measure explained; for in his beloved Isaac, whom in a figure he received from the dead, the patriarch "rejoiced to see Messiah's day, he saw it, and was glad." But brighter still shone the fair harbinger of approaching day, when unto David the Lord was pleased to swear, that of "the fruit of his body would he set upon his throne." "That his seed should endure forever, and his throne as the sun before God." Thus the light had increased until the angel announced the fulfilment of the prophecy unto the shepherds, watching their sheep, "Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour which is Christ the Lord." How exact these words tally with the prophecy. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful"

And who so wonderful as our Lord Jesus? Wonderful in his miraculous conception; in his birth in the inn at Bethlehem; in his cradle in the manger. Wonderful in his life of sorrow; and wonderful in his death of shame. Wonderful in his glorious resurrection and ascension; and wonderful in the gift of the Holy Ghost. Did the children of Zion but know the wonders of redeeming love, well might they sing to Jesus, as their forefathers sang to Jehovah on the shores of the Red Sea, "Who is like unto thee, O Lord among the gods? who is like unto thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?"

"Counsellor,"—what counsel so sweet, so soothing as his who said, "come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" who came "to preach glad tidings unto the meek, to bind up the broken hearted, and to comfort all that mourn?" Behold him, when on earth counselling the publicans and sinners to go and sin no more; the widowed mother, bereaved of her only son, to stay her falling tears; the rich to lay up treasure in heaven; the poor to labor for the meat that endureth unto everlasting life. And even now, what is it that cheers the afflicted christian in his hour of sorrow; that sweetens his cup of bitterness and makes him say, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted?" What, but the counsel of his compassionate Saviour, carried to the heart by the consoling influence of the Holy Spirit? Truly he is "wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working."

"The Mighty God."—This title had been ascribed to him by David. In Psalm xlv. the Psalmist addresses King Messiah, touching whom he wrote, as a mighty warrior, pursuing his way to glory and majesty by his victorious sword. "Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty, with thy glory and thy majesty." And then, as if he beheld him return from conquest, and seated on the throne, he says, "Thy throne, O God, is forever and over." Of these two appellations, "O most mighty," and "O God," the name before us is compounded; it is literally "God, the mighty One"—El Gibor; and is remarkably appropriate to him who combines the human nature with the divine; the word Gibor, "mighty One," conveying the idea of a human warrior, or commander. In Psalm lxxxix, where Jehovah is represented as making to David a more full discovery of his purpose, to raise up a Deliverer for his people, he says, "I have laid help upon one that is mighty," i. e., Gibor, "The mighty One." In exact accordance with these predictions, the angel, who announced the birth of Jesus to his virgin mother, gave this as the distinguishing feature of his character; "He shall be great," or mighty—"and shall be called The Son of the Highest;" in other words, he shall be "God, the mighty One." And did not our Lord Jesus, in his works, his words, his wisdom, and his warfare, vindicate his claim to this exalted title? Was he not mighty in his works, when he gave sight to the blind, strength to the lame, health to the lepers, hearing to the deaf, and life to the dead? Yes, his very enemies declared that "mighty works do show forth themselves in him." Was he not mighty in his word, when with his voice he stilled the winds and waves; commanded the unclean spirits and they came out; when he called the publican from the receipt of custom, and he followed him; when he spake pardon to the guilty conscience, and peace to the troubled spirit? Was he not mighty in his wisdom, who taught with authority, and spake as never man spake; confuting the subleties of the sceptic, confounding the devices of his numerous assailants? And who so mighty in his warfare? tempted by Satan, taunted by the ungodly, flattered by his false friends, frowned upon by open enemies; in all these things he resisted unto blood, and came off more than conqueror. But that dread conflict who can tell, wherein he bruised the serpent's head, and "spoiled principalities and powers, and made a show of them, openly triumphing over them in his cross?"

"The Everlasting Father."—Such was the Babe of Bethlehem. "His goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting," Several good expositors render this expression "The Father of the everlasting age."

The Jews were in the habit of dividing time into two great portions, or dispensations; the age that is, and the age that is to come: the former being their time of trial and captivity before Messiah's coming; the latter their eternity of triumph, and rejoicing under Messiah's sway. This title would therefore be at once intelligible to the Jews; it would denote, that this exalted Personage, though born a child, would, in the age of Israel's glory, be the object of paternal reverence, gratitude and love. No longer should they delight to say, "We have Abraham to our father:" but to the Redeemer should they henceforth look, and say, "Doubtless, thou art our Father; though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not; thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer; thy name is from everlasting." In him they should behold, "the Father of many nations." True, the everlasting age of Messiah's full and final triumph has not arrived. "We see not yet all things put under him;" but we see, in Jesus our Lord, "The Father of the everlasting age." "The Resurrection, and the Life;" "the author (and so the Father) of eternal salvation;" to whom is given power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as God has given him. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." And not only the promise of his lips, but the expressive language of his life on earth, proclaimed him worthy of the name of "Father." Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord Jesus pitied them that feared him. The bruised reed he did not break, the smoking flax he did not quench; and as a father spareth the son that serveth him, so with fatherly forbearance he counselled, he corrected, he consoled, he comforted his people.

"The Prince of Peace."—This title would be familiar to such of the Jews as were conversant with the Psalms of David. In Psalm lxxii. a very beautiful description is given of the peaceful and prosperous reign of this Prince. "In his days shall the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace, so long as the moon endureth. The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness. He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, he shall break in pieces the oppressor." Whence it appears, that his reign should be a reign, not merely of peace, but of peace established upon sure foundations. There is a seeming peace, which has no solid basis; a peace obtained by compromise or coalition with the foe. Such is the peace with which "the father of lies" cheats his deluded followers. His is peace without pardon of sin—peace without removal of guilt—peace without the favor of God—which no more deserves the name of peace, than the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." But under Messiah's sway "righteousness and peace shall kiss each other." It is peace established "by righteousness;" peace, the purchase of his precious blood; peace, the result of victory over Satan; the peace of God; of God glorified in the precepts and the penalty of his righteous law.

In prospect of this glorious achievement by the Seed of the woman, the heavenly host sang, when they told the tidings of his birth, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will toward men." In harmony with whom the ambassadors of God's pardoning love, when they unfurled the banner of the cross, proclaimed "He is our peace"—"He came and preached peace to you which were afar off, and to them that were nigh." Such is Isaiah's glowing description of the woman's Seed. Such the inspired development of the Person of the expected Deliverer. May we all be so inexpressibly happy as to take part in that Peace."

THE TWO WITNESSES.

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

We have, in another article, shown that these witnesses cannot be the Bible. Applied to the Bible, they are true in no particular, but, in several, manifestly absurd.

Mr. Baxter says, that while the primitive church held these witnesses to be two men, and that Elijah is one of them, they were divided in sentiment on the other, some believing Enoch to be the other, while others believed it to be Moses. Mr. Baxter thinks Moses is the one, giving his reason that Moses was raised from the dead, when he appeared on the mount.

Whoever these witnesses may be, it is evident there are but two of the kind here named. "I will give power unto my two witnesses;" not two of my witnesses, as if he had more of the same kind. God has a great many witnesses. "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord." Isa. xliii. 10. "Ye shall be witnesses of me." Acts i. 8. "We are his witnesses of these things." v. 32 "But witnesses chosen before of God." Acts x. 41. "Who are his witnesses unto the people." Acts xiii. 31.

God does not receive witnesses of men, but he appoints men to be witnesses of him. He has two witnesses who are unlike all others. There are two men who are unlike all other men down to our time. These are Enoch and Elijah. They were taken away from the earth without dying. Moses died, and admitting that he was raised from the dead, in this he would not be unlike others, for many came out of their graves after Christ was raised, and appeared unto many.

Our belief is, that Enoch and Elijah are these two witnesses. God took them away alive, and has preserved them for a great work to be done in the very last days.

"And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth. And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth and devoureth their enemies; and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified."

These witnesses were to receive power to prophesy for a time defined to be 1,260 days. They will have no power to prophesy before these days begin, and they will not prophecy after these days end. These facts are on the face of the text. Their clothing will be sackcloth. They are symbolized by two olive trees and two candlesticks; and they stand before the God of the earth, ready to do his will. If they should be hurt while they are prophesying, fire will proceed out of their mouth and devour their enemies. Elijah, when he was upon the earth, called for fire and it came. So will these men, when they are here, call for fire to destroy those who will hurt them. Thus will fire proceed out of their mouth. "These have power to shut heaven that it rain not," &c. When Elijah was here he had power to shut heaven so that it did not rain for three years and six months. These men will smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will, or as often as the Lord shall direct them to do this. Our belief is, that the seven vials of wrath are to be poured out during the time of these witnesses. Rev. xvi. "When they shall have finished their testimony" they are to be killed. "What," says one, "Enoch and Elijah to be killed?" Why not? Is it any more for them to be killed than for thousands of other good men? Why should they be an exception to all others in this respect? Again it is asked, "How can they be killed, having been made immortal?" Who says they are immortal? They Bible does not. They were translated. Translation is a change of place, not a change of character. A book is translated from one language to another, but it remains the same. So were these men removed from earth to another place, but not changed to immortality. Besides, we think that no man could be made immortal before our Saviour became immortal. If they were then they took the lead, and not our Saviour, in reaching immortality. Christ is the captain of our salvation. In all things he must have the pre-eminence. "And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the city, where our Lord was crucified; (in Jerusalem,) which is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt." Isaiah calls this city Sodom. Isa. i. 10.

"And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations, shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth. And after three days and an half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them. And they heard a great voice from heaven, saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them."

We have been told that if we make the witnesses two literal men, we ought to make the fire literally to come out at their mouth, but those who say this, make the ninth and tenth verses literal, while they make everything else in this subject figurative. They will not suffer their dead bodies to be put into graves. As they are two men, their friends would, of course, want them buried, and not lie exposed to the scoff and ridicule of their enemies. But if the witnesses were the Bible, the friends of it would not want to have it put out of sight. The dead bodies were bodies that could be seen lying in the street. After three days and a half the Spirit of God raises them from the dead. They are raised and stand upon their feet at the end of these days. Those who kill them do not raise them; in this work they have no agency. God, by his power from heaven, does the whole work. They finish their testimony before they are killed. They will not prophesy after that, as the whole account shows. When they come to life they go up to heaven; and their enemies will see them go. Then, in the same hour comes the earthquake; the tenth part of the city falls; the city where our Lord was crucified; seven thousand men or names of men are slain; others will be affrighted and give glory to the God of heaven. At that time the second wo is passed, and the third wo comes quickly. Then the seventh angel sounds, and the Lord descends to raise all the saints that have died, and give them immortality. The kingdoms of this world then become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. Paul in Heb. xi. in speaking of the faith of the Old Testament saints, in which he names Enoch, says, "These all having obtained a good report, through faith, received not the promise, that they without us should not be made perfect." When the time comes for them to be made perfect, Paul, and others, will be perfect. They will be perfected when they receive the promise of immortality and eternal life.

The 1,260 days here, are, I think, the same time we have in Dan. xii. which is to reach to the end of the wonders named, and reached to the 1,335 days: the end of them will be when Daniel, Enoch, Elijah, and all the saints, will stand in their lot, or inheritance.

In the work of Enoch and Elijah, or the two witnesses, which will be 1,260 days, not years, the wise will understand. Christ said, Elijah shall surely first come and restore all things.

A LIFE OF TRUST.

Few christian men there are who have not encountered trying seasons and circumstances in life, which, for the time being, have taught them the nature of trust, and led them to exercise it in a marked and high degree. They have called upon God in the day of trouble, with an humble faith which they never knew before. But if their trouble has passed away, their peculiar sense of dependence has gone with it. If day after day passes by, unmarked by any unusual trial, it is unmarked alike by any unusual conscious exercise of trust. Christians can exercise simple, unconditional trust; they can commit themselves unreservedly to God, and realize that their all is in his hands occasionally—when, as we might say, they are compelled to do it; but to live a life of trust in a living present God, is, apparently, a rare and difficult attainment.

Or, if some attain it in regard to spiritual matters, there still remains a difficulty in extending it to temporals. We may be able to realize every day, in regard to our minds, that it is not we that live, but Christ that liveth in us; we may have grace given us every day to triumph over the ancient enemy, legality, and to exclude boasting as to our salvation and growth in grace, when we can realize no similar independence on God for our daily bread, for the support of our families, or for our success in life. Even in much of our labor for the kingdom of God, especially for the secular side of it, we may walk very much by sight, and not by faith, depending upon effort more than upon fervent prayer, losing heart or growing unduly elated by the fluctuating tokens which meet us from without, rather than strengthening ourselves in calm communion with and dependence upon our God.

Men have been discouraged from a practical carrying out of the principle of trust into their daily lives, and their efforts for the cause of Christ, from the fear of running into the opposite evils of presumption and fanaticism. To take the promises of Scripture in reference to the hearing and answering of prayer, with any great literalness, has seemed to them contrary to the dictates of common prudence and common sense. Hence there has grown up in connection with the Lord's work, all the complicated machiney of expedients for procuring the needful means, which the world employs, in carrying forward its objects. And we begin to believe that both in regard to the temporal wants of the Christian, and the means needful for carrying on the work of the Lord in the world, Christian people have espoused to a criminal degree the principles and policy of worldly wisdom. They have shrunk from an excess of pietism, and have become entangled in naturalism. The Christian world of to-day, carried away with the active spirit of the age, is in danger of trusting in work, instead of working by trust.

Nevertheless, the Church has not been without bright examples of the life of trust. They have been found in the humble and private walks of life; in unknown instances of the hopeful endurance of poverty, in which the necessary wants of the believer and his family have been supplied in answer to prayer, and in the patient, happy temper of the confirmed invalid, and the life-long sufferer, where unwavering, submissive trust, has converted their sick chambers into the banqueting house of the King, with the banner of his love spread over them, and all who drew near them, in the same spirit.—Selected.

"God is not a Man that He should Lie."

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

BR. STORRS:—The Millerites, in Boston, seem to be in a peck of trouble for fear some recent articles in the Advent Herald on the restoration of Israel should upset their theory of arrogating to themselves all the promises God has made to his ancient people, in the latter day. Their arguments, or rather bare assertions, put me in mind of the three reasons a man gave for not doing a certain thing. The first was, it was impossible; the other two reasons were of little account after this. Thus these modern Hamanites give us four reasons against the restoration of Israel to their their own land, and the reign of Christ on David's throne.

1st.—A literal interpretation of these promises is impossible ! Cavilers of old would have a much better excuse than this for rejecting the literal interpretation of the prophecies respecting the first Advent. Can a virgin conceive and bear a son ?

2d.—The restoration of Israel has already taken place.

3d.—These promises are conditional, and these wicked Jews have frustrated the gracious purposes of God, and made his word, promise, and oath of none effect; both to themselves and all their posterity !

4th.—Although all the promises already fulfilled were literal, we must spiritualize all those yet in the future so as to agree with our theory !

Truly, this is an easy way of bridging over their slough of despond. True to the proverb, "He who is convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." This is Millerism "dyed in the wool." All the blindness of the present day is not Jewish; some of it is Gentile. Those who are determined not to see, deserve to be blind, and will, I fear, fall into the ditch with those who choose to be led by them. To rescue some honest Advent believers from this dangerous position I would warn them of the danger, reminding them that both the wise and foolish virgins were all Advent believers; but only five of them had the light of truth in their vessels with their lamps, and entered with the bridegroom to the marriage supper.

As to those who pervert the sure word of prophecy to suit their own purpose, "they are joined to idols; let them alone." They have often proved their wisdom, or rather the lack of it, in understanding the time; let us not be slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken, but diligently study the signs of the times that portend the nearness of that day when all these things shall be accomplished in spite of the opposition and unbelief of a sinful world, and a carnal church. Yours in the love of truth, and hope of life.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE EDITOR has again had an additional tax on his physical energies by sickness in his family. His son has been confined to his bed, ever since the new year came in, with bilious fever; which has reduced him to almost perfect helplessness. His fever is now gone; but it is likely it will be weeks before he will be able to leave his sick chamber, as his recovery evidently will be very slow. Our friends will, therefore, excuse us if there should seem to be a lack of Editorial attention to matters relating to the paper: we shall do the best we can.

Our author says, "The penalty of sin is death."—p. 48. But he had said, "Before Adam was put in the garden, he was subject to the law of corruption common to all animals ....he was a dying creature."—p. 42. Now, as "before Adam knew good and evil," [that is, before he sinned] "his condemnation was ordained," [p. 42], how could death be the penalty of sin ? Death, it seems, to the first Adam was "ordained before" he sinned, if he ever sinned at all, which can hardly be proved upon the premises our author has laid down; for God condemned His own work as sinful "before" He tested it; and how can we escape the conclusion that, he who makes a sinful work is the sinner ? Our author says :

"This is the solution of the mystery of sin. The animal nature is cursed; the spiritual is justified."—p. 48.

Who "cursed the animal nature ?" According to our author's previous statement, God did it when he made it; or, rather He made a "cursed" thing, called "man," and "condemned" it "at the outset as not fitted for the dominion," He told him to exercise; but which, all the while, he had "reserved for the perfect man," the second Adam.—p. 42. In summing up, our author says :

"1. The condemnation is on the animal nature: the justification is on the spiritual nature."—p. 48.

But God "justifieth the ungodly," (Rom. iv. 5,) and the spiritaul nature, you maintain could not sin; consequently never was or can be "ungodly," and hence is not the subject of "justifiication," because it is the "ungodly" that God justifieth "by faith" which they exercise. Again our author says:

"2. Adam, as the representative of the animal nature, was condemned: Jesus, as the representative of the spiritual nature, was justified."—p. 49.

This is true: but the condemnation and justification both resulted from trial, first had. Both were men: each had a fair trial. The first failed by not using the divine help within his reach; the last triumphed because he received that which the first neglected; and thus was filled "with the Holy Spirit and with power" thereby. Our author goes on :

"5. ....Sin was imputed to us before birth, because a fleshly nature cannot do righteous or spiritual deeds; so righteousnees is imputed to us before our birth into the future or spiritual state, because the spiritual nature cannot perform any but righteous deeds."—p. 49.

Thus, it seems, neither nature has any real trial, for each nature acts precisely as it was created to act, and "cannot" act otherwise than it does. If such a position does not destroy all blame or praise-worthiness, we fail to see how it could be done. That is what we call "christian fatalism." We call it so, first, because christian men hold that view: and we call it so, second, because, in reality, the Creator is the only responsible being; for, both the animal and the spiritual man act just as they were made to act, and "cannot" do otherwise. The one "cannot do righteous deeds;" the other, "cannot perform any but righteous" ones. So, all the blame or praise, in each case, rests on the projector of such "machines," for they run just as he contrived them to run. That is fatalism.

Our author concludes his remarks on "THE MYSTERY OF SIN," by quoting Rom. v., where the apostle speaks of "the offence of one," and "by one man's offence death reigned;" and "therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation," &c. We refer to his quotation only to say, If his theory be true, we do not see how it could possibly be an "offence" to do what Adam did, seeing it was impossible for him to do otherwise, his Creator having put him under a law which He knew Adam had no capacity to obey. But as Paul calls Adam's act an "offence" and a "sin," we think our author's theory comes under "condemnation," and we "cannot" but desire he may yet see it so, and abandon it.

Before we close, it seems incumbent on us to notice some of the texts which the author thinks prove or illustrate his view. To prove that sin existed before Adam's trial he quotes and comments as follows :

"'Until the law sin was in the world.' It existed from the beginning in the animal nature. But without a commandment, Adam would never have known sin: 'for sin is not imputed where then is no law.' (Rom. v. 13.)" p. 43.

We think our author's mistake here is in supposing that Paul refers to the law given to Adam; whereas, it seems to us perfectly clear, he speaks of the law given by Moses. We might go into a lengthy demonstration of the correctness of our view as to what law is spoken of, and show that it must be true from the fact, there can be no such thing as sin without law; "for sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John iii. 4. Hence sin did not "exist" before a law was given. If it "existed from the beginning in the animal nature," it was the Creator's work. But that we "cannot" admit. That the law of which Paul speaks, Rom. v. 13, was that given by Moses, seems evident, from the fact that he immediately adds, "Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." "Death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," said Paul; "For until the law" [given by Moses] "sin was in the world"—therefore all must "have sinned"—"but sin is not imputed when there is no law:" therefore, there must have been some law, or sin could not "have existed." But before the law given by Moses came into being, "sin was in the world;" for "death reigned from Adam to Moses." Certainly, then, some law was violated; for "sin is not imputed when there is no law.'' But the law given by Moses had not been in operation. Was there any other thing which Paul had reference to ? Let him speak for himself. He says: "When the Gentiles, which have no" [written] "law" [like that given by Moses] "do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law" [of Moses] "are a law unto themselves : which show the work of the law written in their hearts," [though not npon "tables of stone," as Moses' law was,] "their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else ex cusing one another." Rom. ii. 14, 15.

There was a law, then, though it was not "written and engraven on stone;" hence, "sin was in the world" before the law of Moses had existence; otherwise sin could not have been "imputed," because it would not have had existence, seeing "sin is the transgression of the law.'' But sin did exist before the law given by Moses, therefore there was some other law, "written in their hearts," and "death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression :" for he sinned against a positive law, clearly expressed in words by his Creator.

We sum up this point thus : Before the law given by Moses, there was sin in the world; hence, there must have been some law, for when there is no law there is, in the nature of the case, no sin, because there is no transgression, and "cannot" be. But sin was "imputed" to men before the law by Moses; and hence a law had been in existence and was transgressed; and "all had sinned," and so "death reigned" all the way down "from Adam to Moses," if we except Enoch.

Our author says:

"As Esau was condemned to be supplanted by Jacob, so the first Adam was condemned to give way to the last."—p. 42.

The objection we have to this statement is, mainly, in the expression "condemned." That expression imports trial and failure. Without trial and failure there could be no just condemnation. But our author uses the expression with manifest design to carry the idea that Adam was condemned and rejected without trial, and before it. As to Esau, he was not "condemned to be supplanted." God is no supplanter; for that signifies to "remove, or displace by stratagem; to trip up the heels of another;" or, in other words, to deprive another of that which of right belongs to him. God did not do this in Esau's case. He had the right to confer the honor of the progenitorship of Messiah upon any individual He pleased; and by that sovereign right he chose Jacob rather than Esau; neither of them could claim it of right. The work of man's redemption was of grace, favor, and not of nature. Jacob was a supplanter, and a most wicked one, too. This leads us to remark upon our author's views on the case of Esau and Jacob. He says:

"Before they were born the struggle between the animal man and the spiritual commenced." . . . . "'That the purpose of God, according to election, might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth;' neither child 'having done good or evil.' "Esau and Jacob were thus typical characters, answering to the two Adams." . . . . "Because the younger" [Jacob] "took the elder" [Esau] "by the heel, he was called Jacob—the taker by the heel, or the supplanter; and he was predestined to supplant Esau, as the spiritual Adam was preordained to supplant the animal Adam."—pp. 52, 53

The spiritual Adam never did and never will supplant the animal Adam : such an act would be worse than the sin of Adam. That the spiritual Adam will supersede the animal Adam —the animal having been tried and failed,—is true. But that He was "preordained to supplant" the first Adam, we "cannot" admit. Perhaps some can see no difference between supplanting and superseding. But to our mind the difference is as wide as sin and holiness. Supplanting is a sin. Superseding, under certain circumstances, not only does no injury to the superseded party, but may be the very means by which the person shall arise to a greater and better lot than he would otherwise have found it possible to possess. By the introduction of the spiritual man, the animal one, beyond a limited period, is "rendered useless;" because the spiritual one is "above" more exalted, and more durable. So by the second Adam, we may have our animal nature superseded by a spiritual, and great is the grace which accomplishes it.

Our author has characterized Jacob and Esau, before they were born, the one as animal, the other as spiritual; and says, "Before they were born the struggle between the animal and the spiritual commenced." After they were born he speaks of them in this wise:

"Esau could not appreciate his birthright, and surrendered it for the temporary gratification of his animal craving. How the brute comes out in the remark, 'Behold, I am going to die; and what profit will this birthright do me ?' His vision was limited by the horizon of this animal life; but Jacob, with his spiritual eye, looked beyond, and eagerly purchased what his brother despised."—p. 53.

Here are most astonishing positions. "Esau could not appreciate his birthright." Why ? Because his brother "was predestined to supplant" him. No wonder he could not appreciate that which omnipotence was pledged to see that he should not have. He must have been more than an almighty "animal" to have performed such a feat. But our beloved brother flounders here by not perceiving the difference between the birthright and being the progenitor of the Messiah. Esau might have retained his birthright without affecting God's purpose, "according to election," of making Jacob the progenitor of Messiah. If he doubts this, let him look at the fact that God gave "the birthright to Joseph," while he made Judah the progenitor of "Shiloh," Gen. xlix. The birthright was not essential to Jacob; but, like something worse than a "brute," he contrived to wrest it from his brother, and took the opportunity when "Esau came from the field and was faint," and asked Jacob to give him some of his "pottage." "No," says the imaginary "spiritual" man; "you may die for aught I care, unless you will 'sell me this day thy birthright.'" What shall we think of such a "spiritual" man ? Is he "a type of the second Adam ?" "Die, and you will, you 'animal' man, unless you will 'sell me thy birthright.'" The "good Lord deliver us" from such spiritual men as Jacob then was.

Well, saith Esau, "Behold I am at the point to die: and what profit shall this birthright do me ?" This conclusion was unjustifiable in Esau; but, if Jacob had a "spiritual eye," as our author affirms, he knew it would be a great sin for Esau to make the sale he demanded of him; and yet he persisted in his demand, and made Esau swear to it—"Swear to me this day," said this "type of Christ." When did Christ ever demand any man to "swear" to sin ? Yet Jacob did it. Was he "spiritual ?" had he a "spiritual eye ?" To be spiritual is to be a "partaker of the divine nature." "God 'cannot' be tempted of evil; neither tempteth He any man," Jas. i. 13; but Jacob was tempted to do evil, and did it; and he labored to get his brother into sin, and succeeded. That does not look like his being "spiritual." No, he was "carnal, sold under sin," at that time; which will appear more fully as we contemplate his lying and hypocrisy in "supplanting" Esau, when he went before his blind father, prepared by the help of a lying mother, to deceive the old patriarch Jacob had some scruples in attempting the hypocritical game, and suggested them to his mother, and said, "I shall bring a curse upon me, and not a blessing." But his mother—a true daughter of ignorant Eve, probably—quieted his conscience, by saying, "Upon me be thy curse, my son;" and then she dressed him in Esau's clothes, and put the skins of kids of the goats upon his hands and neck, so as effectually to deceive the blind father. Thus prepared and armed with a bundle of lies, he could not have appeared very spiritual. But he goes to his father. First lie—"I am Esau thy first born." Second lie "I have done as thou badest me." Isaac doubts, and says, "How is it thou hast found the venison so quickly, my son ?" Third tremendous lie—"Because the LORD thy God brought it to me." Isaac still doubts, but he can't see, so he says "come near, that I may feel of thee, whether thou be my very son Esau, or not." Fourth lie and hypocrisy: he let his father feel the skins his mother had put on his hands and neck, in imitation of Esau, who "was a hairy man." Thus he stole a blessing; but God never suffered Jacob, personally, to inherit the blessing; for, Esau never served Jacob, personally; the prophecy only had its fulfilment in their posterity as "two nations, and two manner of people," and not two individuals, as our author's theory implies, if it does not express it. Jacob, personally, never inherited the birthright that he so villainously attempted to wrest from his brother. That birthright included the possession of the main portion of his father's temporal property, as may be seen in the case of Abraham to Isaac; for "Abraham gave all that he had to Isaac." Gen. xxv. 5; but he "gave gifts" to his other children. Isaac's temporal possessions, embraced in the birthright, Jacob, in person, never had; it is likely Esau, alone, personally inherited the birthright, and Jacob was punished for his attempt to supplant him. A curse truly came on Jacob, personally, and his mother, who imprecated it on herself; for Jacob was soon compelled to leave his father's house for foreign parts, and did not return till his mother was dead. In his wanderings, God appeared to him, in a dream, and Jacob, when he awoke, said, "Surely the LORD is in this place, and I knew it not." Not very "spiritual" yet, not much of a "spiritual eye." Well, was he not then converted ? No. He acted just as many do now, when awakened to the things of God and his kingdom; he "vowed a vow." And what was it? "I take thee for my God henceforth and forever ?" No. But, "If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace: then shall the LORD be my God," &c. Gen. xxviii. 16–51. I do not take thee for my God now, but if thou wilt give me "animal" prosperity for an indefinite number of years, "then" thou shalt be my God. Is there anything in all his talk that differs essentially from that of many reckless young men, who sometimes are seized with conviction, but postpone immediate submission to God ? True, God had determined that in the line of Jacob Messiah should come, and therefore preserved him, notwithstanding all his wickedness and procrastination.

"Good and Bad Features."

I admire the HERALD OF LIFE very much for one of its features—"non-resurrection of the wicked dead." I have for a long time believed this. Now for the bad feature (in my estimation) "Probation after the Advent;" or, probation after the expiration of 6,000 years. How can you believe it ?

TIMOTHY WHEELER.

Waterbury Centre, Vt.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.—Because we cannot see any authority to limit the period of probation to "6,000 years," or to any other period. We have sought in vain for any such limitation. We felt as you do on the subject, and preached it, too, twenty-four years since: but early in 1844, we became convinced the idea was a fancy, unfounded in the Scriptures of Truth; and we abandoned it as a fiction. Christ "shall be a Priest upon his throne:" Zech. vi. 13. And "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end:" Isa. ix. 7. "The Lord God shall give unto him [JESUS] the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32, 33. "All nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest." So sang those upon "the sea of glass," Rev. xv. Yea, "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come .... whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. xxii. When "the Bride" is in the possession of her inheritance, she will invite others to life eternal, under a more perfect dispensation than the world ever saw. The incorrigibly wicked, who have "corrupted the earth," will have been cut off, and hireling preachers will have no part in the pure word of life—"clear as crystal"—then to be proclaimed. "Verily," such priests "have their reward." They regarded popularity and worldly gain, rather than "the water of life, clear as crystal;" their ministry will end, and their willing or willful admirers, who hang upon their skirts, will go down to perdition with the "shepherds," who have "fed themselves, and not the flock," in that day when Christ will "spoil their pastures." See Ezk. xxxiv. 8, and Jer. xxv. 34–36, Then shall begin the true ministry—a ministry purified and glorified with their Head, going forth to the "left of the nations," after "the judgments" of God have been "made manifest;" then shall "a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal" appear; and "the tree of life, which bare twelve fruits, yielding her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree for the healing of the nations," be brought into use. Take courage, brother, the traditions, connected with inherent immortality and endless misery, will wear away gradually, if we are only patient and sit as little children at the feet of Jesus and "all the prophets" and hear what they "have spoken." A blessed work is yet to be accomplished in the earth, when Christ is King on David's throne and his perfected saints are "kings and priests" with him. "Fear not: only believe."

"Inconsistencies."

BY MRS. L. R. K. BISHOP.

TO A. P. MOORE, DANSVILLE, N. Y.—I am not positive whether I have the pleasure addressing abrother or sister; neither does it matter, so long as they are "all one in Christ Jesus." Then, without preliminaries, I will come directly to the subject.

In your article on "Inconsistencies," published in the Crisis of Nov. 28th, occurs the following passage. "It is inconsistent for a man to profess to believe in the future punishment of the wicked, and then believe that they will not have a resurrection."

It is evident from other portions of your article above referred to, that you entertain the views advocated by your chosen organ, that death is a state of utter unconsciousness, and that "all the wicked will God destroy."

From this stand-point, then, permit me to present a few thoughts for your careful consideration.

Now, when he who is "accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead," shall be raised to life; and the man that has wandered out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead; it is evident that you can object to the term "future punishment," as being appropriately applied to the last named sad result of personal transgression, only on the principle that in your mind it takes conscious suffering, mental, or physical, or both, to constitute punishment. But just here you are involved in a difficulty. If it takes conscious suffering to constitute punishment at the day of judgment, unless punishment can exist without its constituent elements, which is an absurdity in itself, it will take conscious suffering to constitute punishment an age after the judgment, and so on through the endless ages of eternity. Here is a dilemma, either horn of which is fatal to the theory it is presumed you entertain. Grasp the one, and eternal torment, with all its attendant horrors, is reinstated in your creed. Take the other, and you find yourself face to face with that "plain statement" of Christ, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment;" and you truly remark, "It is inconsistent for a man to profess to be a believer in, and follower of Christ, and at the same time deny some of his plain statements."

"Yet show I unto you a more excellent way." Let loss of life—a loss of all that might have been gained; in short, let death and not dying be the wages due to sin, and all is plain. Just so long as that loss is not repaired, so long as the death-sleep of the wicked remains unbroken, so long will be their punishment. Thus we have both future and eternal punishment: but alas for the doctrine of the relieving of the wicked dead; there remains no breath in it.

Allow me now to add a few items to your list of "inconsistencies," which, if well done, will serve to show that somebody's theory is sadly in need of a "reconstruction;" and may possibly indicate the line of "policy" best fitted for its successful accomplishment.

1. It is inconsistent to believe that death is the penalty of the law, and then claim that those sinners on whose throat the law already has its fatal clutch, must by main force be wrested from its grasp, and then as forcibly returned again to their old quarters, in order that the demands of justice may be satisfied: and the inconsistency reaches its climax, when it is gravely asserted that this wrenching the victim from the law's grasp, and the necessary struggle to restore him again to its possession; is the true doctrine of "future punishment!"

2. It is inconsistent to claim that the death we die in Adam is not the penalty of the law, and then believe that Christ, by his death satisfied its penalty for us when we acknowledge he only died the Adamic death !

3. It is inconsistent to proclaim that the "second death" (meaning to die a second time) is the penalty for personal transgression, and then expect to be saved from the effects of our personal sins by the "vicarious death of Christ," when we know that he was only "once offered," and "being raised from the dead, dieth no more."

It is inconsistent to believe that Christ, the Son of God, and the Son of Mary, is the free gift of God to a world of sinners, if we put a construction upon the law and its penality that shall necessitate such a divine arrangement, in order to give the law its just claims on man. Let me explain: Paul teaches that without Christ, a resurrection of the dead is impossible. Now, if the law is not satisfied unless the sinner dies a second time, God was absolutely shut up to the necessity of providing some plan of redemption from the first death, in order to satisfy the claims of his own justice. But the plan of redemption is everywhere represented as a gratuity; an embodiment of God's matchless benevolence; a manifestation of his boundless love: "God hath manifested his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us;" consequently for our success in life. Even in much of our labor for the kingdom of God, especially for the secular side of it, we may walk very much by sight, and not by faith, depending upon effort more than upon fervent prayer, losing heart or growing unduly elated by the fluctuating tokens which meet us from without, rather than strengthening ourselves in calm communion with and dependence upon our God.

Men have been discouraged from a practical carrying out of the principle of trust into their daily lives, and their efforts for the cause of Christ, from the fear of running into the opposite evils of presumption and fanaticism. To take the promises of Scripture in reference to the hearing and answering of prayer, with any great literalness, has seemed to them contrary to the dictates of common prudence and common sense. Hence there has grown up in connection with the Lord's work, all the complicated machiney of expedients for procuring the needful means, which the world employs, in carrying forward its objects. And we begin to believe that both in regard to the temporal wants of the Christian, and the means needful for carrying on the work of the Lord in the world, Christian people have espoused to a criminal degree the principles and policy of worldly wisdom. They have shrunk from an excess of pietism, and have become entangled in naturalism. The Christian world of to-day, carried away with the active spirit of the age, is in danger of trusting in work, instead of working by trust.

Nevertheless, the Church has not been without bright examples of the life of trust. They have been found in the humble and private walks of life; in unknown instances of the hopeful endurance of poverty, in which the necessary wants of the believer and his family have been supplied in answer to prayer, and in the patient, happy temper of the confirmed invalid, and the life-long sufferer, where unwavering, submissive trust, has converted their sick chambers into the banqueting house of the King, with the banner of his love spread over them, and all who drew near them, in the same spirit.—Selected.

"God is not a Man that He should Lie."

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

Br. Storrs:—The Millerites, in Boston, seem to be in a peck of trouble for fear some recent articles in the Advent Herald on the restoration of Israel should upset their theory of arrogating to themselves all the promises God has made to his ancient people, in the latter day. Their arguments, or rather bare assertions, put me in mind of the three reasons a man gave for not doing a certain thing. The first was, it was impossible; the other two reasons were of little account after this. Thus these modern Hamanites give us four reasons against the restoration of Israel to their their own land, and the reign of Christ on David's throne.

1st.—A literal interpretation of these promises is impossible! Cavilers of old would have a much better excuse than this for rejecting the literal interpretation of the prophecies respecting the first Advent. Can a virgin conceive and bear a son?

2d.—The restoration of Israel has already taken place.

3d.—These promises are conditional, and these wicked Jews have frustrated the gracious purposes of God, and made his word, promise, and oath of none effect; both to themselves and all their posterity!

4th.—Although all the promises already fulfilled were literal, we must spiritualize all those yet in the future so as to agree with our theory!

Truly, this is an easy way of bridging over their slough of despond. True to the proverb, "He who is convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." This is Millerism "dyed in the wool." All the blindness of the present day is not Jewish; some of it is Gentile. Those who are determined not to see, deserve to be blind, and will, I fear, fall into the ditch with those who choose to be led by them. To rescue some honest Advent believers from this dangerous position I would warn them of the danger, reminding them that both the wise and foolish virgins were all Advent believers; but only five of them had the light of truth in their vessels with their lamps, and entered with the bridegroom to the marriage supper.

As to those who pervert the sure word of prophecy to suit their own purpose, "they are joined to idols; let them alone." They have often proved their wisdom, or rather the lack of it, in understanding the time; let us not be slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken, but diligently study the signs of the times that portend the nearness of that day when all these things shall be accomplished in spite of the opposition and unbelief of a sinful world, and a carnal church. Yours in the love of truth, and hope of life.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Editor has again had an additional tax on his physical energies by sickness in his family. His son has been confined to his bed, ever since the new year came in, with bilious fever; which has reduced him to almost perfect helplessness. His fever is now gone; but it is likely it will be weeks before he will be able to leave his sick chamber, as his recovery evidently will be very slow. Our friends will, therefore, excuse us if there should seem to be a lack of Editorial attention to matters relating to the paper: we shall do the best we can.

Our author says, "The penalty of sin is death."—p. 48. But he had said, "Before Adam was put in the garden, he was subject to the law of corruption common to all animals ....he was a dying creature."—p. 42. Now, as "before Adam knew good and evil," [that is, before he sinned] "his condemnation was ordained," [p. 42], how could death be the penalty of sin? Death, it seems, to the first Adam was "ordained before" he sinned, if he ever sinned at all, which can hardly be proved upon the premises our author has laid down; for God condemned His own work as sinful "before" He tested it; and how can we escape the conclusion that, he who makes a sinful work is the sinner? Our author says:

"This is the solution of the mystery of sin. The animal nature is cursed; the spiritual is justified."—p. 48.

Who "cursed the animal nature?" According to our author's previous statement, God did it when he made it; or, rather He made a "cursed" thing, called "man," and "condemned" it "at the outset as not fitted for the dominion," He told him to exercise; but which, all the while, he had "reserved for the perfect man," the second Adam.—p. 42. In summing up, our author says:

"1. The condemnation is on the animal nature: the justification is on the spiritual nature."—p. 48.

But God "justifieth the ungodly," (Rom. iv. 5,) and the spiritaul nature, you maintain could not sin; consequently never was or can be "ungodly," and hence is not the subject of "justifiication," because it is the "ungodly" that God justifieth "by faith" which they exercise. Again our author says:

"2. Adam, as the representative of the animal nature, was condemned: Jesus, as the representative of the spiritual nature, was justified."—p. 49.

This is true: but the condemnation and justification both resulted from trial, first had. Both were men: each had a fair trial. The first failed by not using the divine help within his reach; the last triumphed because he received that which the first neglected; and thus was filled "with the Holy Spirit and with power" thereby. Our author goes on:

"5. ....Sin was imputed to us before birth, because a fleshly nature cannot do righteous or spiritual deeds; so righteousnees is imputed to us before our birth into the future or spiritual state, because the spiritual nature cannot perform any but righteous deeds."—p. 49.

Thus, it seems, neither nature has any real trial, for each nature acts precisely as it was created to act, and "cannot" act otherwise than it does. If such a position does not destroy all blame or praise-worthiness, we fail to see how it could be done. That is what we call "christian fatalism." We call it so, first, because christian men hold that view: and we call it so, second, because, in reality, the Creator is the only responsible being; for, both the animal and the spiritual man act just as they were made to act, and "cannot" do otherwise. The one "cannot do righteous deeds;" the other, "cannot perform any but righteous" ones. So, all the blame or praise, in each case, rests on the projector of such "machines," for they run just as he contrived them to run. That is fatalism.

Our author concludes his remarks on "The Mystery of Sin," by quoting Rom. v., where the apostle speaks of "the offence of one," and "by one man's offence death reigned;" and "therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation," &c. We refer to his quotation only to say, If his theory be true, we do not see how it could possibly be an "offence" to do what Adam did, seeing it was impossible for him to do otherwise, his Creator having put him under a law which He knew Adam had no capacity to obey. But as Paul calls Adam's act an "offence" and a "sin," we think our author's theory comes under "condemnation," and we "cannot" but desire he may yet see it so, and abandon it.

Before we close, it seems incumbent on us to notice some of the texts which the author thinks prove or illustrate his view. To prove that sin existed before Adam's trial he quotes and comments as follows:

"'Until the law sin was in the world.' It existed from the beginning in the animal nature. But without a commandment, Adam would never have known sin: 'for sin is not imputed where then is no law.' (Rom. v. 13.)" p. 43.

We think our author's mistake here is in supposing that Paul refers to the law given to Adam; whereas, it seems to us perfectly clear, he speaks of the law given by Moses. We might go into a lengthy demonstration of the correctness of our view as to what law is spoken of, and show that it must be true from the fact, there can be no such thing as sin without law; "for sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John iii. 4. Hence sin did not "exist" before a law was given. If it "existed from the beginning in the animal nature," it was the Creator's work. But that we "cannot" admit. That the law of which Paul speaks, Rom. v. 13, was that given by Moses, seems evident, from the fact that he immediately adds, "Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." "Death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," said Paul; "For until the law" [given by Moses] "sin was in the world"—therefore all must "have sinned"—" but sin is not imputed when there is no law:" therefore, there must have been some law, or sin could not "have existed." But before the law given by Moses came into being, "sin was in the world;" for "death reigned from Adam to Moses." Certainly, then, some law was violated; for "sin is not imputed when there is no law." But the law given by Moses had not been in operation. Was there any other thing which Paul had reference to? Let him speak for himself. He says: "When the Gentiles, which have no" [written] "law" [like that given by Moses] "do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law" [of Moses] "are a law unto themselves: which show the work of the law written in their hearts," [though not npon "tables of stone," as Moses' law was,] "their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else ex cusing one another." Rom. ii. 14, 15.

There was a law, then, though it was not "written and engraven on stone;" hence, "sin was in the world" before the law of Moses had existence; otherwise sin could not have been "imputed," because it would not have had existence, seeing "sin is the transgression of the law." But sin did exist before the law given by Moses, therefore there was some other law, "written in their hearts," and "death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression:" for he sinned against a positive law, clearly expressed in words by his Creator.

We sum up this point thus: Before the law given by Moses, there was sin in the world; hence, there must have been some law, for when there is no law there is, in the nature of the case, no sin, because there is no transgression, and "cannot" be. But sin was "imputed" to men before the law by Moses; and hence a law had been in existence and was transgressed; and "all had sinned," and so "death reigned" all the way down "from Adam to Moses," if we except Enoch.

Our author says:

"As Esau was condemned to be supplanted by Jacob, so the first Adam was condemned to give way to the last."—p. 42.

The objection we have to this statement is, mainly, in the expression "condemned." That expression imports trial and failure. Without trial and failure there could be no just condemnation. But our author uses the expression with manifest design to carry the idea that Adam was condemned and rejected without trial, and before it. As to Esau, he was not "condemned to be supplanted." God is no supplanter; for that signifies to "remove, or displace by stratagem; to trip up the heels of another;" or, in other words, to deprive another of that which of right belongs to him. God did not do this in Esau's case. He had the right to confer the honor of the progenitorship of Messiah upon any individual He pleased; and by that sovereign right he chose Jacob rather than Esau: neither of them could claim it of right. The work of man's redemption was of grace, favor, and not of nature. Jacob was a supplanter, and a most wicked one, too. This leads us to remark upon our author's views on the case of Esau and Jacob. He says:

"Before they were born the struggle between the animal man and the spiritual commenced." . . . . "'That the purpose of God, according to election, might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth;' neither child 'having done good or evil.' "Esau and Jacob were thus typical characters, answering to the two Adams." . . . . "Because the younger" [Jacob] "took the elder" [Esau] "by the heel, he was called Jacob—the taker by the heel, or the supplanter; and he was predestined to supplant Esau, as the spiritual Adam was preordained to supplant the animal Adam."—pp. 52, 53

The spiritual Adam never did and never will supplant the animal Adam: such an act would be worse than the sin of Adam. That the spiritual Adam will supersede the animal Adam—the animal having been tried and failed,—is true. But that He was "preordained to supplant" the first Adam, we "cannot" admit. Perhaps some can see no difference between supplanting and superseding. But to our mind the difference is as wide as sin and holiness. Supplanting is a sin. Superseding, under certain circumstances, not only does no injury to the superseded party, but may be the very means by which the person shall arise to a greater and better lot than he would otherwise have found it possible to possess. By the introduction of the spiritual man, the animal one, beyond a limited period, is "rendered useless;" because the spiritual one is "above" more exalted, and more durable. So by the second Adam, we may have our animal nature superseded by a spiritual, and great is the grace which accomplishes it.

Our author has characterized Jacob and Esau, before they were born, the one as animal, the other as spiritual; and says, "Before they were born the struggle between the animal and the spiritual commenced." After they were born he speaks of them in this wise:

"Esau could not appreciate his birthright, and surrendered it for the temporary gratification of his animal craving. How the brute comes out in the remark, 'Behold, I am going to die; and what profit will this birthright do me?' His vision was limited by the horizon of this animal life; but Jacob, with his spiritual eye, looked beyond, and eagerly purchased what his brother despised."—p. 53.

Here are most astonishing positions. "Esau could not appreciate his birthright." Why? Because his brother "was predestined to supplant" him. No wonder he could not appreciate that which omnipotence was pledged to see that he should not have. He must have been more than an almighty "animal" to have performed such a feat. But our beloved brother flounders here by not perceiving the difference between the birthright and being the progenitor of the Messiah. Esau might have retained his birthright without affecting God's purpose, "according to election," of making Jacob the progenitor of Messiah. If he doubts this, let him look at the fact that God gave "the birthright to Joseph," while he made Judah the progenitor of "Shiloh," Gen. xlix. The birthright was not essential to Jacob; but, like something worse than a "brute," he contrived to wrest it from his brother, and took the opportunity when "Esau came from the field and was faint," and asked Jacob to give him some of his "pottage." "No," says the imaginary "spiritual" man; "you may die for aught I care, unless you will 'sell me this day thy birthright.'" What shall we think of such a "spiritual" man? Is he "a type of the second Adam?" "Die, and you will, you 'animal' man, unless you will 'sell me thy birthright.'" The "good Lord deliver us" from such spiritual men as Jacob then was.

Well, saith Esau, "Behold I am at the point to die: and what profit shall this birthright do me?" This conclusion was unjustifiable in Esau; but, if Jacob had a "spiritual eye," as our author affirms, he knew it would be a great sin for Esau to make the sale he demanded of him; and yet he persisted in his demand, and made Esau swear to it—"Swear to me this day," said this "type of Christ." When did Christ ever demand any man to "swear" to sin? Yet Jacob did it. Was he "spiritual?" had he a "spiritual eye?" To be spiritual is to be a "partaker of the divine nature." "God 'cannot' be tempted of evil; neither tempteth He any man," Jas. i. 13; but Jacob was tempted to do evil, and did it; and he labored to get his brother into sin, and succeeded. That does not look like his being "spiritual." No, he was "carnal, sold under sin," at that time; which will appear more fully as we contemplate his lying and hypocrisy in "supplanting" Esau, when he went before his blind father, prepared by the help of a lying mother, to deceive the old patriarch Jacob had some scruples in attempting the hypocritical game, and suggested them to his mother, and said, "I shall bring a curse upon me, and not a blessing." But his mother—a true daughter of ignorant Eve, probably—quieted his conscience, by saying, "Upon me be thy curse, my son;" and then she dressed him in Esau's clothes, and put the skins of kids of the goats upon his hands and neck, so as effectually to deceive the blind father. Thus prepared and armed with a bundle of lies, he could not have appeared very spiritual. But he goes to his father. First lie—"I am Esau thy first born." Second lie "I have done as thou badest me." Isaac doubts, and says, "How is it thou hast found the venison so quickly, my son?" Third tremendous lie—"Because the Lord thy God brought it to me." Isaac still doubts, but he can't see, so he says "come near, that I may feel of thee, whether thou be my very son Esau, or not." Fourth lie and hypocrisy: he let his father feel the skins his mother had put on his hands and neck, in imitation of Esau, who "was a hairy man." Thus he stole a blessing; but God never suffered Jacob, personally, to inherit the blessing; for, Esau never served Jacob, personally; the prophecy only had its fulfilment in their posterity as "two nations, and two manner of people," and not two individuals, as our author's theory implies, if it does not express it. Jacob, personally, never inherited the birthright that he so villainously attempted to wrest from his brother. That birthright included the possession of the main portion of his father's temporal property, as may be seen in the case of Abraham to Isaac; for "Abraham gave all that he had to Isaac." Gen. xxv. 5; but he "gave gifts" to his other children. Isaac's temporal possessions, embraced in the birthright, Jacob, in person, never had; it is likely Esau, alone, personally inherited the birthright, and Jacob was punished for his attempt to supplant him. A curse truly came on Jacob, personally, and his mother, who imprecated it on herself; for Jacob was soon compelled to leave his father's house for foreign parts, and did not return till his mother was dead. In his wanderings, God appeared to him, in a dream, and Jacob, when he awoke, said, "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not." Not very "spiritual" yet, not much of a "spiritual eye." Well, was he not then converted? No. He acted just as many do now, when awakened to the things of God and his kingdom; he "vowed a vow." And what was it? "I take thee for my God henceforth and forever?" No. But, "If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and raiment to put on, so that I come again to my father's house in peace: then shall the Lord be my God," &c. Gen. xxviii. 16–51. I do not take thee for my God now, but if thou wilt give me "animal" prosperity for an indefinite number of years, "then" thou shalt be my God. Is there anything in all his talk that differs essentially from that of many reckless young men, who sometimes are seized with conviction, but postpone immediate submission to God? True, God had determined that in the line of Jacob Messiah should come, and therefore preserved him, notwithstanding all his wickedness and procrastination.

"Good and Bad Features."

I admire the Herald of Life very much for one of its features—"non-resurrection of the wicked dead." I have for a long time believed this. Now for the bad feature (in my estimation) "Probation after the Advent;" or, probation after the expiration of 6,000 years. How can you believe it?

Timothy Wheeler.

Waterbury Centre, Vt.

Response by the Editor.—Because we cannot see any authority to limit the period of probation to "6,000 years," or to any other period. We have sought in vain for any such limitation. We felt as you do on the subject, and preached it, too, twenty-four years since: but early in 1844, we became convinced the idea was a fancy, unfounded in the Scriptures of Truth; and we abandoned it as a fiction. Christ "shall be a Priest upon his throne:" Zech. vi. 13. And "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end:" Isa. ix. 7. "The Lord God shall give unto him [Jesus] the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 32, 33. "All nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest." So sang those upon "the sea of glass," Rev. xv. Yea, "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come . . . . whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. xxii. When "the Bride" is in the possession of her inheritance, she will invite others to life eternal, under a more perfect dispensation than the world ever saw. The incorrigibly wicked, who have "corrupted the earth," will have been cut off, and hireling preachers will have no part in the pure word of life—"clear as crystal"—then to be proclaimed. "Verily," such priests "have their reward." They regarded popularity and worldly gain, rather than "the water of life, clear as crystal;" their ministry will end, and their willing or willful admirers, who hang upon their skirts, will go down to perdition with the "shepherds," who have "fed themselves, and not the flock," in that day when Christ will "spoil their pastures." See Ezk. xxxiv. 8, and Jer. xxv. 34–36, Then shall begin the true ministry—a ministry purified and glorified with their Head, going forth to the "left of the nations," after "the judgments" of God have been "made manifest;" then shall "a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal" appear; and "the tree of life, which bare twelve fruits, yielding her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree for the healing of the nations," be brought into use. Take courage, brother, the traditions, connected with inherent immortality and endless misery, will wear away gradually, if we are only patient and sit as little children at the feet of Jesus and "all the prophets" and hear what they "have spoken." A blessed work is yet to be accomplished in the earth, when Christ is King on David's throne and his perfected saints are "kings and priests" with him. "Fear not: only believe."

"Inconsistencies."

BY MRS. L. R. K. BISHOP.

To A. P. Moore, Dansville, N. Y.—I am not positive whether I have the pleasure addressing abrother or sister; neither does it matter, so long as they are "all one in Christ Jesus." Then, without preliminaries, I will come directly to the subject.

In your article on "Inconsistencies," published in the Crisis of Nov. 28th, occurs the following passage. "It is inconsistent for a man to profess to believe in the future punishment of the wicked, and then believe that they will not have a resurrection."

It is evident from other portions of your article above referred to, that you entertain the views advocated by your chosen organ, that death is a state of utter unconsciousness, and that "all the wicked will God destroy."

From this stand-point, then, permit me to present a few thoughts for your careful consideration.

Now, when he who is "accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead," shall be raised to life; and the man that has wandered out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead; it is evident that you can object to the term "future punishment," as being appropriately applied to the last named sad result of personal transgression, only on the principle that in your mind it takes conscious suffering, mental, or physical, or both, to constitute punishment. But just here you are involved in a difficulty. If it takes conscious suffering to constitute punishment at the day of judgment, unless punishment can exist without its constituent elements, which is an absurdity in itself, it will take conscious suffering to constitute punishment an age after the judgment, and so on through the endless ages of eternity. Here is a dilemma, either horn of which is fatal to the theory it is presumed you entertain. Grasp the one, and eternal torment, with all its attendant horrors, is reinstated in your creed. Take the other, and you find yourself face to face with that "plain statement" of Christ, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment;" and you truly remark, "It is inconsistent for a man to profess to be a believer in, and follower of Christ, and at the same time deny some of his plain statements."

"Yet show I unto you a more excellent way." Let loss of life—a loss of all that might have been gained; in short, let death and not dying be the wages due to sin, and all is plain. Just so long as that loss is not repaired, so long as the death-sleep of the wicked remains unbroken, so long will be their punishment. Thus we have both future and eternal punishment: but alas for the doctrine of the relieving of the wicked dead; there remains no breath in it.

Allow me now to add a few items to your list of "inconsistencies," which, if well done, will serve to show that somebody's theory is sadly in need of a "reconstruction;" and may possibly indicate the line of "policy" best fitted for its successful accomplishment.

1. It is inconsistent to believe that death is the penalty of the law, and then claim that those sinners on whose throat the law already has its fatal clutch, must by main force be wrested from its grasp, and then as forcibly returned again to their old quarters, in order that the demands of justice may be satisfied: and the inconsistency reaches its climax, when it is gravely asserted that this wrenching the victim from the law's grasp, and the necessary struggle to restore him again to its possession; is the true doctrine of "future punishment!"

2. It is inconsistent to claim that the death we die in Adam is not the penalty of the law, and then believe that Christ, by his death satisfied its penalty for us when we acknowledge he only died the Adamic death!

3. It is inconsistent to proclaim that the "second death" (meaning to die a second time) is the penalty for personal transgression, and then expect to be saved from the effects of our personal sins by the "vicarious death of Christ," when we know that he was only "once offered," and "being raised from the dead, dieth no more."

It is inconsistent to believe that Christ, the Son of God, and the Son of Mary, is the free gift of God to a world of sinners, if we put a construction upon the law and its penality that shall necessitate such a divine arrangement, in order to give the law its just claims on man. Let me explain: Paul teaches that without Christ, a resurrection of the dead is impossible. Now, if the law is not satisfied unless the sinner dies a second time, God was absolutely shut up to the necessity of providing some plan of redemption from the first death, in order to satisfy the claims of his own justice. But the plan of redemption is everywhere represented as a gratuity; an embodiment of God's matchless benevolence; a manifestation of his boundless love: "God hath manifested his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us;" consequently neither law nor justice can ever be made dependent upon any of its promises for the proper adjustment of their claims.

But while it is sometimes admitted that had there been no plan of redemption provided, death to a race of sinners would have been an eternal sleep; it is urged that in consequence of the rejection of that plan, so graciously provided, justice can only be satisfied with a second dying. Let me illustrate this idea of inflicting upon free moral agents, some new and strange punishment for the rejection of a free gift.

Suppose a man finds himself unpleasantly situated in a malarious district, sorrounded by barren fields and cheerless wastes. The hard and sterile soil, scarcely repays with life's barest necessities, his unremitting toil. The poisonous atmosphere gradually undermines his health and drinks up his spirits, till poverty and death stare him in the foce. Just then a gentleman of almost boundless wealth makes his acquaintance, and with many expressions of sympathy and kindness informs him that in his possession is a beautiful tate whose fields of deepest green are overarched with sunny skies; its groves are vocal with the melody of birds; its healthy atmosphere fragrant with the perfume of many flowers. Fountains sparkle in the sunlight, and silvery streamlets make soft music in the shady dells; while every tree that is good for food and pleasant to the sight spreads its fair branches in the spacious gardens. All this and more, he offers freely to bestow, on the sole condition that the title-deeds are accepted as a free gift of the donor. Now suppose the unfortunate man, either from pride or some other cause, refuses the princely gift, when, lo, his would-be benefactor lets lose the extortioner who catches all that he hath! Could you, in making the circle of the globe, find a man so insane as to believe that it was pure, disinterested benevolence, that prompted the bestowal of the gift in the first place?

How then would the development of such a principle in the divine plan, dim the glory of that sublime announcement, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Would that this comprehensive text might he printed in letters of gold! Would, rather, that men's minds might be so enlightened, their hearts so enlarged, that they might grasp its depth of mighty meaning, and fully comprehend its glorious import; how would it forever annihilate the idea of penalty as being attached to the gospel of the good God!

But I must close. lest I weary your patience. Permit me to ask your careful and prayerful attention to this subject; and may the blessing of the Lord that maketh rich and addeth no sorrow, attend you in your investigation. Respectfully yours.

F of the Palestine Colony.

We have already adverted to the Colony of Americans which left here last summer to settle in Palestine, offering our remonstrances against it as a mad undertaking. The end, and a sad one, has come sooner than we expected. Below we give an account of their sad plight just received from the Tribune correspondent at Beirut. The poor creatures who have been thus deluded, will have a barrowing tale of sorrow to tell, if any of them live or have means to return to their own happy country. When they left here full of bright visions of the joys promised them in that land that was soon to flow with milk and honey, they had $30,000 in gold, but it was confided to their leader, Adams, who, no doubt took good care of himself, and left his unfortunate victims to struggle with disease and poverty, and the chance mercy of a set of semi barbarians. But as the danger of any more recruits being duped into that demented scheme is now assured, we hope those who have been in any wise instrumental in giving the undertaking encouragement, will have their consciences pricked, so they may haste and do something to mitigate the distress brought on the poor suffering victims, that they may be enabled to escape their horrible sufferings and get back home. We give the extract in full.

"The colony of Americans which landed a few months since at Jaffa is learning from a bitter experience what it ought to have known before leaving America, that "Jordan is a hard road to travel." But if the reports received from them this week are true, their condition is too sad to be joked about, however absurd their movements may have been. The American Consul reports, as I understand, that the man who has organized the expedition has proved unworthy of the trust reposed in him, and the colonists find themselves in need of everything, or witout money either to return or stay where they are. They are suffering from the fevers of the country, and the mortality among them has been very great. Some 10 or 12 had died at last accounts, and others were sick. They wish to get back to America, and beg the Embassador to send a man-of-war to take them off. It is not characteristic of the Americans to give up under such trials; but they undoubtedly feel that they have been deluded. In a strange land, where they are as unprotected as they would be on a Texan frontier, without money, broken down by sickness, surrounded by those who speak only a strange language, and who look upon them as interlopers, it is not singular that their hearts should fail them. It is sad to think how many hearts have been broken by disappointment in that land, how many have deluded themselves into crusades to that land which we call the "Holy Land."

The Porte has made a formal protest against this colony, and has declared that they cannot permit Americans to colonize Palestine. They cannot allow foreigners to take possession of their most fertile province. It belongs, they say, to the natives, who pay taxes and do military service. Shall these be driven from their fields by a colony of Yankees, who will be subjects of another Government, and pay them nothing, who might even be inclined, some day, to take possession of the country? So they request Mr. Morris to send them home again. This protest came before the news given above, and, of course, Mr. Morris informed the Turks that he had no power to interfere with American citizens, who had a right to go where they pleased. Probably the French put the Turks up to making this protest. They look upon Syria as theirs, and it might interfere with their plans of conquest to have a colony of Americans at Jaffa the port of Jerusalem.

From Charles A. Hastings.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Dec. 30, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—I send you greeting with the term "Happy New Year;" and may it be doubly so to you and yours, a happy, happy New Year. Seeing in the HERALD that you had passed the days appointed to man, and that the promise had been fulfilled to you so far, "having the promise of the life that now is," (and I hope and trust, yea, I firmly believe that the remainder will be fulfilled to you) "and that which is to come." If so, then in the ages to come, the new years will roll around; and O, what happy new years; tongue cannot express it; freed from wearisome cares; freed from perplexity and sorrow; freed from sickness and death; a life eternal in the kingdom of God. O what blessing is held out to poor mortal man. Believe and live. But many, very many, are not allured; they say, If death is all the penalty for sin, we care not to serve God; we will do this, and we will do that. Poor creatures; if this life is all their hope, let them eat and drink, for to-morrow they die.

I have been listening to-day to a discourse from Br. Grant on the atonement. I also heard, last spring, a discourse on the same subject by a Swedenborgian. Of the two, I think, if I were obliged to choose, I should prefer the Swedenborgian view. Br. Grant says, "Christ died to atone for Adam's sin and we being in the loins of Adam, at the time, must die; but we not being responsible for what Adam did, justice demands that we should have our life restored. So Christ pays the debt due to the law, and brings back our life." A Query.—If the debt has been paid, why do men now die? Why does the innocent child die? Again he says, "The wages of sin is the second death; an eternal death." Now, for the sins which have been committed since Adam, he gave us no atonement; no debt has been paid for our sins! So you see how much hope there is for us; it is like the spider's web; yea, worse, for there is no hope. Further, if the second death is the wages of sin, meaning that men must be raised from the dead and die the second time, how does this tell by the side of the saying of our Saviour in John vi. 49, 50, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. This is the bread which cometh down from heaven that a man may eat thereof and not die?" Your fathers are dead. Have they died twice? The believer who has eat of the bread from heaven must die the first death, and Br. G. says, the debt has been paid. Oh, where is justice? "Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel!" It was believed by some of the early Jewish writers that "the men which brought up the evil report from the land, who died by the plague before the Lord," Num. xiv. 37, "that they died the second death." Did they die twice? or, say honestly, was it not the nature of the death? the state in which it places man? as in the testimony of early writers.

Another thought impresses itself on my mind. If Christ took upon himself our nature, as the scriptures testify, was not that nature in Adam, the same as our nature was, when the sentence of death was passed on Adam? And does he not come under the same condemnation that we do, so far as his nature partook of Adam? I do not see why it does not; hence the scripture—"Being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit;" not by the flesh; on that nature, the law, (which worketh wrath) abideth; then the harmony of the resurrection, "It is sown a natural body," (not raised a natural body), "it is raised a spiritual body." But the familiar text is quoted, "All in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth." Now, if men would cease to handle the word of God deceitfully, and explain the original of this text as readily as they do some others, we might get more light. Let the reader mark this. The term dead is not in the text; the word hades is not in the text hence, whatever the text may mean, it seems to me it has no DIRECT reference to the dead in hades. O, why do not men see? Is it prejudice? Oh, prejudice, thou art blinder than the mole, who roots under the turf, having no eyes. Yours, believing in Christ.

BR. STORRS:—I am well, thank's to my heavenly Father. Br. Lewis is as well as usual, but is quite afflicted with his back and hand. I found all the friends well in this part of the country. On the 17th inst. we went to the appointment at Black Log school-house, about five miles from Shelbyville, where we found Br. Chinkingbird, who was doing battle for the truth of Life only in Christ. He has stood firm for God and truth. We had a good congregation who were anxious to hear, understand, and know "what is truth;" to whom we preached the word of life for four evenings to increased numbers and with increased interest. The Christian Minister was there every evening. The last evening he rose and said that, he was not very favorable to ministers; but he believed these old Brethren were honest, and were not afraid of investigation, but courted it; and I indorse most of what they preach, because it is scriptural; and that the christian has life only by Christ, and must be quickened by the Spirit that raised Christ from the dead; and that the Spirit inducted into Christ, and shall reign with the saints in life with their living head; and that man gets immortality at the resurrection, and the scriptures no where taught the immortality of the soul, &c. "But," then came that "but," which is the knockdown argument, when they have God's truth in opposition to their fable. Of no resurrection of the wicked dead, or conscious being in death, he said, that, it was his opinion that the wicked dead must be raised to be punished; because, if a man should cut his throat how could he be punished? he must be raised to see life, to see what he lost, to make it punishment He gave the rich man and Lazarus; John v. 28, 29, &c.; then told the people, that if he had any money he would give some in the collection which they were about to take up for our benefit. When he was done, I rose and said, John said they, the unbelieving, should "not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." I then gave notice that we would hold meeting on the 25th. As Br. Lewis had an appointment at Pana, for Sunday, he went away Saturday. I staid and held meeting about a mile out of Shelbyville, Saturday evening. The roads being almost impassible for the mud, their were but few out. It was so rainy and muddy that I found it difficult to get to the school-house. I took up the appointment for Sunday and promised to preach from, "As in Adam all die," &c, by request of a christain minister. We had quite a good hearing on Monday evening. The 25th we went to Black Log school-house: found the house full, to whom we tried to show that, death was the penalty of the law, and nothing else: that death was a state of unconsciousness "The dead know not any thing;" and that the wicked shall not rise again: and then we looked at all the texts, brought by the Br. in the light of truth; to which he replied; or, rather tried to, by telling us that David was a bad man; took a man's wife and had him killed, so that he might have her; and Solomon had more wives than Briegham Young; and that Job never wrote that book; and that Solomon wrote the Love songs in which he extolled his black wife as being beautiful and wrote tales of love, &c., equalled by none in these days; and he scouted my explanation of the Rich man and Lazarus, as a parable and fiction, and not history. He said, Jesus never speaks parables, and no Christian ever said that the Rich Man and Lazarus was a parable; that the Scriptures were true, but my application was wrong. It was like the application of the darky preacher, who was preaching from the text as a shephard divideth the sheep from the goats, &c.; he said that they were the sheep, because they had the wool; and that the white people were the goats, because they had the hair. The text was true, but the application was wrong; then he accused me of sophistry in explaining John v. 28, 29, to mean the same coming out of the grave which is spoken of in Ezek. xxxvii. He went on telling foolish stories—like this: A darky was trying to decipher this saying on a tomb stone, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." When he read it, he said, "Well the Lord don't owe you one red cent; he was such a miser." All his effort was to get the mind of the people off the truths which they had been listening to, for two and an half hours; that being the length of time, he said, we occupied. I tell you, good was done; and the people wish to hear again. We left the house about ten o'clock, with the promise that will come again. On the 26th, we went to Eld. H. C. Shellingburger's: found him well, and in full faith of life only in Christ, and says he agrees with us in all things except the conditional Life. He believes in unconditional life. We pseached twice; had a large congregation for the place, and an attentive hearing, and then came here. Commenced our labors here yesterday, and shall hold meetings for some time. There are plenty of places had we time to go and occupy them.

I hope that you, and all God's dear children, may have a happy New Year: and wouldn't it be a happy year if the Lord should come and change us, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, from corruption to incorruption, from mortal to immortal, and give us victory over death? That would be a gloriously happy new year, and the commencement of an age of glory and wonders. I would be glad to see the kingdom come. The Brethren who contribute to my support have my thanks and prayers that God may give them life. Yours in hope of Life.

From S. L. Werden.

DOVER, ILL., Jan. 4, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I would hardly know how to get along without the weekly visits of the HERALD. The doctrine of "No life out of Christ," which it advocates, appears to me to be the doctrine of the Bible, and does no injustice to any of the human family. I have never, as yet, heard this great truth proclaimed orally by any of the professed ministers of Christ: but I hope the day is not far distant when it shall be proclaimed in every town and hamlet. What glorious news, that "Life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel." that sinful men by believing in his heart the record that God has given in his revealed word, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God—may have eternal life.

Now, when do we obtain this eternal, or everlasting life? Is it while we remain here in the flesh? or, is it in the morning of the resurrection? The Rev. Mr. Morton, from St. Louis, preached here a few weeks since, and he labored to make us understand that all that believed the record that God has given of his Son, had now eternal life. He repeated these passages for proof, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him." "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." But he did not repeat the last clause in this verse, "And he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him;" for that would shut the wicked out from life, which he does not believe.

According to his teaching, all that have ever believed in their hearts that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, from the time of Christ and his Apostles, to the present day, have not died; for he that hath eternal life cannot die. Now, what are the facts? We see that all men are mortal, whether righteous or wicked; that death makes no distinction; they all go to the dead.

Now, is it not the truth that we do not in reality have eternal life here, while we remain clothed with mortality? But we have it prospectively in the future; we have the promise of it, as recorded in 1 John ii. 25, "And this is the promise that he has promised us, even eternal life." Now, I believe if God has promised us eternal life, it must be in the future, and He will truly keep his promise, and we shall receive eternal life at the time, and in the manner, that Paul speaks of in 1 Cor. xv. where he says, "Behold I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. Yours, in hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ, the LIFE-GIVER.

ELD. R. V. LYON, SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y., writes:—I inclose $2 for the HERALD OF LIFE. I am deeply interested in the doctrine of No Life out of Christ. The doctrine of Life through Jesus, the LIFE-GIVER, is the grandest feature of the gospel. It was the most prominent thought in the teaching of Jesus and his apostles. It is true that the kingdom, and also the time, are a part of the gospel. But to know how men can have life from the dead through Christ by a resurrection out from among the dead ones; was first and foremost in their public discourses. Yours for truth and right living.

JAMES H. JACOBS, Freetown, N. Y., writes:—I am trying to live so as to be saved, or have a better life when Jesus comes. I am preaching and discussing with the advocates of natural, or inherent immortality, including Universalists; and our views are gaining ground. Since I have learned the doctrine of life only to the righteous it has a power in it. It has kindness in it, and it has goodness in it. It is like God.

LORY JENCKS, Dansville, N. Y. writes:—I send $3.25. Two of it for the HERALD. I would rather it were $10 than so small a sum. My prayer is for the success of the blessed HERALD OF LIFE; which I believe to be the crowning truth of the gospel. Please send me, also, a copy of "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST."

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

Our country, notwithstanding the terrible ordeal through which it has just passed, and the animosities thereby left behind, is the most quiet and prosperous of any in the world. Here we have the satisfaction of knowing that the great danger has been overcome, and authority and power are in the hands of those desirous of establishing order and justice, but in the rest of the world they are just beginning to encounter commotion as great as ours were, without the security we had of general intelligence and power of inherent restraint among the great body of the people. There are the appearances of to-days history. Those who love to speculate have just at present abundant material to build with, of which we can find room for but a small portion in our prescribed limits.

Proceedings commenced in the House of Representatives looking to the impeachment of the President of the United States.

The bill to establish negro suffrage in the District of Columbia has become a law over the President's veto. It stringently disfranchises all participants in the late rebellion, and as stringently provides to give all negro males of one year's residence and over twenty-one years of age, not criminals or lunatics, the right to vote.

The bills declaring Nebraska and Colorado States were passed yesterday in the Senate, with an amendment, which though not as stringent as that proposed by Mr. Brown.

The Equal Rights Convention of colored men recently holding forth in Washington has passed a series of resolutions claiming the elective franchise and full representation.

There have been issued by the Government some 15,000 or 16,000 pardons of rebels.

A Mrs. Woolworth has been dismissed from the Congregational Church in Winsted, Conn., for obtaining a divorce from her husband "without Bible cause."

The Rector of Trinity Church, New York, lately said, in a sermon, that the last three hundred years were the "dark ages." The Reformation in his opinion, was not a blessing, but an evil. This is also the belief of Pope Pius the Ninth.

FOREIGN

We have already published numerous items showing that the world's peace would most likely be broken by a rupture in the East. The war cloud there continues to threaten increased dimension from day to day.

The insurrection in Candia, in the other Mediterranean islands, and in Thessaly, still remains unsubdued, and we already hear of another province in Northern Turkey being on the eve of a general rising. Large re-enforcements have joined the insurgents in Candia, and Garibaldi is said to be on the way thither. At a ball given in St. Petersburg in favor of the Cretan sufferers, the Emperor and several members of the Imperial family were present. All the cabinets of Europe now admit the importance of the Eastern question.

Our letters from Rome represent the immense majority of the Roman people as patiently awaiting the call of the "Committee of Action," which warns the people against unknown agitators, and assures them that they will be called to arms when the hour of deliverance sounds.

In his New Year's speech to the Diplomatic Corps, Louis Napoleon expressed his hope that "we are entering upon a new era of peace and conciliation." The disappointment of the Imperial hopes in Italy, Mexico, Germany, and elsewhere has, of late, consdierably diminished the importance which used to be attached to Napoleon's sayings on New Year's day, and people are troubling themselves less about the apparent, the hidden, and real meaning of his words.

OUR readers already are familiar with that saddest episode of the Candian insurrection, the blowing up of the monastery of Arkadi, with its heroic christian garrison and several thousand besieging Turks. The heroes of Arkadi will secure a place in history beside those of Thermopylæ, who, more than two thousand years ago, fell in the defense of the same cause. The event is, moreover, one which is likely to have important consequences. The recent letters of Garibaldi and Victor Hugo show how profound an interest is felt in the issue of the struggle by the European liberals. The waves of popular indignation are beating with renewed force against the decayed Ottoman Porte, and almost daily dispatches by the cable report the steady approach of the fatal hour of collapse.

PROPOSED CONGRESS OF JEWS IN PARIS.—The Gazette de France, alluding to the Jewish Council which is to assemble in Paris next year, remarks that the meeting will be especially called on to decide the following questions: The abolition of the prohibition of certain articles of food; the suppression of polygamy, which exists among the Jews in Algeria; and the recognition of female children as equally qualified to inherit in that country with males. The French government is said to be very anxious for the reforms relating to the African colony, as there are in Algeria forty thousand Jewish families, composed of industrious people, who are not subject to the general laws of the Civil Code.

It is stated that Russia has proposed to the protecting powers to hold a conference, in order to arrive at the means of giving justice to the christian subjects of the Porte.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each: MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

THE EXAMPLE OF CHRIST.

And is the gospel peace and love?
 Such let our conversation be:
The serpent blended with the dove,
 Wisdom and meek simplicity.

Whene'er the angry passions rise,
 And tempt our thoughts and tongues to strife,
To Jesus let us lift our eyes,
 Bright pattern of the Christian life.

Ah! how benevolent and kind,
 How mild and ready to forgive;
Be this the temper of our mind,
 And these the rules by which we live.

To do his heavenly Father's will
 Was his employment and delight;
Humanity and holy zeal
 Shone through his life, divinely bright.

But ah! how blind and weak we are;
 How frail, how apt to turn aside!
Lord, we depend upon thy care,
 And ask thy Spirit for our guide.

Thy fair example may we trace
 To teach us what we ought to be,
Make us by thy transforming grace,
 Dear Saviour, daily more like thee.

WILLIAM TYNDALE.

On account of his public preaching and private teaching the enemies of Tyndale were so determined to destroy him, that they entered a complaint against him to the Chancellor of the diocese of Worcester, who warned him to appear before him to answer to the charge of heresy. He went, with no defence but the truth of God and the justice of his cause. But for some reason, probably on account of his standing in the family of Sir John Walsh, those who were the most eager to accuse him failed to appear against him, and he was released and returned to his home, after being severely threatened. They probably thought to frighten him by this, and turn him from his purpose. But they did not know their man, while he well understood the character of those with whom he had to deal, and was aware that they would leave no plan untried to prevent the Scriptures being brought before the people, which he felt was necessary in order to establish them in the truth.

While pondering these things in his mind, Tyndale concluded to translate the New Testament into English, not without a knowledge of the persecution and danger to which he would be exposed, even perhaps to the sacrifice of his life. But he was firm and undaunted, and to this great object his life was henceforth to be devoted.

He had but few friends, yet the Lord raised up some to speak words of cheer to him. Among them was an aged priest in the vicinity. One day as Tyndale was visiting him and talking freely with him, he was astonished at this remark from the old man, "Do you know that the Pope of Rome is the very Anti-Christ that the scripture speaketh of? I have been an officer of his, but I have given it up, and defy him and all his laws. But beware of what you say, for if it be known that you are of this opinion, you will lose your life." This interview, while it gave new light to Tyndale, also strengthened him in his convictions and purposes. Not long after he met a bitter opposer, who in conversation remarked, that "We were better to be without God's laws than the Pope's." This was blasphemous indeed, and Tyndale at once replied, "I defy the Pope and his laws. If God spares my life, I will take care that ere many years, a boy that drives the plow shall know more of the scriptures than you do." This was bold language and perhaps not very wise, and its effect was soon seen, for he was persecuted on every hand as a heretic. Fearing he should involve his kind friends where he lived in some difficulty, he resolved to leave them and go to some place where he might quietly pursue his work of translating the New Testament.

For several reasons he concluded finally to go to London, and taking leave of those who had so kindly befriended him, and looking for the last time upon the beautiful scenery of his native valley, he seeks a home in the great city. Here we find him in 1522, a stranger and alone. Henry VIII. was at the time king of England, and was a great favorite with the Pope, and for his zeal for the church of Rome, had recently received the title of "Defender of the Faith." Had Tyndale known all that was going on in London he would not have gone there, but the Lord was leading him in a way he knew not. He carried with him a letter of introduction from Sir John Walsh to Sir Harry Guilford, through whom he became acquainted with several leading ministers, and we soon hear of him as a preacher in the church of St. Dunstan. Yet here he was watched with a malicious spirit, but he did not try to hide his opinions. He boldly preached what is called the doctrine of Justification by faith, as Luther was doing in Germany, telling the people that "it is the blood of Christ that opens the gates of heaven, and not our good works."

There was in London a rich merchant, who was also an alderman of the city. Some seven years before he had heard the true gospel and embraced it, and his house was ever open to the servants of Christ, and to the friends of learning, for he was a man of cultivated mind. He was noted for his kindness to the poor and persecuted, so that he was honored and loved by all classes. He heard Tyndale preach at St. Dunstan's, and meeting him one day in the street, he accosted him and asked him what were his means of living. He replied, he had none, but he hoped to enter the service of the Bishop of London. By what he had previously heard he thought he would befriend and help him, but on application he refused, for he had no desire that the common people should be instructed. Tyndale was sadly disappointed and knew not where to turn, but he thought of Humphrey Monmouth, the merchant before mentioned. To him he went and was kindly received as he had reason to expect, and found a home there while he was in England. At this time his old friend, John Frith, came to London and became a fellow-laborer with him. In a little room in Monmouth's house they worked together upon the English New Testament. He was a great help and comfort to Tyndale.

About six months after this, it became known that a few christians in the city were in the habit of meeting together for conference and reading the scriptures. The Bishop of London and others hearing of it, began the work of persecution and had them arrested, and by threats and flatteries finally induced them to give up their meeting and keep silence. Tyndale became convinced that there was no room in London, nor yet in all England, where he could translate the New Testament. At that time there was a vessel lying in the river ready to sail for Hamburg. He thought perhaps in Germany he might find a place for his work, and resolved to go. Monmouth and others assisted him, and taking leave of his friends, he left forever the shores of his native land.

It was near the close of 1523 that he landed in Hamburg, and he there found the encouragement he needed, and for two years he pursued his work with zeal, being assisted by one or two brethren at different times. About the close of 1524, the gospels of Matthew and Mark were ready for press. At this time he wished to send to Monmouth for money left with him for his use, and with the order he secretly sent a copy of the two gospels. These were afterward published and sent to England. While Tyndale was laboring in Germany, his kind friend Monmouth had been imprisoned some months in the Tower of London, for his views and his kindness to Tyndale, but was released.

In the spring of 1525 the whole of the New Testament was completed, and some way must be contrived to print and publish it secretly, for there were enemies to the gospel everywhere. There seemed to be an opening for him to go to Cologne and get the work done there He went, and the printing was begun, but was soon stopped. A man who was an enemy to the truth came into the city and accidentally heard of what was being done. He at once applied to the Senate of Cologne for permission to stop the work and take the manuscripts and types, which was granted. But Tyndale seized all the papers, and taking a boat he ascended the river with all speed. His enemies were much disappointed that he had escaped them with the hated manuscript. But the Lord still guided his steps, and after a few days he arrived at the city of Worms, a place noted in the history of Luther. Here it seems the New Testament was to be printed, and by a grandson of the man who invented the art of printing. Two editions of the New Testament were issued by the end of the year 1525.

I have not time to tell you of the means contrived to get these books into England, but they were sent and scattered over the country, causing much joy among the common people who could read for themselves the word of life, while Tyndale's enemies, filled with rage, were longing to take his life. But their time was not yet.

It would be interesting if we could follow him through all the scenes of his labor and trial, but we cannot. His enemies endeavored to destroy his books, some of which were publicly burned in England, but the truth continued to work like leaven and man could not prevent it. Tyndale continued for several years to publish new editions of the New Testament and quite a number of other works, which all had a large circulation in England. He still lived in Marburg, when in the fall of 1526, he was joined by his dear friend Frith, who had fled from England. They again labored together till 1529, when Frith removed to Antwerp. The authorities in England tried in many ways to find his retreat and cause his arrest, but were foiled for a long time, although he was obliged to change his name and use every precaution to avoid them.

At one time the government proposed, through a friend, to buy up all his Testaments in order to burn them, thinking that would be the end. Wishing to get out another and more thoroughly corrected and revised edition, and needing money to do it, he sold them and used the money for that purpose, much to the chagrin of his foes.

In 1534 John Frith suffered martyrdom, being burned to death for his faith. He had published a book on Purgatory, which so stirred his enemies, that, on his coming again into England they arrested him, and after an imprisonment of several months, he was put to death at the age of thirty. While he was in prison Tyndale wrote him a long letter full of comfort and good advice. He exhorted him to be steadfast and endure unto the end. He met his death with great fortitude. Tyndale could but feel his death deeply, for they had been intimate for some fourteen years.

For the last year Tyndale had been living at Antwerp, where he had been undisturbed. He boarded with an Englishman by the name of Thomas Poyntz, and had, during the year, published a new and beautiful edition of the New Testament, and one of the five books of Moses. He no doubt intended to translate the whole Bible, had he found opportunity. About this time the Bishop of Winchester undertook to do what the Papists of England had long and vainly endeavored to do, viz.: apprehend William Tyndale. To do this he employed two men, one by the name of Henry Phillips, the other Gabriel Donne, a monk. The residence of Tyndale was easily found by Phillips, who at once sought the acquaintance of Poyntz. He sometimes met Tyndale and succeeded in gaining his confidence, but Poyntz disliked him. Tyndale, who suspected nothing, frequently invited him to his lodgings and showed him his study and books.

Having accomplished so much Phillips went to Brussels, and obtained the assistance of some of the emperor's officers and returned to Antwerp. One day when Poyntz was out of town, Phillips, who rather feared Poyntz, called on Tyndale and borrowed some money and was finally invited to dine with him. When dinner time came, they went out and had to pass through a long narrow entry. On either side of the outer door Phillips had placed an officer, and as Tyndale passed out first, Phillips pointed with his finger towards him, that they might know he was the person to be taken. The men each laid a hand on Tyndale's shoulder and arrested him in the name of the emperor. He was taken by surprise, but submitted at once and followed the officers, who had him conveyed as soon as possible to the castle of Vilvorde, twenty-three miles from Antwerp Phillips and his companion were overjoyed, and immediately sent word to England where there was great rejoicing among the Papists, who so much hated him. Tyndale was kept in confinement for eighteen months, and bore all his trials, as he had ever done, with cheerfulness and christian patience. Through his instrumentality his jailor and all his family were converted. He also had the satisfaction of knowing that the circulation of his books was rapidly increasing and that as he once said, the plow-boys of his own country had become wiser in the doctrines of salvation, than the priests who professed to be their teachers. This had been the work of his life—now it was done "he was ready to be offered." His friend Poyntz made an effort to enlist the court of England in his favor, but it effected nothing, for the king of England did not interfere, and he was left to his enemies. He was tried before the Princess Mary, of Holland, and her privy council, and was condemned to die. On the 6th of Oct., 1536, he was led to the stake and burned. Thus died one of the noblest and best of men; died for his faith and efforts to present the pure word of God to the people in a language they could read and understand. After he was bound to the stake and the flames began to kindle, he cried out with a loud voice, "Lord open the eyes of the king of England!" He has been called the Martyr of Vilvorde, and by John Fox, the author of the Book of Martyrs, the Apostle of England. The Lord help us in this age to better prize the blessed Bible.

BY H. K. WHITCOMB.

There have been many different positions taken in regard to the time and fulfilment of this portion of Daniel's prophecy, referred to by Christ, as recorded in Math. xxiv. 15, and Mark xiii. 14. But to my mind there need not be so much difference of opinion in regard to it, if people would allow the scriptures to be their own expositors. The question involved in the subject would be enough to mark its fulfilment were it not for upholding some theory. "Tell us, when shall these things be?" What things? The things before spoken of, and that was the throwing down of the stones of the Temple, and that only. Now we assume this, that the stones either have been thrown down, or they must be in the future. That they have been, we believe. We find in Luke xix. commencing with verse 41, a prophecy of Christ against Jerusalem; and in verse 43, he says, "For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with the ground and thy children within thee. And they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." The same expression is found in connection with our subject. It is urged that the question in Luke xxi. 7, was asked at another time, which we see no proof of; and if it was it does not help the objector in the least. It matters not as to the time when it was spoken, but what was spoken, and where it applies? It is spoken of four times by the evangelists, and every time applied to one place (Jerusalem). Now the question is, "Tell us when these stones shall be thrown down;" and, in our English translation, Mark and Luke have it, "And what shall be the sign when these things shall come to pass," or be fulfiled?

Luke tells us that the sign was when Jerusalem was compassed with armies; the very time spoken of in chap. xix. when the stones should be thrown down. Since that time Jerusalem has been compassed with armies, agreeable to prophecy, and if the stones were not thrown down then, who shall say how many times it may be thus compassed before the stones will be thrown down? In Luke i. 1, 4, we find that Luke having perfect understanding of all these things, has written them in order. If he has done this who can do more? Again: he was with Paul in his labors, and was the beloved Physician, also. It would seem strange he could be so much mistaken as many of our Advent bretheren think. Mark this, the same events are connected with Math. and Mark's abomination of desolation, as with the expression in Luke xxi. 20; and if Luke was in possession of that Spirit, which Christ said he would send that should guide the possessor into all truth, was not he better prepared to write in order, than those writing earlier? Again, we find a prophecy in Ezekiel iv. referring to the same thing. In the third verse we read, "And it (the city) shall be besieged and thou shalt lay siege against it; this shall be a sign to the house of Israel." May it not be that Luke understood this prophecy when he wrote? The disciples asked Christ, what sign there should be when the stones should be thrown down. In our next we purpose to show farther proof from Ezekiel in relation to this prophecy; also, to examine Daniel closely in regard to the abomination of desolation.

"THY KINGDOM COME."—No. 6.

BY SAMUEL MASON.

Agreeable to promise we shall here introduce and examine what we term the divine commentary on this subject. It is contained in Paul's Epistle to the Galatians. The circumstance which called out this part of the letter was, that some of them had still an inclination to be under the Jewish law. "Tell me," says he, "Ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bond-maid, and the other by a free woman; but he who was of the bond-woman was born after the flesh; but he who was of the free woman was by promise." Gal. iv. 21–23. "Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants, the one from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Hagar, for this Hagar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children." It will be remembered that it was upon the Mount of Sinai, in the wilderness of Arabia, where God committed the statute law to Moses, which was to govern the Jewish nation; and it was at this time God fulfilled his covenant to Abraham, which was to come through Ishmael, his son and seed by the bond-woman; which was, "that of him he would make A GREAT NATION." When, therefore, God by the hand of Joshua, drove out the seven nations who were in possession of the land which he had deeded to Abraham's seed more than four hundred years before that time, and who had now come to take possession, when this was fulfilled, and the Jewish polity established, that was an end of all the promises included in God's covenant with Abraham concerning THAT NATION, and the Jews themselves, and all Judaizing teachers, have made a gross mistake in looking still for future promise in reference to that nation.

Jesus struck an exterminating blow at such an idea. On one occasion, when he was engaged in his public teaching, said the Pharisees to him, "We have Abraham for our father." But his answer was, "If Abraham were your father, you would do the works of Abraham; but now ye seek to kill me, which did not Abraham." John viii. 39, 40. When he thus cut them off from this claim, said they "We have God for our Father." But said he, "If God were your Father, ye would believe in me, for I came forth from God." Now, says he, "Can ye not discern my speech? Ye are of your father the devil, and his works ye will do." This declaration silenced them. John viii. 42–44.

Ishmael was a representative of the character of that nation. He was a bondman. They also were under a law which gendereth to bondage; its voice was, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law, to do them." Gal. iii. 10; Deu. xxvii. 26. There is one striking characteristic of this disposition of Ishmael which most perfectly maps out the prominent disposition of the Jewish nation. It was this. God said, "His hand shall be against every man, and every man's hand against him." How completely does the whole history of the Jewish nation, in their relation with other nations of the world, exemplify this disposition! In their estimation all other people are dogs, and castaways, even down to the present time; and says Paul in reference to them, "They are contrary unto all men." 1 Thess. ii. 15. Their hand being thus turned against all men, it is but human nature that every man's hand should be turned against them; and how most perfectly this has been fulfilled! All nations have in turn hated and persecuted them.

They were also represented by a wild man; as this was another trait of the character of Ishmael; and how strikingly have they exhibited that peculiar truth also. Look at them under the burning brow of Sinai—at the foot of the mount, on whose summit was heard the thunders of Jehovah's voice! They had also seen the forked lightning flash, and heard the sound of alarming trumpets, and the voice of words pealing from its shaking brow. Yet, in view of all this awful exhibition, what do we behold? Aaron, the brother of the man whom God had chosen to conduct this people from Egyptian bondage into a land flowing with milk and honey, collecting all the jewels from the multitude, and then moulding them into a golden calf; then, with a ferocious audacity, becoming nothing but wild men, shouting the idolatrous songs, "These be thy gods, O, Israel, that brought thee up out of the land of Egypt!" Thus they broke over all bounds, although hedged round by Jehovah himself. How appropriately was such a people represented by a WILD MAN.

But we recur again to Paul's exposition of this subject. "But Jerusalem, (says he) which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all; for it is written, rejoice thou barren that bearest not; break forth and cry, thou that travailest not; for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. Now, we brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise; but as then, he that was born after the flesh (Ishmael) persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, (or by promise) even so it is now." Gal. iv. 26–29. This refers to the tantalizing mocking of Ishmael, in reference to Sarah, Abraham's wife, and Isaac, who was to be born according to God's promise; and how strikingly did the Jews also fulfil this mocking and persecuting disposition to Christ the TRUE SEED of Abraham, while on earth. "Nevertheless, what saith the scriptures? cast out the bondwoman and her son, for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with my son, even with Isaac, which was of the free woman. So then, brethren, we are not the children of the bond-woman, but of the free (Gal. iv. 30;) stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage. Gal. 5. 1. Now to Abraham and his SEED were the promises made; he saith not unto seeds, as of many, but as of ONE, and to thy SEED, which is CHRIST." Gal. iii. 16. The promises, therefore, that God made to Abraham through Isaac, ran to Christ, as the one who should inherit them. He, then, is the SEED of Abraham; and of course he alone is the HEIR of the inheritance included in the new covenant, namely, the world. "For the promise was that Abraham should be heir of the world."

This idea is also confirmed by the parable of the vineyard, which was let out to certain husbandmen, to whom various classes of servants had been sent by the lord of the vineyard, at the season for gathering the fruit, but they were all shamefully beaten; finally, the proprietor of the vineyard said, "I will send my son, it may be they will reverence him when they see him." The son was sent, last of all, to the wicked and faithless husbandmen. "But when they saw the son coming they said among themselves, come, this is the heir, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours. So they cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him." Matt. xxi. 33. This vineyard was old Jerusalem, or the "Jerusalem that now is, and is in bondage with her children." Gal. iv. 25. This Jerusalem was a type of the new Jerusalem, the golden city of the new earth. It was this especially to which Jesus was heir; this is the Jerusalem which is above, or exalted, and is free, being the mother of all Christ's children, it is called the bride, the Lamb's wife. Yours in hope.

THE TWO COVENANTS.

BY S. E. HOFFMAN.

Br. Storrs:—I have just been reading the various views of the brethern on the, "Body of Christ;" its office, its spiritual powers, &c., the new covenant and the old covenant; and while I read, my heart seems over-loaded to say something for Jesus. How it rejoices me to see these things beginning to be examined. Twenty years ago, when I used to preach on the "Body of Christ," they called it fanaticism; and said that my heart was right, but my head wrong. Although not accustomed to writing, like some of the brethren, yet I feel as if I could not refrain from saying something on the covenants.

Let us commence with Heb. vii. 28. "For the law (old covenant) maketh men high priests which have infirmity; but the word of the oath, (the new covenant) which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated forevermore. Mark his language: "which was since the law." "The word of the earth." Does not Christ say, "Before Abraham was, I am?" How, or, what can we apply this word of the oath to, which says, since the law, but to the new covenant? He does not say, the word of the oath to be established or covenanted after the resurrection, or, 1260 years hence; but since the law, already; now, at that time; sworn to, to disannul the old, that he may establish the new.

But let us follow Paul in chap. viii. 6 "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry; by how much also he is the Mediator of a better covenant, which was (in the past) established upon better promises." What is the meaning of a covenant? Agreement, stipulation, contract, bargain. The old bargain between God and his people had, besides the moral law, the endless laws of ceremonies; which Paul says, "stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation." Now I ask the question. Is there reason is their proof, is there a "Thus saith the Lord," that a law, a covenant, will be necessary in the resurrection, after this mortal has put on immortality, where there is no sin, no propensity to sin? Hear Paul. "Ye are not under the law, but under grace." If christians, then, are not under the law, how much less will immortal beings need a law, who are possessed of God's own nature. Yes, Jesus is now at this time, the Mediator of a better covenant, the new one. He has obtained the ministry of that covenant, too, by his death and resurrection; and if the ministry of it has failed, it is only on account of sin, and unbelief; not by God's appointment, for Paul says, He (Christ) obtained it. Who can deny it? And if he obtained it, he established it; he set it up. Yes, and, thanks be to God, it is not dead yet. Though we have had one hand cut off, or one foot, by the old mother of abominations, that has caused darkness to cover the earth, and gross darkness the people, yet I feel to praise the name of God, that light is breaking out in various places; and I believe the "Body" will soon again be restored, every member to its place; and then down goes Babylon; that is, all the kingdoms of this world; all human laws, whether church or state. The great earthquake will then take place, in which seven thousand names of men will be destroyed. God's great judgment. Blessed Jesus, thou hast obtained through thy death and suffering this ministry of the new covenant.

But one brother says, The old covenant was made with the house of Israel; and the new is to be made with the same. That is true, Br.; but let us see who Israel is. Paul says, "They are not all Israelites that are of Israel." This new covenant, then, is, and was, to be established to, or with, certain characters, not nationalities. "And to thy seed; (not seeds,) "which is Christ." "For the promise that he should be heir to the world was not to Abraham, or his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Rom. iv. 13. I see no covenant to be established on any other conditions than that of repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. But I so read the Bible as to believe that the full glory of this new covenant is just about to be ushered in by rendering judgments upon the ungodly, thereby destroying the Man of sin, and clothing this ministry of the new covenant with all that the Man of sin took away from it.

There are but two covenants: The old and the new. Heb. viii. 7. "For if that first covenant has been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second; for finding fault with them, he saith, Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah; for this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel, after those days, (of the law,) saith the Lord; I will put my laws (new covenant) into their mind, and write them in their hearts, and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people." Now, that the apostle had a direct reference to Christ's first coming, and the effects to follow; or that would follow, we only need to notice the last verse: "In that he saith a new covenant, he hath made the first old." Mark the language: He "hath" already, now, in Paul's day, made the first old "Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away." Yes, that old covenant decayed when the Jewish nation decayed, and the everlasting covenant of grace rose from the first advent of Jesus into the world. Does any one suppose that Paul means anything different by calling it the everlasting covenant? Not at all. I ask such an one the question: Was there ever one person saved in any other way than by Christ? The answer would be, No. Does not Paul say, that "they all drank of that rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ?" Hence it is the blood of the everlasting covenant from Adam's time till the last trump shall sound. May God hasten on the fulness of this everlasting covenant, which is a consecrating of ourselves wholly and acceptably to God. Yours, in hope that the time is not far distant when the saints, or christians, shall possess the kingdom.

Singular Occurrence at Sea.—Commander E. Simpson, of the steamer Mohican, from Cura, Brazil, under date of Nov. 7, reports to the Navy Department that on the afternoon of 30th ult., when off the coast of Maranham, the back of a large fish was seen about a cable's length from the ship and inclined diagonally towards her. A few moments afterwards the engines suddenly stopped. Steam was shut off, and a hurried examination made. No cause could be discovered for the remarkable result. Steam was again turned on, but the engines could not be forced ahead. At this time several pools of blood were seen to rise to the surface of the water under the stern. After a few moments it was discovered that a large black-fish or whale had been caught between the propeller and frame. The shock on the engine was very great.

A report from Canea, the capital of Candia, by way of Syra, says another battle has taken place between the Turks and the Greek insurgents, in which the former were defeated with heavy loss.

THE RESURRECTION.

In The Methodist, Jan. 12, we find a sermon by BISHOP SIMPSON, of the M. E. Church, in which are so many good things, and so well said, that we feel disposed to give large extracts for our readers. It is refreshing to hear or read sermons on this subject in these days, when the fable of "going to heaven at death" has so generally taken the place of the Bible doctrine of "the resurrection of the dead." We thank Bishop Simpson for his timely sermon on the subject, and wish we could give the entire sermon a place in our columns, though we do not agree with every sentiment expressed in it; but there is so much that is good we can cheerfully commend the sermon to attention. The Bishop commences as follows:

TEXT.—"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." 1 Cor. xv. 20.

A little more than eighteen hundred years ago, as the light of the morning was breaking around the walls of Jerusalem, there was a guard placed around a sepulchre in a small garden near the walls of the city. They were guarding a grave. Some strange scenes had occurred on the Friday before. While a man whom they had taken from the hills of Galilee and around the little lake of Capernaum had been hanging on the cross crucified as a malefactor, strange signs appeared in the heavens, and on the earth, and in the temple. It was rumored that he had said he would rise the third morning. The third morning was coming, and, as the light began to break in the East, there came two women silently and sadly wending their way among the tents that were pitched all around the city of Jerusalem; they had sojourned all night in the tents, for as yet the gates of the city had not been opened. They came to see the sepulchre, and were bringing spices in their hands. They loved the man who had been crucified as a malefactor, because of his goodness, his purity, and his compassion. They seemed to be almost the only hearts on earth that did love him deeply, save the small circle of friends who had gathered around him. There had been curses upon his head as he hung on the cross—curses from the bystanders, curses from the soldiers, curses from the people. They cried, "away with him; his blood be on us and and on our children!" and on that morning there were none but a few feeble, obscure, heart-broken friends that dared to come near his grave.

A little more than eighteen hundred years have passed away, and on the anniversary of that day, the morning of the first day of the week, the first Sabbath after the full moon and the vernal equinox, at the same season, the whole world comes to visit that grave. The eyes of princes and of statesmen, the eyes of the poor and the humble in all parts of the earth, are turned toward that sepulchre. All through Europe, men and women are thinking of that grave, and of him who laid in it. All over Western lands, from ocean to ocean, on mountain top and in valley, over broad prairies and deep ravines, the eyes and hearts of people are gathered round that grave. In the darkness of Africa, here and there, we see them stretching out their hands toward it. Along from the coasts of India and the heights of the Himalayas, they have heard of that grave and are bending toward it. The Chinese, laying aside their prejudices, have turned their eyes westward, and are looking toward that sepulchre. Along the shores of the seas, over the mountain tops and in the valleys, the hearts of the people have not only been gathering around the grave, but they have caught a glimpse of the rising inmate, who ascended in his glory toward heaven. The song of jubilee has gone forth, and the old men are saying, "The Lord is risen from the dead." The young men and matrons catch up the glowing theme, and the little children around our festive boards, scarcely comprehending the source of their joy, with glad hearts are now joyful, because Jesus has risen from the dead. All over the earth tidings of joy have gone forth, and as the valleys have been ringing out their praises on this bright Sabbath morning, how many hearts have been singing,

"Our Jesus has gone up on high!"

Why this change? What hath produced such a wonderful difference in public feeling? The malefactor once cursed, now honored; the obscure and despised now sought for; the rising Redeemer, not then regarded by men, now universally worshipped. What is the cause of this great change—how brought about? The subject of this morning, taken from the associations of this day, call us to consider, as briefly as we may, the fact of the resurrection of Christ from the dead, and some of the consequences which flow to us from that resurrection.

It is important for us to fix clearly in our mind the fact that this is one reason why such days are remembered in the annals of the church, as well as in the annals of nations: for our faith rests on facts, and the mind should clearly embrace the facts that we may feel that we are standing on firm ground. This fact of the resurrection of Christ is the foundation of the christian system; for the Apostle says: "And if Christ be not raised, your faith is in vain, ye are yet in your sins; then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." If Christ be not risen, we shall never see the fathers and mothers who have fallen asleep in Jesus. . . . If Christ be not raised, we are of all men the most miserable, because we are fancying future enjoyment which never can be realized; but if Christ be raised, then shall we also rise, and then them that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. And that our minds may rest as to the fact of Christ's resurrection, let us notice how God hath arranged the evidences to secure the knowledge of this fact clearly to man. The first point to which our attention is invited is the fact of Christ's death. Were not this fact clearly established it would be in vain to try to prove his resurrection from the dead. Christ might have suffered for man in some obscure place; he might have laid down his life as a ransom, and yet there would have been no legal evidence of it. God allowed the wrath of man to become the instrument of praising him, in that he suffered Christ to be taken under what was then the legal process—arrested first by the great council of the Jews, and then by the authority of the Roman Governor, so that the matter became a matter of public record—a legal transaction. The highest power, both of the Jewish and Roman government, united in this fact of his arrest, his trial, and his condemnation to death. Not only was this permitted, but the time of the occurrence was wisely arranged. It was at the feast of the Jews, the Passover, when all the Jews came up to keep the Passover. They came, not only from Egypt, but from all the country through which they were scattered. Jerusalem could not hold the people that came together; they pitched their tents all around the city, on the hills and in the valleys. It was the time of full moon, when there was brightness all night, and they came together with safety and security. The multitude, then, was there to witness the scene, so that it might be attested by people from all parts of Judea, and from all countries round about Judea.

Then, again, the form of the death was such as to be not a sudden one, but one of torture, passing through many hours. Had the execution been a very sudden one, as it might have been, the death would have been equally efficacious, yet it would not have been witnessed by so many; but as he hung those dreadful hours, from nine until three, the sun being darkened, what an opportunity was given to the people passing by to be impressed with the scene. The crucifixion was near the city; the crowd was there; the temple worship was in process; the strangers were there; and as one great stream passes on some festive day through the great thoroughfare of your city, so passed the stream of men, women, and children by that cross on which the Saviour hung. They wagged their heads and reviled as they passed by. The very ones whom Jesus had healed, whose fathers had been cured of leprosy or fever, whose mothers' eyes had been opened; the ones who had been raised up from beds of sickness by the touch of that Saviour, passed by and reviled, and said: "He saved others, himself he cannot save." The multitude saw him as he hung suffering on the cross.

Then, again, the circumstances attending his death were such as to invite universal attention. It was not designed that the death should be a private one; not merely a legal transaction, a matter soon over, but a protracted and agonizing spectacle—one to be seen and known by the multitude; but in addition that man's attention should be drawn to something to be connected with that wonderful scene; hence God called upon the heavens and the earth, the air and the graves, and the temple itself for testimony. It is said that before the coronation of a prince in olden time in Europe, and in some kingdoms the custom is still observed, there is sent forth a herald, sometimes three days in advance, at different periods according to the custom, to issue a challenge to any one that dares to claim the kingdom to come and prove his right, and to announce that the coronation of his prince is to take place. Methinks it was such a challenge God gave to all the powers of humanity and to all the powers of darkness. There hung suffering on the cross he who died for human woe, and as he hung God was about to crown him King of kings and Lord of lords on the morning of the third day. He sends forth his voice of challenge, and as he speaks the earth rocks to its centre; that ground, shaking and convulsing, was a call to man to witness what was about to occur. Not only is there a voice of earth. Yonder the sun clothed himself in sackcloth for three hours, as much as to say: "There may be gloom for three days; the great source of light hath veiled himself, as in a mantle of night, for three days. As for three hours, this darkness hangs, but as out of the darkness the light shines forth, so, at the end of the three days, shall the sun of righteousness shine out again, the great centre of glory, with that glory which he had with the Father from the foundation of the world." It was as the herald's voice that passed through the heavens, and that spoke through all the orbs of light, "Give attention, ye created beings, to what is to happen!" . . . What was to occur? What could all this mean? Then the great sacrifice was offered. It was at three o'clock in the afternoon when Christ was to give up the ghost. Yonder the multitude of pious people were gathered toward the temple; the outer court was full; the doors and gates which led into the sanctuary were crowded; the lamb was before the altar; the priest in his vestments had taken the sacrificial knife; the blood was to be shed at the hour of three; the multitude were looking. Yonder hangs a veil; it hides that inner sanctuary; there are cherubim in yonder, with their wings spread over the mercy seat; the shekinah once dwelt there; God himself in his glory was there, and the people are bending to look in. No one enters into that veil save the high priest, and he, with blood and in the midst of incense, but once a year; but it was the mercy seat, and the eye of every pious Jew was directed toward that veil, thinking of the greater glory which lay beyond. As the hour of three came, and as the priest was taking the sacrificial knife from the altar and was about to slay the lamb, behold! an unseen hand takes hold of that veil and tears it apart from top to bottom, and has thrown open the mercy seat, not before seen by men. The cherubim are there; the altar, with its covering of blood, is there; the resting place of the ark is there; it is the holiest of holies. Methinks the priest drops the kife, the lamb goes free, for the Lamb that was slain from the foundation of the world is suffering for man. The way to the holy of holies is open—a new and a living way, which may not close, which priest alone cannot enter; but a way is open whereby humanity, oppressed and downtrodden, from all parts of the earth, may find its way to the mercy seat of God. There was a call to the pious worshipper by voices which seemed to say: "An end to all the sacrifices, an end to all the suffering victims, an end to all the sprinkled byssop that is used in purification, for One has come to do the will of God on whom the burden of man had been laid."

Now here were all these calls to humanity from all parts, as if to announce the great transaction. While all this was occurring, Christ was on the cross, suffering the agony of crucifixion. How deep that agony we need not attempt to tell you; it was fearful; and yet no complaint escaped his lips, no murmuring was there. He bore the sins of many in his own flesh on the tree. He heard the multitudes revile him; he saw them wag their heads; he remembered that the disciples had fled from him—one followed afar off, but the rest had gone; and yet he complained not. Friends and kindred had all left him, and he trod the wine press alone. He drank the cup in all its bitterness, and no complaint escaped from him. One left him that had never forsaken him before. "The world is gone, the disciples I have fed and taught have all fled and passed away—all have forsaken me." But there was no time until that moment of fearful darkness came, when all the load of guilt was upon him and for our sins he was smitten, that his spirit was crushed, and he called out, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" All else might go—it were little: "Why hast Thou forsaken me?" But it is over; the darkness is past; the load is borne; and I hear him say, "It is finished;" and he bows his head and dies.

Now there is publicity for the transaction. It demanded public investigation, it received it. There was not only the mental agony united with the agony of crucifixion, but there was the voluntary giving up of his life; yet, lest there might be some suspicion, to all this was added the proof of the fact of his death. When the limbs of the others were broken, and he was perceived to be dead, the soldier thrust the spear into his side, and there came out of that side both water and blood. There is a peculiarity in the sacred writings. A little incident, that seems to be mentioned without care, becomes the strongest possible proof, not only of the fact of Christ's death, but of the nature of his death. When that sentence was written, the human frame was not understood, the circulation of the blood was not understood. Anatomists had not then, as they have now, unveiled the human system; the great science of pathology had not yet been clearly taught to man; and yet, in that sentence we have almost a world of meaning. For it is well attested now that where persons die from violent mental emotion, by what is termed a broken heart, a crushed spirit, there is always formed a watery secretion around the heart. It was not known then to the soldier who lifted up that spear and pierced the body; but so much of that water had secreted around the heart that he saw it issuing forth from the pierced side, unstained by blood, which showed that that great heart had been crushed by agony within.

THEN AND NOW.

BY LEONARD C. THORNE.

Emerging, but never fully recovering from Babylonish captivity, harassed by surrounding nations, and perplexed and weakened by intestine commotion, the condition of the Jews was indeed pitiable. How often must they have pined and sighed for a return of the national glory achieved under God-fearing David and wise Solomon. Then the fame of their wealth, strength and glory was known unto all nations. Then, although the object of envy and jealousy, they commanded the respect and admiration of other peoples. Now how different. After returning from Babylon foreign or civil strife was almost constant. The province of Judea seems, after a time, to have been ruled by high priests, who had to be confirmed by the Egyptian or Syrian kings and the Sanhedrim of Jerusalem. During a period covering few years only, it several times changed masters. So early as two hundred years before Christ the priesthood had become fearfully corrupt. Tyranny was the order of the day and the office of high priest became one of purchase and sale. At one time a certain Onias was robbed of it for the benefit of a younger brother, who offered 360 talents to the court of Syria; he in turn was deprived of it by still another brother, who gave 300 more, and who endeavored to maintain his position by promoting the arbitrary measures of Antiochus Epiphanes. Being at one time driven from the city he was rescued by Antiochus, who destroyed part of the city, sold many of his opponents into slavery and robbed the temple. Some time afterward he destroyed the walls of the city, garrisoned a new fortress with his soldiers, sold many of the people into captivity and butchered many of others. The image of the king was placed in the temple, swine were sacrificed on the altar, new altars were erected for the obligatory worship of the Olympian Jupiter, the Hebrew scriptures burned, circumcision prohibited, and every act of opposition made a capital crime and punished with exceeding cruelty.

Some years later this condition of chronic confusion had resulted in a renewal of the broken alliance with Rome, and the establishing of a sort of Judean independence. Thus, sometimes better and sometimes worse, had matters long gone when Herod stood at the head of the last dynasty in Judea. Base and cowardly, he was willing to do almost anything to retain the good will of his foreign supporters. Gladiatorial games, statues, and other things abhorrent to the Jews were introduced into the city, and the Roman eagle placed on the top of that new temple. Herod regarded not justice, but ruled with tyrannic sway. The people clamored for a change, but those for whom they clamored fell victims to treacherous conspiracies.

Such was Jewish experience during a few centuries preceding the christian era, and such was their condition at the Saviour's advent. Long had they groaned under oppression of every conceivable sort, and as long had they hoped that some one would arise who should lead them to greatness and glory; but they had hoped in vain. Their deliverance had always been temporal, and they confidently expected this would again be the case. Therefore, when Jesus came to them with the offer of a better than temporal deliverance, a spiritual, they knew him not, nor of course comprehended the nature of his mission. He was rejected as a pretender and deceiver. The prophets foretold a Messiah who should be humble, meek, and a man of sorrow; and the Jews should have recognized him. But justice to them as a people demands a consideration of the fact that their national experience, through a long period, had been of a character well calculated to induce a degree of thoughtlessness, and consequent ignorance respecting the teachings of the scriptures. Their long cherished hope of a Messiah who should be a powerful and conquering king had grown into tradition; and how stubborn a thing that is, many in the present day have learned. Even they who followed Jesus, believed on him, accepted him as the Christ, and received instruction from his own lips, did not understand the character of his mission until after his resurrection.

Let us leap over a few centuries and take a look at the latter day christian church. The night of apostasy had been long, dark, and intensely terrible. When Luther announced his theological lectures in which he endeavored to lead his hearers away from ecclesiastical tradition and directed them to the scriptures, he had no idea, apparently, of being in conflict with the genuine spirit of catholicism; but God led him on, and within ten years after the delivery of his first lecture he began to hate the whole system as an antichristian despotism that hindered the growth of the church of God and obstructed the way of the believer to Christ. He now commenced to hurl his thunderbolts at Rome; and the knowledge of the gospel began again to increase. Wycliff had long before crippled Romanism in England, but with the labors of Luther the great reform fairly commenced. The death of every martyr possessed a power which, though latent, was destined to become mighty when the fetters of the mind should begin to be broken, and thought allowed its range. The impending storm, the feeble mutterings of which were first heard in England, swept over Germany, and in its angry, irrepressible fury, shook Rome to its very centre. Constantly gathering strength, the swelling, surging tide of the reformation rolled like a sea of burning lava over the papal domain, silencing the "thunders of the Vatican," consuming little by little the power of the "harlot," regardless of her haughty boast, "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow;" and still onward it rolls. Many valiant champions of the truth have from time to time been raised up, endued with power from on high, and have nobly done their work. Bibles are now within the reach of the poorest. They are published in almost or quite every known tongue, and furnished gratuitously to multitudes of such as cannot afford to purchase them. Most churches throughout christendom have their Bible classes and Sabbath schools, home, and foreign missions; and the press pours forth a continual stream of literature in exposition of scripture, prophetic, and otherwise. Because of all this christendom flatters itself that it is growing wise in the knowledge of gospel truth; a thing which in some respects is true, but vastly otherwise is it in other and important ones.

In the face of all these things, what has happened? Why, with all these advantages; with free access to the word of God; despite the language, "let both" (wheat and tares) "grow together until the harvest; and in the time of the harvest I will say to the reapers, gather ye together," &c., notwithstanding the assertion of Jesus, that as the good fish were gathered into vessels, while the bad were cast away, "so shall it be at the end of the world," (or age,) "the angel shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just; "regardless of the fact that "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe;" forgetting that the last days were to be characterized by the prevalence of ungodliness and crime; unimndful alike of the many divine testimonies corroborative of the bove, and the absence of conflicting ones, we have in this nineteenth century the very anamalous proceeding of a call upon christians, everywhere, to make daily prayers, throughout one week (the second in January), for the conversion of the world! How have these religionists learned in the school of Christ? christians generally are loud-mouthed in their condemnation of the poor Jews for rejecting the Messiah, though the manner of his coming was directly the opposite of what they had fondly expected; and yet, with open Bibles before them, in which is found abundant evidence of the soon coming of Jesus, and that wickedness will abound until then, in their blindness induced by faith in an immortal soul and its transmission to glory at death, they wholly overlook the importance of the second advent, and treat it as of no consequence. Considering the difference in circumstances, are they much less culpable than were the Jews?

The very significant query of our Lord, "when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" is in no wise suggestive of universal righteousness at that time. When the bridegroom came there were some against whom "the door was shut." If professing christians would renounce these perpetual barriers to an effectual presentation of the gospel, paganism and Romanism, they would soon find themselves extricated from some of their perplexing dilemmas, and be able to present the gospel as "glad tidings" indeed. By presenting the true character of God, they would be far more instrumental in promoting godliness than while hugging to themselves these delusions of Satan, and cherishing a vain ambition to evangelize the world. The world will be converted, but not until the personal reign of Jesus shall have commenced. It is then, and not till then, that there shall be nothing to hurt nor destroy in all "God's holy mountain:" "for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." How many, how earnest, how effectual, were the prayers for the world's conversion we cannot know; God knoweth. It is altogether probable, however, that the purposes of Jehovah are unchanged, and that his word will continue to stand sure.

If christians of the popular faith would first pray for strength to enable them to overcome their indifference as to what is truth, and by the active exercise of those faculties with which they are endowed, search it out, they would become capacitated to pray more intelligently.

Followers of Jesus should study rightly to direct their petitions, and let their works keep pace with their prayers, if they would have abundant success attend their efforts. For intelligent people to pray for what is so directly in conflict with the plainly and repeatedly expressed purposes of God as is the idea that the conversion of the world will precede the second coming of Christ, is to betray a degree of ignorance which, all things considered, is quite nearly allied to the inexcusable.

BY H. K. WHITCOMB.

"And it (Jersalem) shall be beseiged. . . . this shall be a sign to the house of Israel." Ezek. iv. 3. Let the reader bear in mind this fact, that this prophecy must refer to the last desolation of Jerusalem; for he prophesied during the captivity. Thus we find Ezekiel and Luke agree as to the sign. But this is not all, we find in Matt. xxiv. Mark xiii, and Luke xxi, Christ, speaking of the affliction that should attend the abomination of desolation, says—"It shall be such as never was, or ever shall be again." And in Ezekiel v. 9, we find the same expression (or nearly so; the same sense at least,) "And I will do that in thee which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, because of all thine abominations. Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee," &c. What does this prove? Just this, That what God did in Jerusalem, which he had not done before, and never would do again, was this, as he says, "Therefore, (or, for this reason) the fathers shall eat the sons," &c. Was this ever done? If historians rightly inform us, it was done as the prophecy said. The argument is this: We have proved that the expression, Ezek. v. 9, "And I will do that in thee which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like," was affliction such as was not from the beginning of the creation, neither shall be." When was there ever such distress or affliction as to cause any city or nation to resort to such means to sustain life as the Jews did at the last desolation of Jerusalem? We answer, it cannot be found.

Our time brethren argue that it is not to be compared to the Papal persecution, because there were over sixty million put to death; whereas only eleven hundred thousand perished at the destruction of Jerusalem. This argument will not stand the test; for the prophecy is definite. Then shall be great tribulation: not for twelve hundred years, but then, when the abomination is set up, or stands where it ought not.

It is not the number that perish, but the condition they are in at the definite time, that fills the prophecy. Matt. xxiv. 15, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains," &c. "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day; for then shall be great tribulation." Why not on the Sabbath day? Because the Jews were not allowed to go over seven hundred and twenty-nine paces and three feet on the Sabbath under penalty of being stoned to death. A good reason, surely. Was there any such law in A. D. 532? We find no account of such being the case.

Now let us examine Daniel. We find that the abomination of desolation being set up is consequent upon taking away the daily sacrifice. Now, we turn to Dan. viii. and we find that the daily was taken away by one of the horns that came up from the head of the goat; which the angel explains to represent the Grecian kingdom; and the horns the several kings. But few will admit this. They argue that the fifth horn was a Roman king. But if it was it must have been on another beast; for the angel plainly says, that the goat was the Grecian kingdom; and, of necessity, all of the horns that came upon that head must represent Grecian kings.

The next place we see the daily spoken of is in Dan. ix. 26, 27. No one will attempt to deny that this refers to the literal city of Jerusalem, and the sacrifice belonging to the Jews; and that the seventy weeks ended at the final desolation of their city.

Thus we find the daily taken away twice; once by a Grecian king and once by a Roman prince before the end of the Jewish age; or, in other words, it was a literal daily sacrifice which was taken away. Now, would it be doing justice to the prophecy in chapter xi, to say, it means a spiritual sacrifice, or taking the true worship from the christian? If this was the fact, we must carry it out spiritually; and that would be taking the worship of God out of the heart and placing the abomination in its stead. This cannot be true, because they who gave up in that way, would cease to be christians. If they did not give up, the daily is not taken away. May the Lord help us to understand his word, and search diligently as for hid treasures.

The Precious Bible.

"Thy word is very pure; therefore thy servant loveth it."—Psa. cxix. 140.

The words of David brought to my mind an incident in my past life. About 30 years ago, in sailing from Dublin, on the coast of Ireland, there was on board 247 passengers, one popish priest, and about 200 papists; the rest, including the ship's crew, were Protestants. I had a promise from the Captain to hold meetings in the ship when convenient. I held one, which was well received by all except his holiness the Priest. He condemned it, and influenced the captain, so that I could preach no more while on board. A few sabbaths afterwards, they got up a dance on deck. One methodist sister was sick, and she requested me to tell the captain; and, if he pleased, to have the dance stopped. But he refused to do so. When I went down, I told her what the captain said. I then asked the priest, but he muttered something about the heretic preaching. The sister then said, Brother Craig, will you read us some of the good book? I then took my Bible and read for some time, which seemed to disturb the priest very much. At length the dance ceased; and, as one of them was coming down the ladder, the priest called to him and said, you tell them to come here. (He was lying in his berth). Several came down the hatchway to the priest; and I closed up my Bible. It became dark with the crowd. The priest spake low but seemed much displeased with my reading a heretic book, as he called it. With that, eight or ten rough fellows rushed towards me, and some seized me by the throat, some by the breast, and others by my arms, and hurried me upon deck, and rushed me to the side of the vessel, telling me with an oath either to throw that heretic book overboard or they would throw me and it over very quick. I told them that I and my Bible would not part. Then up steps a large, rough looking fellow, and swears, saying, "Why do ye stand here to hear his damn preaching? throw him over," &c. So, dashing me on the deck, they took me by the legs or feet and put me over the side of the vessel; but still holding on to my feet, they swearing they would let me go, if I did not let go my Bible. But no, I could not, and would not part with it. I clasped it to my breast; and O what glory I then felt. Truly Christ was in me the hope of glory, at time. They drew me in, on deck, and left me wet three parts over. But I felt very happy, only my precious Bible got very wet. However, thank my good Lord, he saved it and myself, too; for which I bless his holy name. I still hold on to that same old Bible and it has been my meat and drink ever since, when I read it. Yes, it sheds greater light to me than all my other Bibles in my house. If I was compelled to part with any or all of my books, this, my Life-Boat, would be the last, and then not without a mighty struggle.

O, blessed be God for that precious good Book; it is my guide from this earth to the earth renewed. Now let me ask all the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, and of the Crisis, too, Do you love your Bibles so that you would rather die with them, than be saved without them? May God help us to love and obey its precepts. Amen.

ROMISH ANECDOTES.—The New York Tablet is publishing a series of "Catholic Anecdotes, or The Catechism in Examples, Translated from the French for the New York Tablet." No. 568 in the series is a fair specimen of the sort of stories which pass current with its readers. It is as follows:

A holy man, whose name I have forgotten, was one day at Mass, which was said by a priest who was rather worldly. What was his surprise, at the moment of Communion, to see a charming child, surrounded by luminous rays, reposing on the patten, in place of the species of bread! He was more astonished afterwards, for he saw that when the priest went to take Communion the child turned away his head, struggling with his hands and feet, as if to prevent the priest from receiving him into his mouth. The same saint had several other times the same vision, which gave him much thought. One day this secular priest, who was not bad at bottom, was conversing with him, and confessed that as often as he received the body of our Lord at Mass he had great trouble in taking it, and knew not how that could come. The servant of God was very glad of this confidence; he took occasion to tell the priest what he had himself seen, and advised him to examine his conscience well and change his life. Touched by this kind admonition, and the warning he had received, the priest applied himself to become more edifying. Some time after, the holy man who had warned him, assisting again at his mass, perceived the same child between his hands, at the time of Holy Communion, and saw him enter into his mouth and his heart joyfully and eagerly, which proved the sincerity of his conversion."—*Rodriguez, Chris. THE TRIBUNE ALMANAC.—This is one of the most popular almanacs published in this country. It might better be termed an epitome of the political history of the year, as its most important feature is the unparalleled accuracy with which its election tables, congressional acts and names of members of Congress and State officers are reported. It is also complete as in everything relating to an astronomical department. Its price is 20 cents. Published by the Tribune Association, New York City.

The Methodist Centenary collection now foots up over $3,800,000, and it is not all yet in. It will undoubtedly reach $4,000,000.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Our Mishap.

We were exceedingly unfortunate in our paper last week. When we came to the work of mailing, it was found that, by some misunderstanding, we had not our usual number of copies by at least seventy-five. The consequence was, some of our subscribers were not supplied at all, and others were served with damaged or imperfect copies. The printing department of our paper has caused us more trouble and vexation, from the outset, than anything else connected with it; and we do not know as we shall find a remedy till we have a printing press of our own. But what we ask now, is, if any of our subscribers, have a copy, or copies, of last week's issue that they are not anxious to keep, or to lay aside on file, if they will return them, directed, "HERALD OF LIFE, New York City," they will confer a favor on us, and enable us to supply some who have none. Any subscriber who received none of that number, or only such as was damaged so it could not be read, if they will inform us, we will try to furnish a perfect copy. Will those who can, attend to our request without delay?

OUR FRIENDS, who inquire, are informed that our son, though very low and feeble, is slowly improving; and we trust, through the blessing of our covenant God and LIFE-GIVER, will be restored to his usual health again: for which we desire to give our Lord the praise. Affliction sanctified is better than prosperity misimproved. Let all strive to live for Him who died to "redeem us by his blood."

We left Jacob last week, with a convicted sinner's "vow," but one of procrastination, not yet resolved to serve the God of his fathers, only he will do it hereafter, "if" God will do as he wishes. Jacob goes on to Padan Aram. Soon he enters into love matters, but finds his match in Laban, and begins to learn that "supplanting" is a business that others can carry on as well as himself; and for his first seven years toil he finds Rachel "supplanted," in his bed, by Leah. How "spiritual" he must have been not to have discerned this till morning light. This was a sad affair to poor Jacob; but he had to learn by the things he suffered. He was skillful in deceiving his poor old blind father, and now he is deceived in turn; and well he might think of what he said to his mother, "I shall bring a curse on me, and not a blessing." After an experience of fourteen years, in which Laban treated him as he pleased, "changing his wages ten times," as Jacob testifies, Jacob begins to "turn the tables" on Laban, and contrived, by means we will not now consider, to get Laban's flocks for himself. Not "spiritual" yet. "Animal" enough, one would think; for he seems not to know when he has "animals" enough; and with four wives, it is somewhat doubtful if he is entitled to the claim of being a "spiritual man."

At length, when he could no longer live in peace with Laban and his sons, he sets out, clandestinely, to return to Canaan, the land of his father; and his beloved wife, Rachel, stole her father's gods, or "images," showing that the "spiritual man," Jacob, could not have possessed an excess of spirituality, or Rachel would have imbibed enough of it not to desire, much less, to steal idols, and then lie about them to her father, as she did when he came into her tent to search for his "gods." But we pass that matter, and go on to see how he gets forward to meet Esau.

When Isaac blessed Jacob, he made him "lord over his brethren," and said, "let thy mother's sons bow down to thee:" and he tells Esau, "I have made him thy lord." Now, if this related to Esau and Jacob, personally, then Isaac was a false prophet, because, as the sequel will show, it was Jacob and his household who bowed down to Esau. The fact is, the blessing was prophetically given to the posterity of Jacob, when they should become a nation; for said God to Rebekah, the mother, "Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels: and the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and the elder shall serve the younger." Gen. xxv. 23.

To apply this prophecy to the individual persons of Esau and Jacob, is to make it a falsehood, for it never occurred; nor, up to the time we are treating of—Jacob's return with his family and flocks—is there any evidence that Jacob was more spiritual or less wicked than Esau. But now a crisis arrives in his history. He must meet Esau, against whom he had grievously sinned; and he well knew Esau had not been "angry with" him "without a cause," and a righteous cause too. But as the meeting cannot now be evaded, Jacob sets himself to prepare for it: he felt that he was "at the point to die," his wives and children, too; and it will take more than a "mess of pottage" to save him and them. He sends messengers to Esau, and told them to say, "Thy servant Jacob saith," &c. It does not look as if he felt that he was Esau's "lord." When the messengers return, they tell Jacob, "Thy brother Esau . . . . cometh to meet thee, and four hundred men with him." Gen. xxxii. 6. Did the messenger say, "Don't fear him Jacob; thou art his lord, and he shall bow down to thee?" Jacob knew better than that, if he knew anything about the prophecy. On the contrary, "Jacob was greatly afraid." "A guilty conscience needs no accuser," says the proverb, and Jacob realized it now, even if he never had before. He went to work to divide his flocks and his family into separate companies; and like a deeply convicted sinner, he begins to pray. We have no account that he ever prayed before: he had made vows, as we have noticed; but now he begins to pray in earnest; his "sin has found him out," he terribly fears the punishment of it at the hand of the injured party, Esau; so he calls upon God for help; not as his God, for he does not yet know Him as such. He says, "O, God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac," &c., "Deliver me I pray thee from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau; for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and the mother with the children," &c. Not "spiritual" yet, its all about "animal" things.

He next goes to work to prepare a present for Esau, consisting of "220 goats, 220 sheep, 30 milch camels with their colts, 40 kine and 10 bulls, 10 she asses and ten foals;" pretty large interest on a "mess of pottage" which he fraudulently made Esau pay for so dearly. He divides this present into a number of parcels, with a servant in charge of each, with the direction that, as they severally met Esau, and he should ask them "Whose are these before thee?" they should answer, "They be thy servant Jacob's: it is a present sent unto my lord, Esau," &c. "for he (Jacob) said, I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept me." All this showed Jacob was a cunning man, but there is no indication yet of spirituality; all is a mere animal contrivance to pacify one whom he knew he had wickedly wronged.

Now we arrive at a new point in his history. That night, having sent forward his present, and passed his wives and children over the ford Jabbok, "Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of day: and when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh; and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wrestled with him." (Animalism, yet, poor Jacob). "And he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh: and he said, I will not let thee go except thou bless me." (The animal begins to give way: his thigh is out of joint.) "And he" [that wrestled with him] "said unto him, What is thy name? And he said Jacob," (that is, supplanter: that was a confession of his sin, and a mark of true repentance; just what he needed to experience the change necessary to prepare him for the introduction of a spiritual element; and now we look for its implantation.) "And he" [that wrestled with him] "said, Thy name shall no more be called Jacob," [a supplanter] "but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." Gen. xxxii. 24–28. The supplanter is overthown; his sin is forgiven; the spiritual element enters: he is put under the government of the Spirit.

Let us see how matters go now. Esau makes his appearance. Jacob's wives and their children are divided, as we have seen. Jacob's fears are gone; he is Israel now, so he takes the front, before his family, and passed on to meet Esau, "and bowed himself to the ground seven times, until he came near to his brother." That does not look like his brother's bowing down to him, as fatalism construes the matter. Let us see. Is his brother that demon of a "brute;" that some suppose? What saith the record? "And Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck and kissed him: and they wept." Was anything ever more christian than that? Did he not forgive Jacob? And Jesus said, "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven?" Did he speak falsely? But, says one, "Esau was a reprobate, a child of the devil, a brute, not spiritual," &c. Jacob was the injuring party; Esau was the injured one, yet he forgave his brother; and thus acted as if he was a "partaker of the divine nature;" and that Jacob (now Israel) so understood it, is evident from his language to Esau, when he said, "I have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me." Gen. xxxiii. 10. This shows that Israel recognized a change in Esau such as he, himself, had experienced: he beheld in his loving, forgiving brother the likeness of that God he had struggled with the night previously. No man was worse treated by another than Esau had been by Jacob; but the moment he saw repentance and humiliation in him, he forgives it all, and embraces him heartily.

Esau, then, was as truly converted as Jacob, and became as spiritual a man as his brother. He was "profane" when he sold his birthright; but he was Godlike when he forgave his brother. But, it may be asked, Does not Paul say, that Esau having sold his birthright, "When he would afterwards have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place for repentance, thou he sought it carefully with tears?" and does that not show he was a reprobate, and that no mercy was extended to him?

To answer this question, we must first inquire what is meant by repentance, and in whom no place was found for it. Repentance often signifies a "change of mind," and is accompanied with a corresponding change in action. To say a sinner, who seeks "carefully with tears," can find no place for repentance in himself, is to contradict reason and scripture—"seek and ye shall find: knock and it shall be opened unto you." The repentance then, that Esau sought, was not in himself, but in his father: he sought to change his father's mind in relation to the blessing he had bestowed on Jacob, but he found it impossible to do it. When Esau came in with his venson, prepared for his father, Isaac "trembled exceedingly," for he now perceived that he had not blessed the one, with peculiar blessings, that he intended; but having done it no argument or tears of Esau could change his mind: he says, "I have blessed him; yea, and he shall be blessed." Gen. xxvii. 33. "When Esau heard the words of his father he cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry, and said unto his father, Bless me, even me also, O, my father!" Isaac acknowledged that Jacob "came by subtlety" and took away Esau's blessing; but having blessed him, Isaac, his father, would not for any reason attempt to reverse it. Esau then asked, "Hast thou but one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father! And Esau lifted up his voice and wept." Though the special blessing was bestowed on Jacob, "Isaac, his father answered and said unto Esau, Behold thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven above: and by thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother: and it shall come to pass when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck." Gen. xxvii. 38–40.

Who does not see here, as in the case of Jacob, that it is the "nations and peoples" who are spoken of, and not the individuals Esau and Jacob. For Esau never did serve his brother, in person; but his posterity served Jacob's posterity after they came to be "peoples and nations," as was said to their mother before their birth. Jacob's posterity were the stronger people; and for a long period held the Edomites—Esau's posterity—in subjection. When Israel—Jacob's posterity—came out of Egypt the Edomites refused to "let them pass through their land, though Moses besought them in the most civil and earnest manner. But they were not permitted to do it. See Numbers xx. 14–21. Up to this time, for more than four hundred years, the prophecy that "the elder should serve the younger" had not been fulfilled; and not till the days of king Saul, nearly four hundred years still later, do the Edomites appear to begin to be brought under Israel. See 1 Saml. xiv. 47. And not till the days of king David was Edom subdued and brought to serve the nation of Israel. David "put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and all they of Edom became David's servants." 2 Saml. viii. 14. Thus was Isaac's prophecy fulfilled, "by thy sword shalt thou live and serve thy brother," spoken to Esau, nearly a thousand years before; and so was the word of the Lord to Rebekah—"the elder shall serve the younger"—accomplished. But neither prophecy had anything to do with the animalism or spiritualism of Jacob or Esau, as individuals. Isaac's prophecy testified the time would come when Esau—that is, the "people and nation" sprung from him—should "break the yoke" of Jacob "from off thy neck." Accordingly we find, in the days of king Joram, it is said as follows: "In his days Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and made a king over themselves. So Joram went over to Zair, and all his chariots with him; and he rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about, and the captains of the chariots: and the people fled into their tents. Yet Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day." 2 Kings viii. 20–22. Thus Jacob's yoke was broken from off Esau's neck.

Edom was, however, subjected to great and terrible judgments for its wickedness, and often desolated. So was Israel, also. But Israel was preserved, because Messiah, by God's "election," was to come of that people, "according to the flesh." After Messiah's advent, the Jews—who were a part of Israel—were as terribly visited with judgments and their "mountains and heritage wasted for the dragons of the wilderness," as ever Esau's posterity and land had been. So that, we see God's "ways are equal;" and though, as a rightful sovereign, he elected Jacob's posterity, without regard to their being good or wicked, as the line in which His Son should "come in the flesh," yet Esau, personally, and his posterity were never rejected in a sense to exclude them from the benefit of God's mercy unto eternal life, by him who "tasted death for every man," whether of Jacob or Esau, or any other of "the families of the earth;" for God's promise to Abraham was, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Surely this included the imaginary "reprobate" Esau, and the "people" who sprang from him. Let us cease to represent God as a merciless tyrant, who condemns men without trial, and then forces them into circumstances where they unavoidably must sin to carry out purposes which could not otherwise have been accomplished.

Though we have spoken thus plainly of the views of the author of "Elijah the Prophet," towards himself we have not an unkind or unbrotherly feeling. Nothing but a deep sense of duty to God and His cause, could have induced us to differ from or speak of the position of our beloved brother; and nothing would please us better than to see him a "burning and shining light" in the world. If we have penned a word that has given him pain, we pray him to forgive us; we have not intended to say aught to grieve his kind heart, or impede his promised usefulness; for which, no one can pray more earnestly than we do and have ever done. May our LIFE-GIVER bless and guide him in the path of truth and life.

Responsibility: Indorsing: Prayer.

A friend writes us to know if we "indorse the views" of a writer in the HERALD, two weeks since, "on prayer?" We state every week that the EDITOR takes no responsibility for the sentiments of correspondents; nor are we disposed to "indorse" all that appears in our columns. Sentiments often appear with which we have no fellowship; but if in every case we should undertake to controvert them, we should probably bring on a reply, and none could tell where a profitless controversy would end. The main objects of this paper are, to advance the life theme, and that of the proximity of the advent of the "King of kings." Other topics are to some extent admitted; but we shall by no means hold ourself under obligation to indorse or controvert the views of every writer. We expect our readers to exercise a sound judgment in gathering the good and rejecting what they judge erroneous.

As to "prayer"—"Men ought always to pray, and never to faint." As to time and place, we wish to judge no man. The Saviour enjoins "closet" prayer, and condemns all ostentatious praying. We have no account that He ever prayed publicly, or with others than his disciples. Neither He nor any of the apostles, so far as we know, ever opened or closed their public discourses with prayer, and never enjoined other ministers to do so.

With these facts before us, we dare not condemn a brother if he thinks such public praying is a sin. He is responsible only to God for his judgment in the matter. That much sin is committed in public praying, the prophets and our Lord clearly testify. Let all men beware that they do not pray to be "seen" or heard "of men;" and that they do not pray for things they do not want. Such prayers are a sin and hypocrisy. We once heard of a minster who told his hearers, in his sermon, entire sanctification was impossible; that a person could not live a moment if he was wholly sanctified. In his prayer he prayed God to "sanctify them wholly; soul, body, and spirit;" thus virtually praying God to kill his congregation. There is much public praying that is no better. We once heard a minister, not a thousand miles from Brooklyn, N. Y., praying in his pulpit for mourners, who had lost a friend, that, as they should go to the grave, God would say to them, "he is not here, (for he is not, Lord?) Thus virtually asking God to tell the mourners a lie, for they knew, and God knew that he was there; for he was not "risen." The language of this minister was borrowed from the angels at Jesus' tomb, after his resurrection; but how inappropriate, false, and impious, to be used as this popular preacher employed it. Such praying we believe to be an abomination in the sight of God; and there is much like it in public prayers; the officiating person must say something, whether the prayer is for things really and understandingly sought or not. Beware of hypocrisy in prayer.

That the apostles and first christians prayed with and for each other, on special occasions, is abundantly shown. That they ever commenced their praying in a promiscuous assembly, we think cannot be proved. That on some occasions, when "the whole church" came "together into one place," if they conducted themselves properly, and an "unbeliever" came in among them, "he was convinced of all, and judged of all. . . . and so falling down on his face he will worship God," &c. 1 Corth. xiv. 23–25. Yet, even in this case, there is very little to show that there was audible praying in the unbeliever's presence, and his own praying was "on his face," and not in a standing and ostentatious position. God is not to be mocked in the matter of prayer. To make prayers, just to go through a form or ceremony, when there is no felt want, or earnest desire to receive the things asked for, is hypocrisy and mockery. Our prayers must "not go out of feigned tips;" such praying is an abomination in the sight of the Searcher of hearts. When we pray, let us consider what we need, and ask for them, expecting to receive, and we "shall have them."

What Shall I Do?

A young man, convinced of the truth of life only through Christ, is in trial because, his friends are grieved at the idea that he should leave the orthodoxy of the sect in which he has been educated. His parents are Methodists, and he has been such hitherto; and before him he had the prospect of some eminence in the ministry. The parents are full of entreaties, to persuade their son not to cast himself away by avowing such unpopular views, and entreat him to keep in the old paths wherein they have so carefully and prayerfully educated him. In these circumstances he asks, whether he ought to renounce his new views out of respect to his parents, or whether he ought to go forward embracing the truth and reducing it to practice, notwithstanding the affliction of his parents?

We answer, we know of no consideration that can justify a person in going contrary to his own views of truth and duty. According to the doctrine of Christ, we ought to go contrary to every one, rather than go contrary to our own convictions, or our own consciences. A young man circumstanced as our friend appears to be, should do everything to meet the views and wishes of his parents that he can do with a good conscience; but he ought on no account to do violence to his convictions; he ought on no account to do violence to his own conscience. Let our friend give every proof of respect and affection to his parents that he can consistently with his views of Christian truth and duty, and then let him leave the rest with God. If we are never to to give up old errors, and set ourselves against long standing errors and superstition, till our parents and wives, and other friends and kinstolks give us their consent, we may be slaves for ever. If we are never to advance in the knowledge of truth, till our friends and kindred give us their consent, we may never increase in knowledge at all. Where would the reforming efforts of Jesus have been, if he had allowed himself to be influenced by his relations and friends? Even his disciples themselves savored not the things that were of God, but the things which were of men; and if Christ had hearkened to their counsels, he would have shrunk from death, and left the glorious work to which his Father had appointed him unfinished. If we wish to have eternal life, or if we wish to be the means of life to others; if we wish to see a christian reformation; if we wish to see error, and craft, and profligacy, succeeded by truth, and purity, and joy, we must rise above every influence but a regard to truth and righteousness, and be content to lose the respect and affection of every friend or relative on earth.

We have had too much temporizing; there has been too much endeavoring to accommodate the views and wishes of friends and relations. It is time to act on a higher and nobler principle. Parents should not be encouraged to expect their children to prefer their will to the will of God, and friends should not be encouraged to expect their friends to buy their favor at the expense of truth and conscience. It is time to let all men know that we can accept nether friendship, nor wealth, nor reputation, as the price of our spiritual freedom, or of the approbation of our conscience and our God. If people can love us and befriend us with the understanding that we judge and act in all things for ourselves, as the servants of God alone, and not of men, we can accept

The Precious Bible.

"Thy word is very pure; therefore thy servant loveth it."—Psa. cxix. 140.

The words of David brought to my mind an incident in my past life. About 30 years ago, in sailing from Dublin, on the coast of Ireland, there was on board 247 passengers, one popish priest, and about 200 papists; the rest, including the ship's crew, were Protestants. I had a promise from the Captain to hold meetings in the ship when convenient. I held one, which was well received by all except his holiness the Priest. He condemned it, and influenced the captain, so that I could preach no more while on board. A few sabbaths afterwards, they got up a dance on deck. One methodist sister was sick, and she requested me to tell the captain; and, if he pleased, to have the dance stopped. But he refused to do so. When I went down, I told her what the captain said. I then asked the priest, but he muttered something about the heretic preaching. The sister then said, Brother Craig, will you read us some of the good book? I then took my Bible and read for some time, which seemed to disturb the priest very much. At length the dance ceased; and, as one of them was coming down the ladder, the priest called to him and said, you tell them to come here. (He was lying in his berth). Several came down the hatchway to the priest; and I closed up my Bible. It became dark with the crowd. The priest spake low but seemed much displeased with my reading a heretic book, as he called it. With that, eight or ten rough fellows rushed towards me, and some seized me by the throat, some by the breast, and others by my arms, and hurried me upon deck, and rushed me to the side of the vessel, telling me with an oath either to throw that heretic book overboard or they would throw me and it over very quick. I told them that I and my Bible would not part. Then up steps a large, rough looking fellow, and swears, saying, "Why do ye stand here to hear his damn preaching? throw him over," &c. So, dashing me on the deck, they took me by the legs or feet and put me over the side of the vessel; but still holding on to my feet, they swearing they would let me go, if I did not let go my Bible. But no, I could not, and would not part with it. I clasped it to my breast; and O what glory I then felt. Truly Christ was in me the hope of glory, at time. They drew me in, on deck, and left me wet three parts over. But I felt very happy, only my precious Bible got very wet. However, thank my good Lord, he saved it and myself, too; for which I bless his holy name. I still hold on to that same old Bible and it has been my meat and drink ever since, when I read it. Yes, it sheds greater light to me than all my other Bibles in my house. If I was compelled to part with any or all of my books, this, my Life-Boat, would be the last, and then not without a mighty struggle.

O, blessed be God for that precious good Book; it is my guide from this earth to the earth renewed. Now let me ask all the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, and of the Crisis, too, Do you love your Bibles so that you would rather die with them, than be saved without them? May God help us to love and obey its precepts. Amen.

ROMISH ANECDOTES.—The New York Tablet is publishing a series of "Catholic Anecdotes, or The Catechism in Examples. Translated from the French for the New York Tablet." No. 568 in the series is a fair specimen of the sort of stories which pass current with its readers. It is as follows:

A holy man, whose name I have forgotten, was one day at Mass, which was said by a priest who was rather worldly. What was his surprise, at the moment of Communion, to see a charming child, surrounded by luminous rays, reposing on the patten, in place of the species of bread! He was more astonished afterwards, for he saw that when the priest went to take Communion the child turned away his head, struggling with his hands and feet, as if to prevent the priest from receiving him into his mouth. The same saint had several other times the same vision, which gave him much thought. One day this secular priest, who was not bad at bottom, was conversing with him, and confessed that as often as he received the body of our Lord at Mass he had great trouble in taking it, and knew not how that could come. The servant of God was very glad of this confidence; he took occasion to tell the priest what he had himself seen, and advised him to examine his conscience well and change his life. Touched by this kind admonition, and the warning he had received, the priest applied himself to become more edifying. Some time after, the holy man who had warned him, assisting again at his mass, perceived the same child between his hands, at the time of Holy Communion, and saw him enter into his mouth and his heart joyfully and eagerly, which proved the sincerity of his conversion."—*Rodriguez, Chris. THE TRIBUNE ALMANAC.—This is one of the most popular almanacs published in this country. It might better be termed an epitome of the political history of the year, as its most important feature is the unparalleled accuracy with which its election tables, congressional acts and names of members of Congress and State officers are reported. It is also complete as in everything relating to an astronomical department. Its price is 20 cents. Published by the Tribune Association, New York City.

The Methodist Centenary collection now foots up over $3,800,000, and it is not all yet in. It will undoubtedly reach $4,000,000.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Our Mishap.

We were exceedingly unfortunate in our paper last week. When we came to the work of mailing, it was found that, by some misunderstanding, we had not our usual number of copies by at least seventy-five. The consequence was, some of our subscribers were not supplied at all, and others were served with damaged or imperfect copies. The printing department of our paper has caused us more trouble and vexation, from the outset, than anything else connected with it; and we do not know as we shall find a remedy till we have a printing press of our own. But what we ask now, is, if any of our subscribers, have a copy, or copies, of last week's issue that they are not anxious to keep, or to lay aside on file, if they will return them, directed, "HERALD OF LIFE, New York City," they will confer a favor on us, and enable us to supply some who have none. Any subscriber who received none of that number, or only such as was damaged so it could not be read, if they will inform us, we will try to furnish a perfect copy. Will those who can, attend to our request without delay?

OUR FRIENDS, who inquire, are informed that our son, though very low and feeble, is slowly improving; and we trust, through the blessing of our covenant God and LIFE-GIVER, will be restored to his usual health again: for which we desire to give our Lord the praise. Affliction sanctified is better than prosperity misimproved. Let all strive to live for Him who died to "redeem us by his blood."

We left Jacob last week, with a convicted sinner's "vow," but one of procrastination, not yet resolved to serve the God of his fathers, only he will do it hereafter, "if" God will do as he wishes. Jacob goes on to Padan Aram. Soon he enters into love matters, but finds his match in Laban, and begins to learn that "supplanting" is a business that others can carry on as well as himself; and for his first seven years toil he finds Rachel "supplanted," in his bed, by Leah. How "spiritual" he must have been not to have discerned this till morning light. This was a sad affair to poor Jacob; but he had to learn by the things he suffered. He was skillful in deceiving his poor old blind father, and now he is deceived in turn; and well he might think of what he said to his mother, "I shall bring a curse on me, and not a blessing." After an experience of fourteen years, in which Laban treated him as he pleased, "changing his wages ten times," as Jacob testifies, Jacob begins to "turn the tables" on Laban, and contrived, by means we will not now consider, to get Laban's flocks for himself. Not "spiritual" yet. "Animal" enough, one would think; for he seems not to know when he has "animals" enough; and with four wives, it is somewhat doubtful if he is entitled to the claim of being a "spiritual man."

At length, when he could no longer live in peace with Laban and his sons, he sets out, clandestinely, to return to Canaan, the land of his father; and his beloved wife, Rachel, stole her father's gods, or "images," showing that the "spiritual man," Jacob, could not have possessed an excess of spirituality, or Rachel would have imbibed enough of it not to desire, much less to steal idols, and then lie about them to her father, as she did when he came into her tent to search for his "gods." But we pass that matter, and go on to see how he gets forward to meet Esau.

When Isaac blessed Jacob, he made him "lord over his brethren," and said, "let thy mother's sons bow down to thee:" and he tells Esau, "I have made him thy lord." Now, if this related to Esau and Jacob, personally, then Isaac was a false prophet, because, as the sequel will show, it was Jacob and his household who bowed down to Esau. The fact is, the blessing was prophetically given to the posterity of Jacob, when they should become a nation; for said God to Rebekah, the mother, "Two nations are in thy womb, and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels: and the one people shall be stronger than the other people; and the elder shall serve the younger." Gen. xxv. 23.

To apply this prophecy to the individual persons of Esau and Jacob, is to make it a falsehood, for it never occurred; nor, up to the time we are treating of—Jacob's return with his family and flocks—is there any evidence that Jacob was more spiritual or less wicked than Esau. But now a crisis arrives in his history. He must meet Esau, against whom he had grievously sinned; and he well knew Esau had not been "angry with" him "without a cause," and a righteous cause too. But as the meeting cannot now be evaded, Jacob sets himself to prepare for it: he felt that he was "at the point to die," his wives and children, too; and it will take more than a "mess of pottage" to save him and them. He sends messengers to Esau, and told them to say, "Thy servant Jacob saith," &c. It does not look as if he felt that he was Esau's "lord." When the messengers return, they tell Jacob, "Thy brother Esau . . . . cometh to meet thee, and four hundred men with him." Gen. xxxii. 6. Did the messenger say, "Don't fear him Jacob; thou art his lord, and he shall bow down to thee?" Jacob knew better than that, if he knew anything about the prophecy. On the contrary, "Jacob was greatly afraid." "A guilty conscience needs no accuser," says the proverb, and Jacob realized it now, even if he never had before. He went to work to divide his flocks and his family into separate companies; and like a deeply convicted sinner, he begins to pray. We have no account that he ever prayed before: he had made vows, as we have noticed; but now he begins to pray in earnest; his "sin has found him out," he terribly fears the punishment of it at the hand of the injured party, Esau; so he calls upon God for help; not as his God, for he does not yet know Him as such. He says, "O, God of my father Abraham, and God of my father Isaac," &c., "Deliver me I pray thee from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau; for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me, and the mother with the children," &c. Not "spiritual" yet, its all about "animal" things.

He next goes to work to prepare a present for Esau, consisting of "220 goats, 220 sheep, 30 milch camels with their colts, 40 kine and 10 bulls, 10 she asses and ten foals;" pretty large interest on a "mess of pottage" which he fraudulently made Esau pay for so dearly. He divides this present into a number of parcels, with a servant in charge of each, with the direction that, as they severally met Esau, and he should ask them "Whose are these before thee?" they should answer, "They be thy servant Jacob's: it is a present sent unto my lord, Esau," &c. "for he (Jacob) said, I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept me." All this showed Jacob was a cunning man, but there is no indication yet of spirituality; all is a mere animal contrivance to pacify one whom he knew he had wickedly wronged.

Now we arrive at a new point in his history. That night, having sent forward his present, and passed his wives and children over the ford Jabbok, "Jacob was left alone; and there wrestled a man with him until the breaking of day: and when he saw that he prevailed not against him, he touched the hollow of his thigh; and the hollow of Jacob's thigh was out of joint, as he wrestled with him." (Animalism, yet, poor Jacob). "And he said, Let me go, for the day breaketh: and he said, I will not let thee go except thou bless me." (The animal begins to give way: his thigh is out of joint.) "And he" [that wrestled with him] "said unto him, What is thy name? And he said Jacob," (that is, supplanter: that was a confession of his sin, and a mark of true repentance; just what he needed to experience the change necessary to prepare him for the introduction of a spiritual element; and now we look for its implantation.) "And he" [that wrestled with him] "said, Thy name shall no more be called Jacob," [a supplanter] "but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." Gen. xxxii. 24–28. The supplanter is overthown; his sin is forgiven; the spiritual element enters: he is put under the government of the Spirit.

Let us see how matters go now. Esau makes his appearance. Jacob's wives and their children are divided, as we have seen. Jacob's fears are gone; he is Israel now, so he takes the front, before his family, and passed on to meet Esau, "and bowed himself to the ground seven times, until he came near to his brother." That does not look like his brother's bowing down to him, as fatalism construes the matter. Let us see. Is his brother that demon of a "brute;" that some suppose? What saith the record? "And Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell on his neck and kissed him: and they wept." Was anything ever more christian than that? Did he not forgive Jacob? And Jesus said, "Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven?" Did he speak falsely? But, says one, "Esau was a reprobate, a child of the devil, a brute, not spiritual," &c. Jacob was the injured party; Esau was the injured one, yet he forgave his brother; and thus acted as if he was a "partaker of the divine nature;" and that Jacob (now Israel) so understood it, is evident from his language to Esau, when he said, "I have seen thy face, as though I had seen the face of God, and thou wast pleased with me." Gen. xxxiii. 10. This shows that Israel recognized a change in Esau such as he, himself, had experienced: he beheld in his loving, forgiving brother the likeness of that God he had struggled with the night previously. No man was worse treated by another than Esau had been by Jacob; but the moment he saw repentance and humiliation in him, he forgives it all, and embraces him heartily.

Esau, then, was as truly converted as Jacob, and became as spiritual a man as his brother. He was "profane" when he sold his birthright; but he was Godlike when he forgave his brother. But, it may be asked, Does not Paul say, that Esau having sold his birthright, "When he would afterwards have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place for repentance, thou he sought it carefully with tears?" and does that not show he was a reprobate, and that no mercy was extended to him?

To answer this question, we must first inquire what is meant by repentance, and in whom no place was found for it. Repentance often signifies a "change of mind," and is accompanied with a corresponding change in action. To say a sinner, who seeks "carefully with tears," can find no place for repentance in himself, is to contradict reason and scripture—"seek and ye shall find: knock and it shall be opened unto you." The repentance then, that Esau sought, was not in himself, but in his father: he sought to change his father's mind in relation to the blessing he had bestowed on Jacob, but he found it impossible to do it. When Esau came in with his venson, prepared for his father, Isaac "trembled exceedingly," for he now perceived that he had not blessed the one, with peculiar blessings, that he intended; but having done it no argument or tears of Esau could change his mind: he says, "I have blessed him; yea, and he shall be blessed." Gen. xxvii. 33. "When Esau heard the words of his father he cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry, and said unto his father, Bless me, even me also, O, my father! "Isaac acknowledged that Jacob "came by subtlety" and took away Esau's blessing; but having blessed him, Isaac, his father, would not for any reason attempt to reverse it. Esau then asked, "Hast thou but one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father! And Esau lifted up his voice and wept." Though the special blessing was bestowed on Jacob, "Isaac, his father answered and said unto Esau, Behold thy dwelling shall be the fatness of the earth, and of the dew of heaven above: and by thy sword shalt thou live, and shalt serve thy brother: and it shall come to pass when thou shalt have the dominion, that thou shalt break his yoke from off thy neck." Gen. xxvii. 38–40.

Who does not see here, as in the case of Jacob, that it is the "nations and peoples" who are spoken of, and not the individuals Esau and Jacob. For Esau never did serve his brother, in person; but his posterity served Jacob's posterity after they came to be "peoples and nations," as was said to their mother before their birth. Jacob's posterity were the stronger people; and for a long period held the Edomites—Esau's posterity—in subjection. When Israel—Jacob's posterity—came out of Egypt the Edomites refused to let them pass through their land, though Moses besought them in the most civil and earnest manner. But they were not permitted to do it. See Numbers xx. 14–21. Up to this time, for more than four hundred years, the prophecy that "the elder should serve the younger" had not been fulfilled; and not till the days of king Saul, nearly four hundred years still later, do the Edomites appear to begin to be brought under Israel. See 1 Saml. xiv. 47. And not till the days of king David was Edom subdued and brought to serve the nation of Israel. David "put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and all they of Edom became David's servants." 2 Saml. viii. 14. Thus was Isaac's prophecy fulfilled, "by thy sword shalt thou live and serve thy brother," spoken to Esau, nearly a thousand years before; and so was the word of the Lord to Rebekah—"the elder shall serve the younger"—accomplished. But neither prophecy had anything to do with the animalism or spiritualism of Jacob or Esau, as individuals. Isaac's prophecy testified the time would come when Esau—that is, the "people and nation" sprung from him—should "break the yoke," of Jacob "from off thy neck." Accordingly we find, in the days of king Joram, it is said as follows: "In his days Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and made a king over all his chariots with him; and he rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about, and the captains of the chariots: and the people fled into their tents. Yet Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day." 2 Kings viii. 20–22. Thus Jacob's yoke was broken from off Esau's neck.

Edom was, however, subjected to great and terrible judgments for its wickedness, and often desolated. So was Israel, also. But Israel was preserved, because Messiah, by God's "election," was to come of that people, "according to the flesh." After Messiah's advent, the Jews—who were a part of Israel—were as terribly visited with judgments and their "mountains and heritage wasted for the dragons of the wildernes," as ever Esau's posterity and land had been. So that, we see God's "ways are equal;" and though, as a rightful sovereign, he elected Jacob's posterity, without regard to their being good or wicked, as the line in which His Son should "come in the flesh," yet Esau, personally, and his posterity were never rejected in a sense to exclude them from the benefit of God's mercy unto eternal life, by him who "tasted death for every man," whether of Jacob or Esau, or any other of "the families of the earth;" for God's promise to Abraham was, "In thee shall all nations be blessed." Surely this included the imaginary "reprobate" Esau, and the "people" who sprang from him. Let us cease to represent God as a merciless tyrant, who condemns men without trial, and then forces them into circumstances where they unavoidably must sin to carry out purposes which could not otherwise have been accomplished.

Though we have spoken thus plainly of the views of the author of "Elijah the Prophet," towards himself we have not an unkind or unbrotherly feeling. Nothing but a deep sense of duty to God and His cause, could have induced us to differ from or speak of the position of our beloved brother; and nothing would please us better than to see him a "burning and shining light" in the world. If we have penned a word that has given him pain, we pray him to forgive us; we have not intended to say aught to grieve his kind heart, or impede his promised usefulness; for which, no one can pray more earnestly than we do and have ever done. May our LIFE-GIVER bless and guide him in the path of truth and life.

Responsibility: Indorsing: Prayer.

A friend writes us to know if we "indorse the views" of a writer in the HERALD, two weeks since, "on prayer?" We state every week that the EDITOR takes no responsibility for the sentiments of correspondents; nor are we disposed to "indorse" all that appears in our columns. Sentiments often appear with which we have no fellowship; but if in every case we should undertake to controvert them, we should probably bring on a reply, and none could tell where a profitless controversy would end. The main objects of this paper are, to advance the life theme, and that of the proximity of the advent of the "King of kings." Other topics are to some extent admitted; but we shall by no means hold ourself under obligation to indorse or controvert the views of every writer. We expect our readers to exercise a sound judgment in gathering the good and rejecting what they judge erroneous.

As to "prayer"—"Men ought always to pray, and never to faint." As to time and place, we wish to judge no man. The Saviour enjoins "closet" prayer, and condemns all ostentatious praying. We have no account that He ever prayed publicly, or with others than his disciples. Neither He nor any of the apostles, so far as we know, ever opened or closed their public discourses with prayer, and never enjoined other ministers to do so.

With these facts before us, we dare not condemn a brother if he thinks such public praying is a sin. He is responsible only to God for his judgment in the matter. That much sin is committed in public praying, the prophets and our Lord clearly testify. Let all men beware that they do not pray to be "seen" or heard "of men," and that they do not pray for things they do not want. Such prayers are a sin and hypocrisy. We once heard of a minster who told his hearers, in his sermon, entire sanctification was impossible; that a person could not live a moment if he was wholly sanctified. In his prayer he prayed God to "sanctify them wholly; soul, body, and spirit;" thus virtually praying God to kill his congregation. There is much public praying that is no better. We once heard a minister, not a thousand miles from Brooklyn, N. Y., praying in his pulpit for mourners, who had lost a friend, that, as they should go to the grave, God would say to them, "he is not here, (for he is not, Lord!) Thus virtually asking God to tell the mourners a lie, for they knew, and God knew that he was there; for he was not "risen." The language of this minister was borrowed from the angels at Jesus' tomb, after his resurrection; but how inappropriate, false, and impious, to be used as this popular preacher employed it. Such praying we believe to be an abomination in the sight of God; and there is much like it in public prayers; the officiating person must say something, whether the prayer is for things really and understandingly sought or not. Beware of hypocrisy in prayer.

That the apostles and first christians prayed with and for each other, on special occasions, is abundantly shown. That they ever commenced their praying in a promiscuous assembly, we think cannot be proved. That on some occasions, when "the whole church" came "together into one place," if they conducted themselves properly, and an "unbeliever" came in among them, "he was convinced of all, and judged of all. . . .and so falling down on his face he will worship God," &c. 1 Corth. xiv. 23–25. Yet, even in this case, there is very little to show that there was audible praying in the unbeliever's presence, and his own praying was "on his face," and not in a standing and ostentatious position. God is not to be mocked in the matter of prayer. To make prayers, just to go through a form or ceremony, when there is no felt want, or earnest desire to receive the things asked for, is hypocrisy and mockery. Our prayers must "not go out of feigned tips;" such praying is an abomination in the sight of the Searcher of hearts. When we pray, let us consider what we need, and ask for them, expecting to receive, and we "shall have them."

What Shall I Do?

A young man, convinced of the truth of life only through Christ, is in trial because, his friends are grieved at the idea that he should leave the orthodoxy of the sect in which he has been educated. His parents are Methodists, and he has been such hitherto; and before him he had the prospect of some eminence in the ministry. The parents are full of entreaties, to persuade their son not to cast himself away by avowing such unpopular views, and entreat him to keep in the old paths wherein they have so carefully and prayerfully educated him. In these circumstances he asks, whether he ought to renounce his new views out of respect to his parents, or whether he ought to go forward embracing the truth and reducing it to practice, notwithstanding the affliction of his parents?

We answer, we know of no consideration that can justify a person in going contrary to his own views of truth and duty. According to the doctrine of Christ, we ought to go contrary to every one, rather than go contrary to our own convictions, or our own consciences. A young man circumstanced as our friend appears to be, should do everything to meet the views and wishes of his parents that he can do with a good conscience; but he ought on no account to do violence to his convictions; he ought on no account to do violence to his own conscience. Let our friend give every proof of respect and affection to his parents that he can consistently with his views of Christian truth and duty, and then let him leave the rest with God. If we are never to to give up old errors, and set ourselves against long standing errors and superstition, till our parents and wives, and other friends and kinsfolks give us their consent, we may be slaves for ever. If we are never to advance in the knowledge of truth, till our friends and kindred give us their consent, we may never increase in knowledge at all. Where would the reforming efforts of Jesus have been, if he had allowed himself to be influenced by his relations and friends? Even his disciples themselves savored not the things that were of God, but the things which were of men; and if Christ had hearkened to their counsels, he would have shrunk from death, and left the glorious work to which his Father had appointed him unfinished. If we wish to have eternal life, or if we wish to be the means of life to others; if we wish to see a christian reformation; if we wish to see error, and craft, and profligacy, succeeded by truth, and purity, and joy, we must rise above every influence but a regard to truth and righteousness, and be content to lose the respect and affection of every friend or relative on earth.

We have had too much temporizing; there has been too much endeavoring to accommodate the views and wishes of friends and relations. It is time to act on a higher and nobler principle. Parents should not be encouraged to expect their children to prefer their will to the will of God, and friends should not be encouraged to expect their friends to buy their favor at the expense of truth and conscience. It is time to let all men know that we can accept nether friendship, nor wealth, nor reputation, as the price of our spiritual freedom, or of the approbation of our conscience and our God. If people can love us and befriend us with the understanding that we judge and act in all things for ourselves, as the servants of God alone, and not of men, we can accept their love and friendship with delight; but if they cannot love us or befriend us unless we can give up our judgement or our conscience and make their will or their opinions our law, then we must forego their love and friendship, and be content to have our nearest relatives our foes. These our views; and we accordingly advise our friend, and we advise all who may be placed in similar cirumstances, to be faithful to the truth, to be faithful to that God who has revealed the truth to their minds; and to be content to suffer the loss of all things rather than be unfaithful to the truth for a single moment.

And we are persuaded if they follow this advice, that they will find great reason to rejoice in having done so in the end. That which is right, will always have the best results. Whether we wish to promote the welfare of our friends, or the spread of truth, or to secure our own advantage, we ought always to be faithful to the truth. We can gain nothing worth having, by complying with the will of friends in opposition to the truth; and we can lose nothing worth keeping, by unbending, unflinching adherence to principles. Be faithful to truth, to conscience, to God, and all things will work for your good.

Eld. Edwin Burnham.

Eld. Burnham having gone over to the Baptists, after being an Adventist for some years, and a believer in immortality only through Christ, and having rejected the doctrine of endless torments, now seems to find hard work to satisfy his new associates that he can be relied on. This fact was noticed a few months since in the HERALD OF LIFE. Some of our friends took offence, because we had stated his defection from the Adventists was "AS WE EXPECTED." But we have never seen cause to retract what we then said.

We have received, from a friend, The Christian Era, a Baptist paper, published in Boston. Under date Nov. 22, we find a letter in that paper, written from Concord, [Mass.] in which the writer speaks of Eld. Burnham as follows:

I have a word or two to say about Rev. Mr. Burnham, who offers himself to the churches as an evangelist. I cannot regard him as a safe man, and I think his relation to us is very equivocal. I find wherever he goes, he has the sympathy of the Adventists. His "Tract" is vigorously circulated in some of the places where he labors, and I have no evidence that he has recanted its abominable heresies.* And again, the reasons which he gives in the World's Crisis, for his joining the Baptists, are no reasons at all. I am tired and sick of reading communications from his friends in his defence. If he is a Baptist, out and out, why not say it in language that every one can understand. If he has renounced the heresies of Millerism and embraced Baptist views, he can, in a very few words, make himself understood. And it is due to the cause of truth, and to himself, that he should do it. Now I hope these few words will not awaken a "flourish of trumpets" from Mr. B.'s defenders. It is my wish to hear from him, and he ought to do it, and if he is an honest man, I cannot see how he can withhold. I have written plainly, but I have no unkind feelings toward Mr. B. I only wish the truth spoken and I hope we shall have it.

MERRIMAC.

We hope Eld. B. will yet find his way out of "Doubting Castle," where he said he found himself some years since: perhaps some of his friends said that for him; for no one seems certain where he is or has been: his new associates seem to have been put into "doubting castle" by him. If they should form a bridge of doubters strong enough, it may help him out. We wish him a happy escape somehow. We commend to his consideration an article on, "What shall I do?"

* Rev. Mr. Burnham stated to us at the Convention at Lowell, that he had publicly retracted his old errors, and the Holyoke Council fully endorse him as sound in doctrine. [ED. OF ERA.]

An Inquiry.

NEW ALBANY, IND., Jan. 8, 1867.

MR. GEO. STORRS: Dear Sir:—"The Life and Advent Union," or "Constitution" of it, has lead me to make the following inquiries in regard to it. What is it? Is it an organization, separate from church organization? or, is it the church? Does subscribing to the Constitution, and being governed by its requirements make one a member of the church? If it is a church, is any public profession to MORTAL man required, as in most churches? if so, what are the questions? If my inference is wrong, what is the church organization, and its requirements? An answer to these questions, through your HERALD OF LIFE, may be of some benefit to many of your readers.

Yours, respectfully,

G. W. LYNDALL.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.—The "Life and Advent Union" is not a church in any sense. For more than a year after its organization the following "NOTE" was appended to the Constitution:

NOTE.—This organization is in no sense a Church. It is simply a Union for the specific purpose of issuing, through the use of the press, such periodicals and other works as shall spread what we regard the truth of God. All persons are welcome to work with us, even though they differ from us in their views on some points; but the Union, by the 2nd Article, intended to guard against being thwarted in their design by votes of persons adverse to its object.—ED. OF HER.

The "Second Article," spoken of, was afterwards stricken out. The Constitution as then amended has continued to express the objects of the organization, and has nothing to do, pro or con, with any church arrangements or "Articles of Faith." No man is a member of a church by becoming a member of the UNION.

As to "what is the church organization, and its requirements?" we can answer only for ourself, as an individual. For twenty-six years we have made no attempt to organize a church. We neither encourage nor oppose such organizations as any may think necessary in their location; but we do not join any human organizations, called "churches." We have seen no good come of them, but much evil, sectarianism, bigotry and slavery. If love will not bind christians together, we despair of any and all other means of union. Christ is the Head of his church: and every soul united to Him, "by faith," and the Holy Spirit imparted, through faith, is a member of Christ's "body," the church. Such members are known of Him as his "sheep;" and belong to his "flock," whether men recognize them or not. Those giving evidence of such union with Christ, by their lives and conversation, we "fellowship," wherever we find them, whether in what are called organized churches or out of them; as to that, we never inquire. "Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God." Rom. xv. 7. Christ receives all that come to him with penitence and faith, though they have but little knowledge. They believe in him, and he accepts them as of his church. Men cannot better it.

A Proposition.

Can not BR. WENDELL or BR. CURRY take a trip west? It would require time and money; but there are many who would like to see either of them and hear them speak. There are those in Lake City, Minn., who are willing to aid in this enterprise; and I hereby pledge to either of these brethren fifty dollars, if they will come and tarry with us ten days, preaching for us during their stay. Now if brethren in different places between this place and New York feel like responding to this proposition, let them signify the same through the HERALD; and will either of these brethren signify their willingness to accept of the proposition? and would five dollars per day pay the expenses of said trip? Brethren, let us hear from you.

A. G. HUDSON.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

MODE, ILL., Dec. 31, 1866.

Thus another year is passed, and our blessed Lord has not yet come: neither has Elijah the prophet made his appearance; but that the day of his coming is not far distant is self evident from the fact, that the long trodden-down people (the Jews) are fast returning to the land of promise. This we regard as the sign of the Son of man in heaven; that is, the promised inheritance, the prophetic heaven; and when they are fully gathered, then God will send them their prophet, &.; and then the saints of God may with confidence look for the LIFE-GIVER. Let us be patient, brethren and sisters, and stablish our hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Let us, one and all, renewedly consecrate ourselves, with all our substance, to our heavenly Father.

As for ourself, we feel more determined than ever to spend and be spent in the glorious cause, inasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. And now we would express our gratitude to the brethren and friends for their liberality in donating to the western mission. It comes like the dews of Herman. Hope our friends East and West will continue to help in this glorious cause; and we want our friends to rest assured that every dollar will be devoted to the cause. We wish to buy a horse the coming spring, as the one we now have is only lent. We received all the packages sent us up to the date of your letter, Dec. 21, 1866; and we now send you two more new subscribers as a New Year's present, with the promise of more soon.

Since writing the above we have been informed that there is quite a number of believers in the life and death doctrine; but for fear of becoming unpopular they have concluded not to say anything about it, lest they suffer reproach. That the above statement is true, we have no doubt, for we are acquainted with not a few of the same cast; and we feel deeply on the subject, and wish to raise our protest against such a course for several reasons; and one is, it militates against our labor, and throws a mighty barrier in the way; and, in many cases, prevents others from openly confessing the truth, causing our hearts to be sad. The second reason is, they put their light under a bushel; and by so doing they disobey the command of the Saviour, "Let your light shine," &c. The third reason is, we fear they will fail of eternal life in the end, not being found faithful. The fourth is, that we had rather have one good, faithful, working soul, than a dozen that are sitting on the stool of "Do nothing." Give us, therefore, those who will work in the vineyard of the Lord. If they can't preach, they can help the cause by helping those servants that are devoting all their time to the work. Many are doing all they can. Let others do so; and altogether, the glorious cause will soon triumph. May the Lord help us to be faithful in the discharge of every known duty. Yours, waiting for the coming kingdom.

From Polly G. Pitts.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, Dec. 1866.

BR. STORRS:—While reading the HERALD OF LIFE I came across the words,

"A Query, by O. O. Rogers. What does a christian man sacrifice in order to serve the living and true God? As I hear that man must make a sacrifice to serve God, I wish to know what it is. Is it honor, or life, or property, or what is it? and how came he by it?"

While reading this query, and a remark by another writer in the HERALD, who said he had for twenty years rejected everything but the New Testament for his creed and constitution, I felt that all the darkness of men's minds on the doctrine of no life out of Christ arises from a lack of a thorough understanding of the scriptures of the Old Testament. The other day, while looking for an article among some writings, I came across a paper containing a few thoughts that I had written on this passage, "For we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ." Rom. xiv. 10. I suppose I had written them after talking with some one on the resurrection; for the text is often quoted by our opponents to prove the resurrection of all men. The thoughts were on the practice of the high priest, under the Aaronic priesthood, where, at the close of the year, he went into the holiest of all, to appear before the mercy-seat, or judgment-seat (for all Israel were judged) with the blood of atonement. Who stood before the judgment-seat? Ans. All Israel stood there, graven on the breast-plate of the high priest, and they stood there to be judged; "and as it is appointed unto man once to die, and after that the judgment;" so as many as had faith in the atonement, died in their substitute, or justice was satisfied in taking the blood life of their sacrifice. They were judged, justified, and their sins remitted for the year. But there was some of Israel who had not brought their sacrifice for the whole year; and it is said that soul was cut off from his people; though he stood there as a member of the tribe to which he belonged; for every tribe was marked on the breast-plate, yet he was judged according to his works. And as he had no sacrifice, his sins had no victim to be transferred to, and justice must have its demand, or be satisfied; and as the wages of sin is death, justice must take the blood life; he must die in his sins. So all Israel were judged; all stood before the mercy-seat, though there was no man within, save the high priest.

Now when the high priest came out, he blessed the obedient. Bless the Lord, when our great High Priest comes the second time, without a sin offering, unto life, all the faithful will be looking for him. Then he shall gather together his saints; those who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice. If any wish to know what sacrifice is acceptable to God, it is Jesus, "the Lamb of God." Who gave it to man? God. And thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift. How came man by it? By faith in God's promise. Faith lays its hand on God's offering, offered once for all; and the just shall live by faith. Glorious type; more glorious antitype. Bless God for the Old Testament as well as the New.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

There have been some important bills discussed in Congress, some of which have passed both bodies, but as the President is likely to veto them, they may not become laws. We shall chronicle them hereafter. The most interesting news is from abroad; we give some of the most important items. Evidently matters are shaping for the expected war in the East, as Russia is moving in the matter between Turkey and the Candians. This is the condition that France and England are awaiting to make their influence felt.

One Thomas Cook announces to the world that he is the new Messiah, and has located the kingdom of heaven at Berlin Heights, Erie County, Ohio.

The Unitarians are making a special effort to unite under the common banner of Liberalism the Univeraalists and others who will fraternize.

A Californian letter says a fall seven hundred feet higher than the famous Yo Semite has been discovered. The Yo Semite is thirteen hundred feet high.

FOREIGN.

It is but seldom that a political leader attains the proud position now occupied by Count Bismarck of Prussia. Military success as a rule is more nobly rewarded than political success; but it is not too much to say that Wellington, at the close of those magnificent compaigns which won for him the homage of kings and made him umpire of Europe, was scarcely greater than is Count Bismarck at the present moment. It is a position which pushes even royalty into the shade. So far as the estimate of posterity is concerned, who would exchange places with Bismarck and his royal master? The hopes of the German people and the permanent peace of Europe are dependent more upon Bismarck than upon any other single individual.

It has been estimated that the actual money loss to England by the cattle plague has been £3,573,000.

About the Jaffa colony, the writer from whom we have copied the accounts already given, says in a later statement: I wrote last week of the pitiable condition of the colony at Jaffa. Later news confirms their sufferings and the fact that some 20 deaths had occurred among them; but it also brings out another side to the question of who is the real author of these calamities. The leader of the enterprise claims that the colonists have been plundered by the American Consul at Jaffa and not by him. He has appealed to Constantinople to have the Consul impeached. It is true that several thousand pounds have passed through the Consul's hands. He has purchased land and other things for them. As he is a German Jew, not an American at all, it is possible that some of this money may have stuck to his fingers, and any way, it is a shame to our Government to appoint such a man Consul there. But, at the same time, if I am correctly informed, the colonists feel that they have been deceived, if not swindled, by the man who brought them out. I am sorry for them, and they must be helped in some way, but the whole idea of this expedition was an absurd one, and ultimate failure was the only result possible.

The advices received from the island of Candia state that the Cretans had fought another battle, in which they claimed a victory over five thousand Turks.

The Cretan Assembly has issued a call to all the Powers of Europe to send agents to Candia to witness and report the condition of the country.

It is said there is much excitement in Paris over the changes in the Imperial Cabinet, and it is thought they indicate more warlike policy on the part of the Emperor.

Reports from Madrid represent that the Spanish Government is taking great military precaution against the threatened outbreak in Spain.

It is said that the Governments of Great Britain and France have come to a mutual agreement not to interfere in the differences between Greece and the Sublime Porte, unless Russia should undertake to intervene.

Advices from the Mediterranean state that the Consul of the United States in the Island of Candia refused to recognize the blockade of Candia by the Turks, because of its alleged ineffectiveness.

Emperor of France issued a decree which may with great propriety be classed as one of those remarkable and original utterances, the production of which, at certain periods and under particular circumstances, signalizes the epochs of his reign. Napoleon, in fact, orders a French reform bill, the working of which, he declares, "will crown the edifice of a State founded upon the national will."

The dancing master of the Prince Imperial, who received the privilege of the cloak, cane and umbrella-room of the Paris Exhibtion, has sold his right to the profits of the apartment for $25,000 in gold.

England, it is said, will officially offer to the government in Washington to submit the Alabama claims to arbitration.

Maximilian's grandiloquent announcement that he would fight to the last for his crown, will only serve to make his defeat more ignominious. The French troops are embarking to return home, and a few more weeks are likely to inform us of the real end of the Empire.

It is curious that while all the Romanists tremble for the Pope's fate, and most of them counsel him to flee, the Italian statesmen are straining every nerve to induce him to stay, and are taking every possible precaution that no harm shall befall him.

Two English lords have lately appeared as preachers. The Earl of Cavan preaches in the Free Church in Dufftown, to large congregations, and Lord Adelbert Percy Cecil recently delivered a religious address in the national school-room in Easton, and another at an out-door meeting in Wothrope.

A Vienna semi-official paper publishes a sensational article, stating that Austria, under the pretext of organizing her army, places it on a war footing, in order to invade Turkey and seize upon the key of the Dardanelles before any other foreign nation. According to the same paper, Austria is to proclaim from Galicia the re-establishment of the kingdom of Poland.

The Paris correspondent to the Globe says the principal event of the day is the receipt of the telegram stating that Greek troops have been disembarked at Crete, and that others are being concentrated on the Turco-Greek frontier. If this be true there is no rashness in predicting that it will produce a war between Greece and Turkey, unless, indeed, the protecting powers of the former should compel the recall of the troops.

The London Times says an open collision between Turkey and Greece, although perhaps still remote, is daily becoming less improbable.

The American Consul at Crete reports the loss at Arkadi, by the blowing up of the monastery as follows: Turkish killed, over 1,500; Greek loss, killed and wounded, 193 men; women and children, 373. The affair has produced a profound impression in Conspee.

The popular discontent in France with the new army scheme is so great that the government deems it the wisest policy to retrace its steps and make concessions.

The year 1866 will be remarkable in the history of France for the fiasco of its foreign policy. The expedition against Corea has been abandoned, as well as the occupation of Rome and Mexico. It is also reported that the Empress has been compelled to give up her intention of visiting Rome, because the Papal Government beforehand indicated its unwillingness to listen to any proposition for effecting a reconciliation with Italy.

The Dragon Spirit.

The Rev. Dr. Cumming, in commenting on the infidelity of the age, remarks of the city of London: "Within radius of eight miles of St. Paul's cathedral, there are about two millions of people, the largest population ever assembled within the limits of a city. If all the churches and chapels—Protestant, Established, Dissenting, Roman Catholic, and Socinian—were as full as they could hold, there would not be within them one fourth of that mighty population. If I take them at a season when the weather is fine, and the public health is good, and everything is favorable, you will find the average attendance to be each only one fourth full. If that be the average, the result will be that there are never more in church on one Sunday, in all denominations, than, if I take the largest, about 200,000 people, out of a population of two millions. And how many, do you think, of that number, are communicants? Startling fact! awful stain upon the missionary zeal—the aggressive efforts of the metropolis! there are scarcely 60,000 who so far profess the Gospel as to avail themselves of the opportunity of commemorating the dying love, and receiving the pledges of the Second Advent of the Lord Jesus Christ. So true is this, that the steamboats and the railways alone carry from the metropolis every Sunday morning a greater population than all the churches and chapels together any one day contain."

The reverened Doctor states further, that there are in London, 200,000 Roman Catholics; 12,000 children trained to pick pockets, with the greatest tact, speed and success, or to plunder houses with the best chance of escape; 3,000 receivers of stolen property; 4,000 are annually committed for crimes; 10,000 gamblers; 20,000 live by begging; 30,000 regular thieves; 150,000 habitual gin drinkers; 150,000 of both sexes who lead a life of debauchery and licentiousness. Thus there is a greater number of ostensibly depraved and abandoned characters in the service of Satan, than there are, during Sunday, in the house of prayer."

"This great city sends annually a million of money for the conversion of the ends of the earth, and rightly so; but alas! there are millions more needed for the conversion of the population at home. And melancholy and painful spectacle! in the midst of this scene of demoralization, ignorance, and crime, the ministers of the everlasting Gospel are found quarrelling and disputing with each other about details of discipline and forms of worship."—Selected.

UNALTERABLE.—There are certain great principles which Christ intended never to be changed, and which cannot be changed or set aside, without repealing the Gospel, and upsetting Christ's kingdom altogether. Among those great principles are the following:

1. That we should call no man master.

2. That we should look on each other as brethren.

3. That those who would be greatest must humble themselves, and become as little children, and the servants of all.

4. That we should not be the servants of men—that we should not be in subjection to them.

5. That every one should be free to search the scriptures for himself, and to judge for himself as to their meaning and act freely, according to his judgment, without respect to any authority of men.

6. That no new terms of christian fellowship should be established; that nothing should be required as a condition with any christian church but what Christ required as a condition of fellowship with him, namely, a belief in him as the Messiah, and subjection to his authority.

7. Every precept of Christ is to be inculcated; every prohibition enforced; every doctrine preached. The religion of Christ is to be unaltered.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons, in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

GEO. STORRS,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

LOOKING TO JESUS.

BY MARIA S.

In hours of trial, when the heart
  Is weary, fainting, sore,
When mists and clouds are gathered round,
  And storms, in darkness, pour;—

When joy seems turned to bitterness,
  And Hope sits trembling, weak,
When Faith, beclouded, is cast down,
  And does not pray or seek;—

When all the golden light of day
  Seems quenched in endless night,
Without one star to guide the way
  To realms of peace and light;—

When blindly on we grope our way,
  Each step unproved, unknown,
And fail to see the guiding Hand
  That never leaves alone;—

Oh! then, how sweet to look away
  From darkness, doubt, and fear,
And feel, that tho' the clouds are dark,
  We have a Saviour near.

A loving Friend who knows the way,
  Has trod the path we tread,
Has suffered, wept as never we
  May weep when joys are fled.

Who bore the cross, the taunt, the jeer,
  Upon whose brow was pressed
The crown of cruel, cruel thorns,
  Where other crown should rest.

Who died for us, yet rose again,
  Triumphant from the dust!
Serenely we may lean on Him,
  In Him securely trust,

And know, that tho' the gathering gloom
  Encompass us around,
The light will break, the trusting soul
  Shall be with glory crowned.

LEARNING FROM A DOG.

You think that would be rather hard, perhaps. Let us see.

There are many kinds of dogs. There seems to be as great a variety of disposition among them as among boys and girls. Some of them are very disagreeable. It may be that you have one in mind just now, belonging to a neighbor—a noisy, snappish, ill-natured animal—that delights in rushing out and barking at passers by; frightening ladies and timid children; worrying horses, and cattle, and cats and dogs too, if they happen to be smaller than itself; for such dogs are usually cowardly. And you have often wished that somebody would put that brute out of the way. Not much may be learned from such a dog, it's true. There is one thing, however, you can learn—that it is easy for a child or a man, as well as a dog, to make himself uncomfortable and hateful to everybody by being surly and quarrelsome.

But I want to tell you of a good lesson to be learned from a dog; for there are many from which such a lesson might be learned. This is the lesson: Do the very best you can.

Boys' and girls' "best" is much better than that of the wisest dog; but, when I have heard of things that have been done by faithful dogs I have felt that we who are human ought to learn something from them. I have seen a large Newfoundland dog that belonged to a shipmaster. The dog was the pet of the family of his owner. At one time, a ship which his master commanded was wrecked. She had struck upon either a reef or a sand bar not far from the shore. The sea was breaking over her; it was too rough for any small boat to live; so that the crew could not leave the ship, nor could help be sent to them from shore. They were all in great peril. This dog was there. At a word from his master, the noble fellow took a small line in his mouth, plunged into the sea, and though sorely beaten and tossed about by the waves, safely reached the shore. By means of that line, a large rope was drawn from the ship to the shore by those who were waiting there; and thus the whole ship's crew were saved. Do you wonder that the dog was thought a great deal of afterwards?

I read in The British Workman of remarkable dog named "Chum.' He is very wise and very useful. In the morning, he will take a bell from the kitchen table, holding it in his mouth by the leather thong attached to it, and go to the chamber door of each of his master's apprentices, ringing the bell, and thus calling them up.

When anything has been placed in Chum's care, no matter what, even if it be a bit of food of a kind most inviting to a dog, he will neither touch it himself nor let another touch it. If his master says "Mine," as he lays a piece of beefsteak under Chum's nose, that beef is safe. But let the master say, "Yours," and Chum knows what to do with it. At family worship he seems to understand the necessity of decorous behavior, and always sits quietly under a chair till that exercise is over. He goes on errands with a basket in his mouth containing the article or the message sent; and, if told to "make haste back," he never loiters. And though Chum is very ready to show a set of white teeth if interfered with while in the discharge of his duty, yet, when off duty, he is a jolly, playful companion, and delights in children. They are always glad to have him join them in their sports.

Chum is only a dog; but who will doubt that he does the best he can? All that the kindness and patience of wiser friends have taught him he willingly and faithfully does. He, and other dogs like him, make themselves useful, and happy too, we may believe, by doing their best.

Boys and girls can do better. There is much for you to learn that will make you wiser and happier and more useful. God has given you these powers of yours, so much superior to those of the brute. He has given us intelligence above a brute. He expects us all to do the best we can; and we can do very much that is good and kind and noble if we ask his help He invites us to ask his help; he is ready to grant it always. He knows how we have lived, and what we have done, and knowing as we do that we are sure to fail of doing the best we can without asking him, for Christ's sake, to make us strong and brave for all that is worthy of such beings as we are, let us not forget to ask him every day. Thus this lesson from one of his humble creatures will not be lost.—Selected.

P. SAWYER TO J. T. CURRY.

BR. CURRY:—Your remarks in the HERALD No. 11, in response to mine, in No. 10, have been carefully considered, and although you seem to be certain that I am yet to be somehow illuminated, and find that I have been darkly wandering in the grotto of error, I can assure you that I feel nevertheless certain that you are to be sadly disappointed.

You affirm, with much confidence, that the imaginary lost Israel is found in the Teutonic and Celtic races, and that you are capable of demonstrating it to be a fact. I am acquainted with the arguments of Wilson in "Our Israelitish Origin," and must say, I feel no convictions of truth in that direction. Your arguments shall be attended to when they reach me, and reviewed in the HERALD, if you request it.

In my second argument, which I presented in proof that that portion of Israel not returning with Judah and Benjamin to their own land, lost their identity by amalgamation with the Assyrians or other nations, I urged the fact, that the natural tendency to amalgamation was permitted, by God, to prevail to a great extent before and after the captivity, as testify to the latter, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Josephus. I endeavored to prove to you, that a fit and proper representation of the ten tribes did return to the land of Palestine, and became with Judah and Benjamin one people, and that one king ruled over them. I made no attempt to show, as you seem to suppose, that the entire ten tribes lost their identity, in foreign lands, but the remnant there remaining. You admit the harmony of my argument with nature, but treat facts as of no weight. Now I submit to you, and our readers, that facts in the history of Israel should have weight in the settlement of this question, as well as the very evident tendency of their nature.

You say, "the same God who scattered Israel, and drove the ten tribes beyond the Euphrates, declared he would preserve their identity." You quote in proof Hosea i. 6–10. Very true, but mind you, their identity was to be preserved only to the time of their being gathered to be with Judah one nation, as testifies the next verse, 11. It reads, "Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land; for great shall be the day of Jezreel."

In closing your remarks on this point, you say, "the question is, Is Jehovah true? If so, the identity of lost Israel is preserved." This bold conclusion of yours by no means follows. Let God be true though you should be mistaken. You should have said, If Jehovah's utterances are true according to my understanding, and if the gathering of Israel to be one with Judah is not in the past, then the identity of the ten tribes is still preserved. But on the latter your cause would be stranded.

I did not "assume" anything relative to the decrees of Cyrus and Ataxerxes, for all the terms used, as well as the history of their application and effect, go to show them not partial, but general in their application to "all the people of God," both Judah and Israel. I am aware that Josephus is very much in harmony with your views relative to the non-return of the ten tribes, as your quotation from him shows; but you might as well quote from any other author agreeing with yourself. I cannot receive him as authority in this case. You well know that Josephus differs from Ezra and Nehemiah, on some very essential points; and I have no doubt that you make him bow to them as the better authority. So in this case, I prefer that the prophets with Ezra and Nehemiah should be my guide to faith, rather than this unconverted Jew. Josephus and his people, you will recollect, interpreted prophecy and history to the rejection of Jesus, the anointed, and coronated King; and I can but regret that your fair fame, as a biblical critic, must at all hang suspended upon such testimony.

You object to my application of Ezek. xxxvii. 15–22, and remark, "Look again, I pray you, and see what a mistake you have made." The mistake is not mine, my good Br., though policy, and the want of something better, may lead you to thus claim. From the fact that in ver. 22, it is said, "One King shall reign over them all," in ver. 24, "And David my servant shall be King over them," and in ver. 25, "David shall be their prince forever," you claim it's a mistake to apply the above scripture to the return of Judah and Israel at the close of the seventy years captivity, in as much as no David ruled over them after their return.

You, with a significant air, ask me, "What King?" and then proceed to answer, that David is that King, leaving your readers to suppose that you find in the person of David this identical King. But you neither so teach or believe. Once had you have stated that you understand the "One King," or "David,' to refer not to David personally, but to a representative of David, on his throne, you would not have darkened counsel, but would have enabled our readers at once to see that no mistake was necessarily mine, for David could be represented in the past as well as in the future.

I understand that David's throne, properly existed from David to "David's Son and Lord," through whom it is "established forever." True, from Zedekiah, the last king of Judah to the ruin of Jerusalem and the nation of the Jews, A.D. 70, this throne of David's was "overturned and overturned," Ezek. xxi. 27, through the hands of the Chaldeans, Macedonians, and Romans, when he "whose right it is" possessed it. Any king during this time exercising authority over the united kingdoms of Judah and Israel was the "one king," or representative of David. When you have convinced the American people that their loved land, America, is the grave of Israel, the valley of dry bones, and that they themselves are the dry bones of Ezek. xxxvii., as I understand you to believe, then perchance I may see some flaw in my chain of argumentation; but I apprehend not before.

You say, "Your quotation from Jer. l. 1–4 would help your position if there were no anti-typical Babylon. Or do you reject the Apocalypse?" You know that you have never received from me, in public or private, one word that could in the least lead you to suppose that I "reject" any portion of the commonly received word of Divine truth. And I must insist that christian candor or courtesy ought to have saved you from such an unjust insinuation.

I am happy to inform you, if such information is needed, that I receive the Apocalypse as authoritatively addressed to the household of faith; but not your interpretation of it. I feel prepared, without "rejecting" John or Jeremiah, to show that Jer. l. 1–4 cannot be fulfilled by the fall Babylon, Rev. xiv. But with this remark I must pass it for the present.

I agree that Ezra and Nehemiah include Judah and Benjamin in their use of the term "Israel;" but that it is used to designate them alone, I deny. You call my special attention to Neh. vii. 6. I am not ignorant of the fact that the genealogy there spoken of is that of Judah and Benjamin alone, who "'came up at the first," ver. 5, with Zerubbabel. Their number was 31,089. The number of the whole congregation, not including 7,582 servants and singers, was 42,360.

Now you will perceive that the number of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin is not equal to the whole number of the congregation, wanting 11,271. This number, I claim, represents that portion of the ten tribes which came up "at the first," with the other two tribes. If such a number of the ten tribes returned, at the first, how vast may be the numbers that may have returned with Ezra, Esdras, and Nehemiah, during the 110 years intervening before Nehemiah penned his history. If this subject needs and deserves from me a more critical and minute exposition, prepare the way and come up to the work; but if not, let us advance, if you please, into the more interesting field of inquiry relative to the establishment of the Kingdom of Christ on earth at the close of the Jewish age. Yours for "the faith once delivered to the Saints."

"THY KINGDOM COME."—No. 7.

BY SAMUEL MASON.

Now as Christ is conclusive HEIR to the inheritance, how is it that Abraham and the innumerable multitude who are to be blessed with him are also to be inheritors of that possession? They are provided for, thus, "For as many," says Paul, "as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God; for ye have not received the spirt of bondage, (the Jewish law) again to fear, but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father, the Spirit also beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God, and if children, then HEIRS, heirs of God, and joint heirs with CHRIST, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Rom. viii. 14–17. And again, "If ye be CHRIST'S, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the PROMISE." Gal. iii. 29. Hence, though Christ is the only heir, yet all that believe in him, he considers joint heirs with himself to the inheritance promised to Abraham, which is the WORLD. This is not a legal, but a gracious heirship on the part of Christ, granted to his people It is expressed thus—"Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory." John xvii. 24. Here then we have presented one harmonious array of direct testimony from the great laboratory of truth, establishing the doctrine that this earth is to be the final kingdom, and the inheritance of the saints; and that it is perfectly beyond the reach of successful contradiction, and not a single ray of its light can be extinguished by the speculations of the bigoted caviller; neither can it be reached by the sarcastic sneers of the skeptic; for there is not a feature of it but that is in perfect keeping with sound sense, reason and philosophy.

The glorious doctrine here involved is the very Alpha and Omega of all intelligent christian action, presenting the harmony of revelation in defence of this grand truth, that when this earth shall have been redeemed and beautified according to the covenanted declaration of the great Jehovah, namely, that he will make the place of his feet, his footstool, or the EARTH GLORIOUS, and then gather out of every nation, kindred, tongue, whether dead or living, and lead them into the eternal possession of this Paradisiacal Eden, with the Lord Jesus Christ at their head, who is styled "The Captain of our salvation." Then shall the shout go up, "To him that loved us, and washed us in his own bolod, be glory, power and dominion, forever and forever, and we shall REIGN on the E H!" Amen. Lord, let "thy kingdom come."

We conclude, therefore, that we have presented arguments sufficient to vindicate the proposition here advanced relative to the kingdom of our Lord; and we have seen that neither of the vital constituencies of that divine establishment are now in existence. Jesus, though decreed by Jehovah to be King of kings, and who was (as he declared) born for that express purpose, is not yet King, but our High Priest; and, also, that the subjects of this kingdom, for whom it was prepared from the foundation of the world, are not only disinherited, as yet, but are also chained in the ruins of death's sleep, dissolved into common earth, where fact, they cannot have a conscious existence, with the exception of those few HEIRS of that kingdom now living; and also that the territory of the divine empire is now sympathizing with the whole creation cursed by sin, groaning and writhing in mortal agonies for her redemption, at which event the dislocated elements of this kingdom are to be brought together and consolidated; death loses its power over the saints, having now been made incorruptible and immortal; and the earth restored to the same state of blooming incorruptibility, and Christ, the eternal King, glorified.

These sections of that kingdom being brought together, the holy affinity perfected, then the grand work "of building up Zion" will be consummated, and then, also, shall be heard the following oration by the Son of God, delivered at the celebration of the marriage supper of the Lamb, in the presence of all the glorified saints there assembled, thus, "I am the Alpha and Omega. I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore, amen; and have the keys of Hell and Death! (denoting his victory over them,) I am the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which Is, and which Was, and which is to come, the Almighty!" And then also will be sung, by immortal voices, the national anthem of the new creation, heard by the revelator, and described thus, "And I heard, as it were, the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia! and a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces and worshipped God, saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and are to come, because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned. Let us be glad, and rejoice and give honor to him, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready, And to her was granted, that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white. And he said unto me, write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he said unto me, These are the true sayings of God." Thus is celebrated the dedication of a substantial, glorious, incorruptible, and immortal kingdom; established under the whole heavens, and which shall have no end. This is something worth praying for.

We are aware that this idea exalts our globe infinitely superior to all other locations in the vast universe of Jehovah; but does the idea that makes it insignificant rest upon any other foundation than mere speculative philosphy, perfectly unsusceptible of proof? For instance, does science know of any rule by which the density of any planet or star in the wide realm of nature, can be estimated? If not, then the sun, although immense in size, may not be of sufficient density to sustain upon its surface a substantial body like that of the human form. And so, also, it may be with other stars and planets, and therefore inadapted as a location for immortal beings.

"ELIJAH THE PROPHET."

In the HERALD of Jan. 9th, an article appears under this head by M. C. H. It says, "yet if we take him (John) at his word, as it reads, he denies that he is a prophet, even, as well as to deny that he is Elias." I think there is no need to restrain the truth, to make a real contradiction between our Saviour and John, in order to clear up an apparent one. John did not say that he was not a prophet. If he had said this, and as Christ said he was a prophet, we should have it that Christ affirmed what John positively denied. This is not true, I think that our text is correct, "Art thou that prophet?" They evidently referred to the prophet of whom Moses spake, "A prophet shall the Lord raise up unto you, of your brethren, like unto me," &c., referring to Christ.

Besides, the questions put to John are very definite. They wished to know who he was. "Art thou Elijah?" evidently referring to Malochi; and John must have known that they had their mind on that most positive promise, "He answered, I am not. Art thou that prophet?" They evidently referred to some particular prophet; and of course would not ask John if he were a prophet. This would have been very indefinite. If John had said that he was a prophet, they would have known no more who he was, than if he had said nothing. John knew that they did not ask him such a loose and indefinite question, as his answer shows. Suppose they had said, Art thou a prophet? and John had said, Yes, that would not have secured the objects for which they came to John, namely: to know who he was. Again if they did say a prophet, then John positively denied that he was a prophet. This would be plainly denying, what Christ affirmed of him. I am not prepared to entertain such contradictions between Christ and John. Not much is gained by referring to the Margin; especially when by so doing, a plain contradiction is made out. The word, that, is properly in the text. Art thou that prophet. It reads as it should read

THE INCREASE OF CALAMITIES.

It is a startling truth, and one very hard to realize, that all the fearful predicted signs of the coming of Christ shall be unread and unperceived by the great bulk of mankind. Our instinctive feeling is, that it must be otherwise, that they will force themselves to some extent on the notice of all. Yet there is no plainer statement in the inspired Word than the warning of our Lord himself that it shall not be so. That men will go on "eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage," heedless of anything strange or unusual in the world about them, until the very hour when their Lord shall come in judgment.

It may be the growth of troubles will be very gradual, and men will become used to them, and argue that it has always been so. We know this tendency exists in mankind, and have seen how, in a few months, our peaceful people became accustomed to the horrors of war, and made light of them. At the beginning, every skirmish thrilled the whole nation; at the end, daily battles scarce furnished a paragraph in the papers. However it is brought about, thus it is to be.

Whether the day of the Lord come this year or ten years hence, when it comes the careless world shall not recognize its forerunning signs. This truth of God's word should teach the christian that he must be watchful. That the signs will not necessarily be obvious, but must be searched out.

I read lately in the "Evening Post" the following statement of losses by fire, taken from the reports of the insurance companies: "The losses during the last eighteen months in the country have been ninety millions of dollars"—sixty millions per annum! "For ten years before the war the annual losses did not exceed twenty-two millions."

That is, the loss by fire has been almost threefold the past year. A year or two since, the marine insurance companies of London were almost ruined by an extraordinary number of losses at sea.

I would not build much upon these facts. The thoughtful Christian may, however, do well to note them, and compare them with other facts.

We can lose nothing by being widely awake to all the striking manifestations which are developing themselves, and so strangely marking our times.—Prophetic Times.

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.

A householder is in trouble. Sickness has broke out in his family; one is near to death; another is suffering severe pain; another still, complaining and fearful.

He sends for a physician in whom he has great confidence, and anxiously awaits his appearing; he turns to the window involuntarily, and peers into the distance to discover some indications of his approach, and the hearts of all yearn for him, particularly when the afflicted ones ask if there is no sign of his coming.

We, as members of the afflicted family of humanity, are awaiting the coming of the Great Physician. He has promised to come and cure all the evil which afflict the race. "Our hearts are pained, our souls are sick of every days report of ill." Our dear ones are laid in the grave, and easy form of suffering is witnessed which it is impossible for us to relieve. In short, "the whole creation groans."

Who then are consistent? those whose hearts thrill with joy at every indication of His approach; who listen eagerly for the sound of His chariot wheels: or, those who are indifferent and careless in this matter? Let us, dear friends, gladly suffer the reproach of those who wait for their Lord.

THE COBBLER'S PRAYER.

I believe I never heard a more effective praying man than the cobbler. He hadn't grammar, hadn't the style, nor the many words; but every sentence from the start was a blow in the right place and drove in the nail. And people loved to hear him pray. And it made the tear start in my eye when he prayed—and he moved the assembly by his fervent prayer. Notwithstanding his want of advantages in other matters, he could still ask, though in feeble words, yet with mighty spirit for his desires, and could carry the people with him. And why was it? Because he prayed like the publican, straight at the point, without any unnecessary preliminaries or painstaking to get around it. He said just what he intended, and then passed on and said something else. He asked for those things which his own soul needed, and spoke likewise for other souls.

He prayed fervently and pointedly, and with his whole heart opened. He did not make any speech, nor cover all the praying ground, nor yet make a Sabbath morning prayer, nor utter a fine prayer (save us from your fine prayers; they are like statues, beautiful, possibly wonderful, but cold as a rock.) But he just prayed, and you felt that he was praying, and you were praying with him, for he was in earnest, and asked as if he wanted an answer, just as your child asks when he wants anything very much. And then, best of all, when he got through praying, he did not go off into exhortation, but stopped. That is half of the power of prayer, to stop when you get done.

OUR ENGLISH BIBLE.

The Dublin Review, a Romish publication, speaks as follows of the English version of the Scriptures. It reminds one of the involtary and beautiful utterances of Balaam, when he tried to curse Israel and was not able:

"Who will say that the beauty and marvelous English of the Protestant Bible is not one of the great strongholds of heresy in this country? It lives on the ear like music that can never be forgotten—like the sound of a church bell which a convert hardly knows he can forego. Its felicities seem to be almost things rather than mere words. It is part of the national mind, and the anchor of national seriousness. The memory of the dead passes into it. The potent traditions of childhood are stereotyped in its verses. The dower of all the gifts and trials of a man is hidden beneath its words. It is the representative of his best moments, and all that there has been about him of soft, and gentle, and poor, and penitent, and good, speaks to him forever out of the English Bible. It is his sacred thing, which doubt has never dimmed, and controversy never soiled. In the length and breadth of the land there is not a Protestant with one spark of righteousness about him, whose spiritual biography is not in his Saxon Bible."

The Lahore correspondent of the London Times, writing on the 6th of November, says that the intelligence from the centre of the starving Orissa, is still of the gloomiest character. He remarks:

"The one hopeful fact is that, though the early rice crop suffered by the floods to the extent of one-half, the late crops will yield three-fourths of the average quantity. From one-fouth to one-fifth of the whole population of 5,000,000 are beieved to have died."

An Imperial ukase states that the relations of Russia with Rome having been broken off, and the convention of 1847 with the Holy See and all other arrangements in reference to the Roman Catholic Church having consequently lost their value, the affairs relating to the Catholics in Russia are again to be placed under the direction of the authorities, who, in accordance with the exacting laws are intrusted with the control of public worship in Russia and Poland.

A Vienna semi-official paper, publishes articles, stating that Austria, under the pretext of organizing her army, places it on a war footing, in order to invade Turkey and seize upon the key of the Dardanelles before any other foreign nation. According to the same paper, Austria is to proclaim from Gallicia the re-establishment of the kingdom of Poland.

THE RESURRECTION.

[The following is the remainder of our extracts from Bishop Simpson's sermon on the above subject:]

When taken from the cross he was put in the sepulchre. His friends had given him up, his disciples had forsaken him; some of them saw him die; they knew that he was crucified, and they abandoned him. They were returning to their former employments; but his enemies remembered he had said he would rise the third day, and they put a guard around him. The Roman soldiers were there; the king's seal was on the stone rolled over the mouth of the sepulchre; they made everything secure. Here again God ordered that we should have abundant proof of Christ's crucifixion. He was crucified on Friday, which was to them the last day of the week, resting in the grave on our Saturday, which is their Sabbath, and then comes the first day of the week, our Sabbath morning, made our Sabbath because of Christ's resurrection from the dead. There came an humble visitant to the tomb, Mary Magdalene; she had been healed of much, forgiven much, and she loved much. Mary, the mother of James, came also and beheld the scenes that occurred; but there had been strange commotions elsewhere. Heaven had been gathering around that grave. Angels had been watching there; they had seen the Roman guard; they had seen the shining spear and the polished shield; they had seen that Christ was held as a prisoner by the greatest powers on earth. Methinks I see the angelic host as they gathered around the throne of God and looked up into the face of Omnipotence, and if ever there was a time when there was silence in heaven for half an hour, it was before the morning light of the third day dawned. I hear them say, "How long shall man triumph? How long shall human power exalt itself? How long shall the powers of darkness hold jubilee? Let us away and roll away the stone; let us away and frighten yonder Roman guard and drive them from the sepulchre." They waited until permission was given. I see the angel coming down from the opening doors of glory; he hastens outside the walls of Jerusalem and down to the sepulchre; when they saw him coming the keepers shook, they became like dead men; he rolls away the stone and sets himself by the mouth of the sepulchre. Christ, girding himself with all the power of his divinity, rises from the grave. He leads captivity captive, tears the crown from the head of death, and makes light the darkness of the grave. Behold him as he rises just preparatory to his rising up to glory. Oh, what a moment was that! Hell was preparing for its jubilee, the powers of earth were preparing for a triumph; but as the grave yields its prey, Christ, charged with being an impostor, is proved to be the Son of God with power; it is the power of his resurrection from the dead.

There was Christ's resurrection from the dead. He became the first fruits of them that slept. But to give the amplest proof of his resurrection, he lingered on earth to be seen of men, and to be seen in such a manner as to show that he was still the Saviour Christ. In my younger days I used often to wonder why was it that Mary Magdalene came first to the sepulchre, and the mother of James that stood there—why he should appear to them; but in later days I have said it was to show that he was the Saviour still; that the same nature was there which had made him stoop to the lowliest of the low—the power that enabled him to heal the guiltiest of the guilty; that that power, that compassion, were with him still. Though now raised beyond death and triumphing over hell, he still had with him the Saviour's heart. Methinks I see when Peter had run in anxiety to tell the news, Mary remained there; she could not fully comprehend it; the grave was open, the napkins were there; it was said he was not there, but he was risen. And yet there was darkness upon her; she could not conceive, it seems to me, fully the resurrection of the dead. She stood wondering when she heard a voice behind her which said, "Woman, why weepest thou?" Bathed in tears as she was, she turned round and saw the man standing, and taking him to be the gardener, and supposing that he had taken the body and carried it away as not fit to lie in that tomb or be in that garden, she said: "If thou hast taken him away, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away. If he must not lie in this tomb, if he cannot lie in the garden, if as a malefactor he must be cast out from man, tell me where the body is, and I will take it away." It was a proof of her affection. A voice said, "Mary, Mary." Oh, she recognized it, and her heart cried out, "Rabboni, my Lord and my God!" and then she would have thrown herself at his feet and bathed those feet again with her tears, but he said: "Touch me not, I am not ascended to my Father; go and tell the disciples and Peter that I am risen from the dead." See the compassion of the Saviour! and then that message! "Tell the disciples, and Peter." Why send a message to him? Because he cursed and swore and denied the Master. The other disciples might have said, if Christ is risen, he may receive and bless us all, but Peter is gone, hopelessly and irretrievably gone; he that forsook his master and denied him, there is no hope for him. And yet, said Jesus, "Go and tell the disciples and Peter"—poor backslidden Peter. Jesus knew his sorrow and anguish, and almost felt the throbbings of his broken heart, and he sent a message to Peter. He may be a disciple still—may come back and be saved through the boundless love of Christ. Oh, the compassion of the Son God! Thank God that Peter's Saviour is on the throne this morning. Not only was he seen by these, but he met with the disciples journeying by the way and explained the scriptures to them; and as they met in the upper room he was there. When the doors were opened he came in their midst and said, "Peace!" breathed on them and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Thus he met with them, and said to Thomas, "Reach hither thy finger, and be not faithless but believing." Then afterward he was seen by five hundred, and from the Mount of Olives, while the disciples were gathered around him, he was received up into glory. They saw him, and as he went he blessed them. The last vision that ever humanity had of the Son of God ere he ascended to heaven was that of spreading out his hands in blessing. Oh, my Saviour hath thus gone up, and he dropped from those outstretched hands a blessing which falls to day like the gentle dew all over the earth; it reaches heart after heart. It hath reached patriarchs, apostles, martyrs, fathers and mothers and little children, and, thank God, the heavenly dew, as from those outstretched hands, is coming down on our assembly this very morning. On this glad day blessings are dropping from the throne of God upon us from this risen Saviour. He hath ascended up on high, the gates have opened for him, and he hath gone to his throne in glory.

Let us look at a few of the results that flow to us from these facts thus sustained of his death and resurrection from the dead:

In the first place, it establishes all bible declarations. It had been predicted that he should not stay in the grave, and when he arose it put the seal to the Old Testament as the word of God. The prophecy in him fulfilled gave glorious proof that the other parts of it should be also fulfilled as the word of an unchanging God.

....In that resurrection from the dead we have a pledge of our own resurrection. Christ has become the first fruits of them that slept. You know the figure of the first fruits as understood by the Jews. Their religion was connected with the seasons of the year—with the harvest crops; one of their feasts was called the feast of the first fruits, and was on this wise: When the first heads of grain began to ripen in the field, and there was thus a pledge of harvest, they cut off those first ripened heads and went up to Jerusalem. Before that the grain was not crushed, no bread was baked out of it, and nothing was done to appropriate that crop to man's use until first those ripened heads of grain were brought up to Jerusalem and presented to the Lord as a thank offering. He was acknowledged as Lord of the harvest, and they were laid up as a kind of thank offering before God. They were the first fruits. Then they went away to the fields, and all through Judea the sickle was thrust in, the grain was reaped and gathered into sheaves, and when the harvest was secured they baked the bread for their children out of this first grain. They came up to the temple, where the first fruits had been laid, and they held a feast of thanksgiving and shouted harvest home. The old harvest feast seems to be descended from this ancient custom. Christ rose as the first fruits, and there is to be a glorious resurrection. Christ came the first man to rise in this respect, by his own power, from the grave, having snatched the crown from death, having thrown light into the grave, having himself ascended up toward glory. He goes up in the midst of the shouts of angels; the heavens open before him; yonder is the altar; there is the throne, and around it stand the seraphim and the cherubim; and Christ enters the victor and sits down upon the throne, from henceforth expecting until his enemies be made his footstool. He is the first fruits of the harvest, but the angels are to be sent out like reapers, and by and by humanity is coming. As Christ, the first fruits, passed through the grave and went up to glory, so there shall come from their sleeping dust in Asia, in Africa, in Europe, and in America, from every mountain top, from the depths of the sea, from deep ravines and from plains outspread—oh, there shall come, in the time of the glorious harvest—the uprising of humanity, when all the nations, waking from their long sleep, shall rise and shall shout the harvest home! Thank God, at that time none shall be wanting. Oh, they come, they come, from the nations of the past and from the generations yet unborn! I see the crowd gathering there. Behold, the angels are waiting, and, as the hosts rise from the dead, they gather round the throne. Christ invites his followers to overcome and sit down with him on his throne as he overcame and sat down with the Father on his throne. In that is the pledge of our resurrection from the dead. Can I not suffer, since Christ suffered? Can I not die, since Christ died? Let the grave be my resting place, for Christ rested there. Is it cold? The warmth of his animation is in it. Is it lonely? He shall be beside me in all his Spirit's power. Does the load of earth above me, and beneath which I am placed, press upon me? Christ hath power to burst the tomb; he shall burst the tomb, though deep it be, and I shall rise through his Almighty power. Yes, let the malice of men be directed against me; let me be taken, if it must be, as a martyr, and be bound to the stake; let the fagots be kindled, let the flame ascend, let my body be burned; gather my ashes, grind my bones to powder, scatter them on the ocean's surface; or carry those ashes to the top of yonder volcano and throw them within its consuming fire—let them be given to the dust—and yet I can sing:

> "God, my Redeemer, lives,
> And ever, from the skies,
> Looks down and watches all my dust,
> Till he shall bid it rise."

Thank God it may be scattered on the wings of the wind; Christ is everywhere present; he has marked every particle, and it shall rise again by his own almighty power. And what is it to sleep awhile, if I am Christ's? To die, if I am like Christ in dying? and be buried, if I am like Christ in being buried? I trust I shall be like him when he comes forth in his glory. I shall be like him, for the apostle says we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is; we shall be changed from glory into glory, into the same image as by the Spirit of God. It would be a great change to be changed from glory to glory, from saints to angels, from angels to cherubim, from cherubim to seraphim, from glory to glory; but thank God, we shall not stop being changed, for the change shall go on from glory to glory, until we shall be transformed into the likeness of the Son of God, brighter than angels ever shone, more glorious than were ever cherubim. We shall be near the throne; we shall sit beside him, for he hath made room for us there. Then if we can calmly look at death and face him, because his strength has been overcome, it reconciles us to parting a little while with friends. A father or a mother may be taken from us, but we shall see them again; they shall not sleep forever. The little ones that drop from our arms, we can almost see them this morning; some of us can almost feel them in our arms—can see the glance of that beautiful eye, and hear the sound of that little prattling lip; they seem to be with us now as a little while ago they dropped from out of our arms. We followed them to the grave, and we left them there where the winter's storm has been howling around them. Sometimes loneliness like that terrible storm has swept over our hearts and left them almost in despair; but through Christ's resurrection we see our children yonder in glory, safe in the Saviour's arms. Their little forms shall rise all glorious from the tomb in the morning of the resurrection; we shall find them, for Jesus is the resurrection and the life. All this comes to us from the resurrection of Christ from the dead. He died once; he dies no more; the condemnation of death is forever gone; he sits on the throne of everlasting dominion; his kingdom is an eternal kingdom; and as he died once and has risen to die no more, so when we have died once and gone to the grave and entered the dark valley and shadow of death, and we come up safely on the other side, thank God, death is passed forever; we shall then put our feet on the neck of the monster, and shall be able to say:

> "O death, where is thy sting?
> O grave, where is thy victory?"

Looking at the resurrection of Christ we exclaim, thanks be unto God, who hath given us the victory. Such is the eternity of glory and blessedness that awaits us. Thank God for a spiritual body. Here some of us long to triumph over nature. We would grasp, if we could, angelic wisdom, but our brows will ache with pain, our frames decay, our eyes grow dim, our hearing fail. This flesh of ours will not stand hours of painful study and seasons of protracted labor, but, thank God, when the body that now oppresses us is laid in the grave a spiritual body will be given to us, pure, ethereal, and holy. Oh, what an extent of knowledge shall flash upon us! what light and glory! what spirituality and power! Then we shall not need to ask an angel anything. We shall know as we are known. Jesus will be our teacher; the everlasting God, the the man whose name is Wonderful, the Counsel or, the Prince of Peace. He himself shall be our Leader. We shall know them as also we are known.

Then rejoice in God. Dry up those tears. Cast away that downcast look. Child of the dust, you are an heir of glory. There is a crown all burnished for you; there is a mansion all ready for you; there is a white robe prepared for you; there is eternal glory for you; angels are to be your servants, and you are to reign with the King of kings forever. But while you wait on earth be witnesses for God, attest the glory of your Master; rise in the greatness of his strength; bind sin captive to your chariot wheels; go onward in your heavenly career, and be as pure as your ascended Head is pure. Be active in works of mercy, be angels of light, be flames of fire; go on your mission of mercy.

WHAT LAW? AN INQUIRY.

BY JACOB GRIM.

"Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil."—Matt. v. 17.

Much has been written and preached of late about the "ancient law," and the law of our natures, and about the animal man, and the spiritual man; and in almost every instance where the law is spoken of, it is carried right back to the garden of Eden, as though there was no other law since the days of Adam. I have sometimes asked myself, why is all this? Is it design or ignorance? I am not willing to attribute either to the friends of truth; and yet there seems to be a persistent desire, on the part of some, to ignore the fact of the law of which Jesus was speaking in the above text.

Now Adam was placed under a law, or covenant, or agreement: for, although the almighty did say unto Adam, thou shalt not do so; yet, at the same time, the law-giver did say unto him upon the condition of his obedience depended his right to eat of the tree of life. This, then was the condition of Adam's covenant. It embraced the tree of life and the tree of knowledge. The right to eat of the first, depended upon Adam's leaving the other. Adam's disobedience in obeying the covenant that God placed him under, destroyed the whole relationship between Adam and his Maker. The consequence was, Adam was removed from the condition in which he was pl ced, and the only part of the covenant unfulfilled was his returning to the dust; which in due course of time was accomplished. Hence, so far as my understanding of the Scriptures reaches, we have no more to do with the covenant under which Adam was placed than the man in the moon. But says one, Does not Paul say, that "by man came death?" Yes, Paul says so; and he also says, "By the offence of one condemnation came upon all." Had Adam obeyed God he would have had a right to eat of the tree of life. This we learn from Gen. iii. 22, when the Lord drove him out of the garden, lest he should eat of the tree of life and live forever.

What the purpose of God concerning Adam was, He has not seen fit to reveal unto us. Some say Adam was a probationer for immortality, and in due process of time would have been translated had he not have eaten of the tree of knowledge. But this is all assumption; the scriptures are silent upon the subject; all we know, is that God gave him permission to at of all the trees of the garden except the tree of knowledge; and we learn by Gen. iii. 22, that the tree of life would have continued his existence in the condition that he was then in. This is all that is said concerning Adam or God's purposes concerning him.

So much for Adam and the law under which he was placed. But, says the objector, was not the race tried in Adam? and was not the animal man condemned in Adam? I answer (according to the best information I can get from the scriptures), No. Adam was tried for himself, and for himslf alone. And the proof for this. God tried Cain and Abel for themselves; and the one He justified and the other He condemned.

What then are we to understand the Apostle to mean, when he says, "By the disobedience of one man condemnation came upon all men"? I answer: Adam was made an animal, a natural, earthly, man; and God changed his condition when he placed him in the garden under a covenant of life, and placed him in a situation by which he might escape death; and he failed on his trial and was removed from the conditions of the covenant, and left in the condition of the animal, natural man; and hence death came upon him, and so passed down through all his race. Paul says, "Death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the likeness of Adam's transgression." But if Adam sinned for all, and was tried for all, then our transgressions would have all been alike. But no; Paul says death reigned even over them who had not sinned after the similitude or type of Adam's transgression. And what was that? The violation of a known covenant, a law. Paul draws a line that reaches from Adam to Moses, and says, the predominant feature, in all this long lapse of time, was, "death reigned;" (for until the law sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed when there is no law.) Now, if I understand the apostle aright, he assumes that although men were dying, and death reigned, it was not on account of their personal sins; for, as there was no law, sin was not imputed to them; they were dying being animal in their natures, and subject to death; and there being no law that could give life, death reigned; nevertheless the law entered that sin might abound.

This brings us to the question, What law was the apostle speaking about? It certainly was not the Adamic law. For says the apostle, "Until the law sin was in the world." Now sin was not in the world before the Adamic law. Hence it could not have been that law the apostle had reference to. The apostle does not say in so many words, that from Adam to Moses there was no law; but the inference is very strong that he means so. John says, "The law was given by Moses; but grace and truth by Jesus Christ." In our next we will inquire into this law of Moses, and see if it was the one which Jesus says, "one jot or tittle shall not fail until all be fulfilled." In hope of gaining some truth, we will look into this subject, and see if there is not some light in it.

Philadelphia, January, 1867.

THE FALL OF BABYLON.

The following is an extract from an article by Eld. D. J. TAYLOR, taken from the World's Crisis:

FALL OF BABYLON THE GREAT.

This great apostate hierarchy having been shown to be the civil and ecclesiastical heads of the church at Rome, it is our purpose now to inquire what is the fall of Babylon, as announced in Rev. xiv. 8, and chapter xvii. 1, 2? To this I reply, it cannot be the final ruin of Babylon, for a third angel follows the second, and a similar message to that of the third angel is given also in Rom. xviii. 4, and on, both of which are subsequent to the announcement of her fall. After the fall of the great city, the denunciations against the adorers of the wild beast are solemnly made, and the summons is given to all who are within the pales of the powerful hierarchy, or under her influence, to utterly forsake her communion. And the reason is also announced, viz., "that ye receive not of her plagues,"—which are death, mourning, and famine, and consumption by fire—all of which are to come suddenly and violently, "in one day." Hence there is clearly a brief space of time between her fall and her utter ruin, as there was also a season between the taking of ancient Babylon by the Medes under Darius, and her decadence. Let the reader here compare Isa. lxvii. Jer. l. and li, with Rev. xviii. During this space of time the whole Papal church and people are warned in reference to her idolatries, her wantonness, her polluting communion, and her impending overthrow. She, instead of resenting, becomes more than ever addicted to saint-worship, demonology, boasting, and assumptions of her queen-like reign, and her immunity from sorrow. All the world will converse about her, gaze upon her, and wonder at her infatuated position. "Therefore" (v. 8) and then, the bolt from heaven will fall upon her, and the two-fold city on the seven hills sinks into a "lake of fire burning with brimstone."

We observe, further, that her fall cannot denote her apostasy from the truth, as this was accomplished centuries ago. Her fall cannot be the breaking up of her communion or organization, for she exists as Babylon, as an undissolved community, after she falls; and like literal Babylon goes down to hell saying, "I shall be a lady forever" Isa. xiv. 9 and xlvii. 7. Hence, after her fall she is in some way to receive sympathy and honor; while out of her, as from a great organized body still having vast control, the sincere and enlightened people of God are summoned to go forth. Her fall cannot be from purity into corruption, for previous to her fall she is the bewitching harlot woman, the mother of abominations, intoxicated with the blood of the just, elated with pride, and the great corrupter of millions of "peoples, multitudes, nations and tongues." To suppose her fall was of this kind, viz., a fall from grace or a holy station, is utterly incompatible with the whole prophecy concerning her. As well might we speak of darkness falling into darkness, or rottenness becoming rotten! Nothing is clearer than that the harlot survives her fall; only this difference will be discernible: before her fall she is the lady on her throne, but after her fall she is the lady on the ground. Isa. xlvii. 1. But after her destruction from heaven she is "found no more at all." Her fall is doubtless the work of the beast she rides, aided by the ten kings who are to require here to come down from her former station; but her mill-stone destruction is by the instant hand of an avenging God.

The fall of Babylon must, therefore, symbolize her dejection from her lofty and usurped national position as a state-church. It must denote her fall from the back of the seven-headed and ten-horned beast—the great western Roman Empire—as guided and governed by its eighth and last headship—France—which thus bears her to her national judgment. It must be her fall from her high civil power as one of the Roman sovereigns, the eleventh horn of Daniel vii. It must be her descent from supremacy and high honor as a church-kingdom, and as upheld by kings, to one of dejection, where all may see her in her poverty and nakedness. Like Babylon of old, she has been called "the lady of kingdoms"; but the divine summons is now made, "Come down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon; sit on the ground: there is no throne."—Isa. xlvii. 1. Her fall must be the bill of divorcement given her by her last husband and lovers, the beast and the ten kings. It must be her ejectment from civil domain; her ecclesiastical severence from state and kingdom—the withdrawal of the strong arm that upheld her; the stripping her of all her estates; her final loss of all temporal honor, station and power. And lo! all this is transpiring to-day right before the eyes of the wondering and astonished nations. Cry aloud, ye saints; Babylon is fallen, is fallen!

The harlot no longer cajoles the enlightened nations. "A drought is upon her waters, and they are dried up." Jer. l. 38. Rev. xvi. 12. She sits within the seven-hilled city in blank amazement at her forsaken and lowly condition. Her chief ruler pitifully exclaims, "Mene, mene, tekel, is on the wall. I fear the revolution. What am I to do? What am I to say?" And the wondering world replies, "Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms?" Isa. xiv. 16. Since 1848–9, France, her Eldest Son under Clovis, and her last husband under Louis Napoleon, has supported her with his sword on the seven mountains. Her Head was mighty in power, and with thirty-seven millions to back him, none dared to molest her under his notable protectorate.

On the 15th and 16th of September, 1866, the treaty made in solemn convention between Italy and France, for the French evacuation of Rome, expired. An earthquake through the south of Europe stamped his foot and growled, Amen. Then the eighth-headship said peremptorily to the woman, "You must forever dismount." She peevishly refused. Then the beast threw off his scarlet-robed rider. December 11th, 1866, the lightnings heralded the great event far and wide. It was another stroke of the bell on the chronometer of time. Babylon's plagues stood ready to devour. The cholera on that memorable day suddenly broke out afresh in Rome. "Your Emperor has abandoned me.... I have no resources," said the forlorn Pontiff to the departing French officers.

Divorced, we hope and think, for ever, the monstrous hag sits on the ground, calling on all the spirits of the dead, her deities, the demons, to aid her. And will more and more become "the hold of every foul spirit and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird" that now, while the whole earth is overrun with demonology and necromancy, will invade Babylon but to ripen her for the final ruin. Isolate and alone, she sits solitary at the mercy of twenty millions of Italians who "hate her," led on by Garibaldi, who calls her a "monster," and under the rule of the King of Italy, who, like the first Napoleon, is now monarch of Pope and Cardinal. And having borne her to her (krima) condemnation, damnation, or "judgment," (Rev. xvii. 1), the doom of the Roman world "who carrieth her" is also written. "And goeth into (apolia) waste, perdition, destruction." "I beheld, even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame."—Dan. vii. 11. "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet. . . . These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone." Rev. xix. 20. Alive: while still existing as a civil, political power.

POLYCARP.

Irenæus, who died at the beginning of the third century, in a letter to his friend Florinus, thus speaks of Polycarp, a disciple of St. John:

"I certainly saw you, when I was yet a boy, in company with Polycarp, when you managed admirably in the royal court, and sought to make yourself acceptable to him. For transactions that occurred then I remember more distinctly than what happened a short time since, because what we learn when children becomes a part of the mind itself and clings firmly to it. I could even describe the very place where blessed Polycarp sat and discoursed; his going out and coming in; his mode of life; his personal appearance; and, finally, the sermons that he preached to the people. Besides, I could relate the familiar intercourse which existed, as he testified between himself and John, and others who had seen the Lord, and how he rehearsed their words; also what he heard from them respecting the Lord, both in regard to his miracles and his teaching. These things, as Polycarp affirmed, he received from those who had received the word of life, and they were all in harmony with the scriptures."

We should never estimate the soundness of principles by our ability to defend them, or consider an objection as unanswerable to which we can find no reply.

Love; or, the Great Thing Wanted.

The great thing necessary to make christian intercourse a profit and a pleasure, is the exercise of love. The great thing necessary to preserve people from giving offence to their sincere brothers and sisters, is love. It is not worldly politeness that is wanted, nor is it better knowledge so much that is wanted: the great, the principal want, is more love. If all would talk as friends, as lovers, as persons who took delight in serving each other in love, it would be next to impossible for offences to be given. Love would make people mild both in asking questions and in giving answers. Love would make people's exhortations and counsels more profitable. It would make them consider what counsels or instructions were most needed. It would make them utter their instructions and their counsels in softer, gentler, simpler words. It would make them speak with feeling and with power. It would preserve them from speaking at random, and occupying the time of their friends with things that did not concern them. It would work within them both a spirit of revelation, of direction and of power.

Love would make people tolerant, forbearing, kind. It would make them glad to give the preference to their brethren, both in power and in interest. And there is nothing can serve as a substitute for love. No laws, no regulations, will serve as a substitute for love Love; love to God our Father, making us desirous in all things to do God's will, and love to our brethren, making us tender of their feelings, and desirous to promote their welfare; this, and this alone, can turn our intercourse into joy and mutual blessing.

And love is the great lesson inculcated by the Saviour and his Apostles. Love to the brethren, such love as Jesus showed, is what is enjoined in the new commandment. Love, love like Christ's, is the mark of true discipleship, the proof that we have passed from death unto life, the ground and measure of our future reward, the bond of christian union, the image of our heavenly Father, the first fruit of the Holy Spirit, and greater than faith and hope. Tongues, knowledge, understanding mysteries, prophecy, all are nothing without love. Love is all in all.

My dear friends, let us live in love, let us talk in love, let us hear in love. Let us cherish love, and labor, to bring it to perfec tion in our hearts. Let us check or exterminate all that is opposed to love. If we are faithful, love will grow within us. It will gather fresh strength daily. It will not rise into full dominion in an hour or in a year; it may take several years to master, or exterminate all that is opposed to love; still, if we are faithful, love will gradually grow, till it fills and rules our whole being.

Some think that because they cannot master their unruly tempers in a day, nor kill at once their harsher and unkindly feelings, they cannot do it at all. They have heard of instantaneous sanctification, or instantaneous perfection, and have tried to work themselves into it in the way of certain sects, and because they could not do it, they have lost all hopes. But let them hope again. They may all become as kind as Christ. They may master and subdue their spirits entirely. They may, by degrees, and patient perseverance, come to experience a perfect and most happy transformation. The heart is changing every day for better or for worse; and his who struggles faithfully against evil, and labors after what is good, is always changing for the better. You may not be able to perceive the change for a long time, but it is sure to take place, and you will see it in due season. No work is lost: no godly effort fails: every resistance to evil, every effort after goodness or perfection, makes you more like Jesus, more like God.

Strive, then, my friends, and be not weary. Strive, and be not faint-hearted. Be resolute, and be hopeful. Be faithful and trust God. For the sake of your own comfort, for the sake of your brethren, for the sake of Christ and his gospel, for the sake of God, and for the sake of a dark and wretched world, be resolute, be true, be faithful. Cherish the spirit of love, as your very life: repress, exterminate ill-will, as your great eternal foe. Love is your life, and hatred is your death. "Above all things, therefore, put on charity." "Love, not in word or profession merely, but in deed and in truth." "Love one another with a pure heart fervently." "Love is of God, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him; for God is love." "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, but the greatest of these is charity." Love would renovate the world. Love would instruct the ignorant. Love would correct the erring. Love would emancipate the oppressed. Love would put an end to war. Love would remodel all the the institutions of nations. Love would bind all nations together as one great family. Love would enrich all nations. Love would blend all tribes, and perfect the human frame and the human mind. Love would give health and longer life to men. Love would lay hold of universal truth, and bring to light all useful hidden science. Love would perfect all arts. It would bring under man's own power all the elements of nature, and make us the lords of the wide universe. It would join all worlds in one at last, and make all worlds one heaven. How wonderful that love should be so little cherished, and that its power and blessedness should be so little felt! But surely its growth and spread are coming nearer: surely the days will come when love shall reign in all, and be the lord and governor of all God's worlds. HOMO.

The "Invasion"

The doctrine of "No Life out of Christ"—miscalled, "annihilation," by our opponents—"has invaded the church," saith the Christian Advocate of the 24th inst. Read the following from that journal:

LIFE AND DEATH ETERNAL: a Refutation of the Theory of Annihilation. By Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D., Professor in Chicago Theological Seminary. Pp. 380. Boston: American Tract Society.

"Dr. Bartlett has done the church good service in preparing this volume. The latest and subtilest error of eschatology is annihilation. Universal salvation at death, against which our fathers fought so furiously, has now scarcely an advocate in the churches built especially to propagate it. Restorationism has taken its place, but that error has rarely invaded the church. It is an outside crutch offered by the devil to his disciples to help them limp the easier in his service. Annihilation has invaded the church. Its advocates are chiefly men of faith and prayer, and of churches that are built on Christ and are honored with the presence of the Spirit. It has some seeming support in some texts of scripture. Yet it is an error which, if clung to too obstinately and exclusively, will strip its advocates of power with God and man. It is adopted usually as a refuge from the doctrine of eternal fire. But the refuge is worse than that which it seeks to escape. Who would not prefer the dungeon to the cord, the rack to the guillotine? Death is the greatest punishment man or God can inflict. Eternal life in death is preferable to eternal annihilation. Dreadful as are both, each is far less so than the state of sin in which the condemned soul willfully and joyfully abides. This book is perhaps hardly sufficiently charitable to those who hold the opposite view, nor sufficiently philosophical or semi-rational for some students of the mystery. Yet it is what is especially needed in a subject far beyond the reach of reason, eminently scriptural. It examines the word acutely and satisfactorily. One can hardly read it without seeing that it is God's will, and the sinner's too, that he that is filthy shall be filthy still, to all eternity. Every minister should read this essay."

The work of Dr. BARTLETT we have not seen, and cannot say how deserving it is of praise or censure. Some seven years ago the Christian Advocate gave greater praise to a work written against our views by Mr. Landis, and commended it to all the churches. That work proved an abortion; and instead of accomplishing its design to arrest the "invasion of the church," it actually promoted it; so that to day "the church" is more saturated by the truth of literal life and death than on the day the Methodist officials published and commended Landis' work so fully. The notice of Dr Bartlett's work, given above by the Advocate, contains several things worthy of note.

1. The doctrine of no life out of Christ is admitted to have entered the church, thus proving it has a vitality in it which no barrier can resist.

2. The confession that, "Its advocates are chiefly men of faith and prayer," &c., is an honorable concession, and we thank the Advocate for it; we sincerely wish we had more faith among us, and greater fervency in prayer.

3. The admission that, "It has some seeming support in some texts of scripture," is of "some" value; but when such a mass of scripture testimony directly sustains the doctrine of literal life and death as to make it overwhelmingly true to "men of faith and prayer," we can hardly feel grateful for the scanty acknowledgement that there is only some seeming support for it. But we are willing to waive that point for this time.

4. "If it is clung to too obstinately and exclusively, it will strip its advocates of power with God and man," says the Advocate Convince us "it is an error" and you will find we shall not cling to it a moment. But till such times as our opposers can show us, from the Bible, that man has an immortal, or undying soul, we shall cling to the truth that, "the wages of sin is death," and "the soul that sinneth IT SHALL DIE;" also, "except a man eat my flesh and drink my blood he has no life in him;" and "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life." Give us something besides Plato and assumptions—give us a "Thus saith the LORD, the soul is immortal and cannot die: the spirit is deathless." When anything thus plain can be produced, we bow to it with the reverence which becometh "men of faith and prayer;" and we will hasten, before our gray hairs go down to the grave, or we put on immortality, to undo all that we have done to "invade the church" with the views we advocate: you shall find we will not have "clung to it too obstinately," &c.

5. The Advocate says, our views are "adopted usually as a refuge from the doctrine of eternal fire." Not quite correct in this statement. They are adopted with the firm conviction that the doctrine of the eternal torment by the CREATOR of the work of his hands can never be reconciled with the known perfections of God and the general tenor of scripture, and that such a doctrine imputed to God is a dishonor done to His oath, "As I live, I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth," and His added expostulation, "Turn ye, for why will ye DIE."

6. But, says the Advocate, "The refuge is worse than that which it seeks to escape." That is, death is worse than eternal torments. We hope, after this, we shall not be accused of "lessening the terror of the punishment of sin, and thereby leading sinners not to care for it." It is now settled officially by the Advocate that our idea of punishment is more terrfiic than their own. We thank them for thus stopping the mouths of our opposers on that point; for that has been one of their chief batteries to keep us from "invading the church." That battery is now surrendered, and our Life views will no longer be hindered by the cry of "No punishment at all." Our opposers must now urge eternal torments as the more desirable punishment of the two. So the "invasion" advances; and other fortified points will soon give way; a breach has been made, and our opposers may be assured we shall push the advantage till the Revelator's vision shall become an eternal reality, viz., "And every creature which is in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I, saying, Blessing and honor, and glory and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." Rev. v. 13. When this vision becomes an accomplished fact—and it will be—either all the wicked are "annihilated" or converted; they will all be literally dead, or have been made holy and happy. To us, there is no escape from this conclusion. We believe, of course, they will all have been "utterly exterminated," as Peter saith, Acts iii. 23. See Dr. Bloomfield's Note on the word "destroyed," in that verse.

7. The Advocate says, Dr. Bartlett's book "is perhaps hardly sufficiently charitable to those who hold the opposite view," &c. Then it lacks a most important element to commend it to our notice or attention; for though a man have "all knowledge," if he is destitute of this grace, he is "nothing;" so saith a greater than Dr. Bartlett. But we have no time to add more now.

Timeists.

We take the following extract from an article by WM. N. PILE, in the Crisis of the 16th instant. After having endeavored to fix the date of the commencement of the 1260 days, or years, of Daniel and Revelation, he says:

"If the 1335 do not begin with the 1260 years, the book of Revelation, after calling our especial attention to the 1260 years, has left us wholly in the dark as far as definite time is concerned, as there is not a period in it which reaches to Christ's coming. Our kind heavenly Father has not placed definite time in his word and left it to be a matter of mere conjecture as to whether those periods revealed anything definite or not. And we say, with all due reverence and humility, that if some one does not understand the year of Christ's coming, the promise of God will fail, and this can never be. We believe, then, that this present year, 1867, will witness the grand consummation—the coming of Christ and the resurrection of Daniel for his lot, with all the sleeping saints."

Here is assumption enough, and something that borders very near on blasphemy. The assumption that the 1335 begin with the 1260, is the first step, which we believe to be wholly groundless. The next assumption is that, God "has placed definite time in his word" for "Christ's coming." The third assumption, coupled with blasphemy, is in these words—"If some one does not understand the year of Christ's coming, the promise of God will fail."

All this is characteristic of "definite time" hunters; and shows the spirit begotten by such efforts. We believe the proximity of the second advent can be known; and we doubt not it will take place at no distant day; but that our time setters are all doomed to disappointment, we have little doubt. If any man will not live as he ought without having "definite time for the advent," we have no faith in their religion, at all. The laziest drone on earth will work when he sees his employer is right upon him, because he is coming; but a faithful servant keeps about his employer's work because he loves his master and his work.

Such kind of talk as that which occasions these remarks, may take with timid persons; but with the reflecting and sober christian they can have no other effect than to produce regret at the injury such persons are doing the truth of God, and the hindrance such are likely to work to the spread of the truth of the advent itself. But it is not likely they will hear, even if an angel from heaven were to proclaim them in error. Let us all work while it is day; and "occupy till" our Lord "come," as He has bid us do. Then shall we be found of Him in peace.

Trials.

"Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth: * * * if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons." Heb. xii. 5–8. Again, when was our Lord's greatest suffering and agony? When was his soul exceeding sorrowful even unto death? When did he sweat, as it were, great drops of blood falling down to the ground! Was it not at the closing up, or near the closing up, of his state of trial? Was it not a short time previous to his being glorified? May it not be, then, as his saints draw nearer to the period of their glorification, that they also shall be called to drink of his cup and be baptized with the baptism wherewithal he was baptized? Would it be strange if their Master and Lord should thus give them practical and experimental knowledge that they must sympathize with him in his humiliation before they can be prepared to share in his glory? Sufferings and distress will show to ourselves and demonstrate before our Lord whether we love Christ, and his coming and kingdom, more than we love this present world. From the latter we must be weaned before we are prepared for the glory of Christ's fellow-heirs. Many of us may painfully find that we were more joined to the world, and the things of this present time, than we were aware. Happy shall we be if the distress and trials crucify us unto the world and the world unto us. No matter from what source the trials come, let us give ourselves to God and we shall be purified by them. But if we fret, murmur, and repine under them, we may suffer loss; or if we do not lose ourselves, the merciful God will have to keep us under the rod all the longer or more severely, to save us from perishing with the ungodly. Yet, we have need to sympathize with one another as members of Christ, and to pray one for another. Most sincerely do we say in the language of Paul, "Brethren, pray for us;" never did we more feel the need of the prayers of praying souls. May God, the Lord, keep his tempted, tried ones, and guide them safe to life eternal.

Persecution for the Truth's Sake.

[Written to a friend who anticipated persecution on account of adherence to unpopular truth.—ED.]

DEAR FRIEND:—We pray you be firm; and if you cannot go forward in your calling without doing violence to your conscience, do, by all means, allow God to make you a living or dying martyr of his truth. It is plain to us, that nothing but resoluteness on the part of those who are led to embrace the truth, will ever conquer or destroy the intolerance of a fancied "orthodoxy" and carnality. If all are to relinquish the truth, or shrink from its profession, whenever it begins to subject them to reproach, or loss, or persecution, we may give up the hope of a christian reformation, at once. If those who receive the truth will not patiently suffer, or cheerfully die for its sake, the truth will fall, and error and selfishness will rule over all. It is plain that firmness, patient suffering, and even numerous martyrdoms will be necessary to the overthrow of the present overgrown system of delusion, and fraud, and cruelty. And if there is to be suffering or martyrdom, why should not we be willing to bear our share of them? If we are to shrink from them, why may not others? Or if others are to bear them, why should not we? If any are to bear them, why should we not all be willing to bear them? If we refuse to suffer reproach, or loss, or want, or martyrdom for the sake of truth, we are not worthy of the blessings of truth, we are not worthy of fellowship with Christ, we are not worthy of the favor of God If we shrink from the free profession of the truth for fear of want, or reproach, or martyrdom, we do, so far as we are concerned, give up the world to everlasting thralldom, to everlasting darkness, to everlasting and unmitigated wretchedness. When the profession and the spread of the truth require us to subject ourselves to reproach, or loss, or martyrdom, God does, in effect, say to us, "You may ransom your brethren by the sacrifice of your reputation, your situation, your ease, your friends, or your life; will you pay that price for their redemption?" And shall we tell God, Nay? Shall we, after having been redeemed by the sufferings, reproaches, and blood of Christ, and his followers, refuse to endure the like reproaches or sufferings for the redemption of our brethren?

Dear Friend, this shrinking from persecution, this fear of reproach and desertion, this sacrifice of truth to the interests of the flesh, is the ruin of the world. It was the crime, the curse, the plague of the ancient Gentiles; it was the crime, the curse, the ruin of the ancient Jews; it is the principal crime and curse of the present generation. If all, who have been convinced of the errors of modern theology, had courage and faith enough to give them up, the dreadful curse of immortal souls in endless torture would soon have perished from the christian world. If all who have been led to see the truth and glory of the doctrine of Life future and eternal, only through Christ, had acted up to their convictions, fearlessly and faithfully, this grand, glorious, and crowning truth of the gospel would have made more progress, and soon have overrun the earth. How long will christians seek to avoid persecution, by smothering the light of God's truth for fear of the reproach of men?

It is in vain to expect that ever a time will come when ancient errors can be rejected, and corrupt institutions opposed, without exposure to suffering and reproach. And it is equally vain to expect that a time will ever come when simple, clear, unadulterated truth can be professed or propagated without risk of persecution. If we wait for a more convenient season for the profession and practice of our principles, we may wait for ever. No such convenient season will ever come. Delays in professors, are as bad, as foolish, and as dangerous as delays in the profane. We may as well attempt to justify the postponement of religion altogether, as attempt to justify the postponement of a thorough reformation. We do hope, friend, that you will be found faithful. We know you will be severely tried, as you have been tried already; but you will never have cause to repent of being faithful. On the contrary, you will not have proved faithful a year, before you will begin to rejoice in your faithfulness, and count your sufferings joy. It has been so with us. We have seldom had to wait a year, before we have proved our persecutions work for our good. We have seldom had to wait a year, before we have received a reward, a compensation for our sacrifices, not only in inward, spiritual joy, but in outward blessings also. If we have sacrificed one friend, we have often gained two others. If we have met with treachery and cruelty from some, we have met with kinder and more respectful treatment from others. Even in point of the wealth and worldly influence of friends, we appear not to have suffered any loss in the long run; but the contrary. In all things God has shown that he can neither fail to fulfil his promises, nor long remain his children's debtor. We are often amazed when we look on these things, and see how God has cared for us. And if he had seen fit to double our trials, and had thought well not to return us our losses in kind; if he had seen good to withhold from us all recompense in earthly, outward blessings, we have no doubt but he would have abounded towards us the more in inward gifts, in blessings of heavenly love. And he will do so to you. If you do his will and risk your all for truth and duty, he will turn it to your advantage. He will in some way or other, make every thing you lose, and every pain you suffer, work for your present and eternal welfare. We know that "all things work together for good to them who love God."

The Adamic Penalty.

"God having created man after his own image, a living soul, endowed with the powers of reason, in order to form in him all the habits of virtue, besides the obligations resulting from the natures and relations of things, was pleased, in a command of pure authority, to exercise his obedience to Himself, his Maker, by forbidding the use of one tree in the garden, called the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. The threatening, in case of transgression, was that he should surely die. Death was to be the consequence of disobedience. Death is the losing of life. Death is opposed to life: and must be understood according to the nature of that life to which it is opposed. Now the death here threatened can, with any certainty, be opposed only to the life God gave Adam when he created him, verse 7. Any thing besides this must be pure conjecture, without a solid foundation. For no other life is spoken of before, to which death can be opposed; nor can we conceive, from any thing in the history, how Adam could understand it of the loss of any other life than that he had newly received. In this light, the sense of the threatening will stand thus: Thou shalt surely die; as if he had said, 'I have formed thee of the dust of the ground, and breathed into thy nostrils the breath of life; and thus thou art become a living soul. But if thou eatest of the forbidden tree, thou shalt cease to be a living soul; for I will take from thee the breath of life, and thou shalt return unto the dust of which I formed thee.' Less than this, I think, the threatening cannot signify; and I do not see how anything more can be made of it."—Dr. Taylor, England.

God's Unspeakable Gift.

A very lofty mountain, rising in lonely grandeur on the horizon to cleave the blue sky with its snowy pinnacles, is descried from afar. We see it a long way off—from where hills and heights, shaggy forests, silent uplands, and busy towns, and all other individual objects that lie between, are lost in distance, and present the appearance of a level plain. So, just so, Adam and Eve descried a child of theirs rising above the common level of mankind, at the long distance of four thousand years. Of the millions who were to spring from them and people the earth of which they were the lonely tenants, this distinguished child was the only one on whom, on whose birth, and life, and death, and works, their weeping eyes and eager hopes were fixed.

On earth, the expectation of that event was coeval almost with the promise of it—Eve cherishing the hope that not any of her daughters, but she herself, should be the mother of the Messiah. Wrung with remorse for her incalculable crime, and eager to see its misery and mischief undone, she grasped at the fulfillment of the promise, but to be disappointed; to catch only a mocking shadow. It is a common saying, that the wish is father to the thought; what we eagerly desire, we easily believe. So the shipwrecked sailor, a miserable castaway tossed on the open sea, takes a sun-lit cloud for a sail, and rouses his fellows from their stupor with joyful cry of Land! land!—mistaking a fog-bank for the blessed shore: and so also our poor mother Eve, hailing in her first-born the promised seed, clasped Cain to her beating bosom. Alas! in the words of scripture, she fled from a lion, and a bear met her; she leant on a wall, and a serpent bit it. "I have gotten," she exclaimed, "the man"—the promised man—"from the Lord." Never was mother so bitterly disappointed; never more false, though fair, the bright, happy visions that have floated round many an infant's cradle! It was a serpent, not a Saviour, Eve pressed to her joyful bosom. For, strange to say, as there, where Pilate gives them their choice between Jesus and Barabbas, the infuriate multitude prefer a murderer to the Lord of Glory, here, in this quiet bower where Eve is singing her boy asleep, he who cruelly shed man's blood to kill is mistaken for Him who generously shed his own to save.

From that day onward many besides Eve were disappointed—if not so bitterly. The vision tarried; tarried long; for four thousand weary years eyes grew dim looking, and hearts grew faint hoping for it. But it came at last. Heaven is all moved. Its gates fly open, and, accompanied by a shining train, the Son of God descends upon the world; and in that stable over whose humble roof angels are singing, and within whose bare unfurnished walls an infant is wailing, the prophecy is fufilled, "Unto us a child is born, and unto us a Son is given." This announcement suggests two or three grand topics for our pen.

The person given, and his purpose?—This is our Lord Jesus Christ.

The verse where these words lie begins with our Saviour's humanity, but, mounting upward, rises to the height of his divinity; so that here, to borrow a figure from the earliest promise, and regard his humanity, or lower part, as his heel, here he stands with his feet on earth, but his head in heaven. A grand picture! Well is he entitled Wonderful! Language has often been abused—grand names being given to mean and good ones to bad objects; but never by baptismal font, nor elsewhere, was there bestowed on child of woman born a name so descriptive of its properties, qualities, career and character, as that given to this one—"His name shall be called Wonderful."

Of the properties which this verse catalogues as meeting, and harmonizing, in the person of our Redeemer, these words present that which, if it does not most exalt him in our admiration, most endears him to our hearts. It is not the throne of a divine and awful majesty the prophet unveils here. There is much to affect our eyes, but nothing—as there where angels stand adoring with faces their wings do screen—to dazzle them. Isaiah shows us Christ in the humanity which for our sakes he condescended to assume—as a man; and also "a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief." It is to Bethlehem, and its stable; to the desert, and its hunger; to the well, and its thirst; to the workshop, and its daily toil; to the sea, and its midnight storms; to the boat, and the deep sleep of the weary; to the garden, and its bloody sweat; to Calvary, and its ignominious death, he conducts our steps—all along that thorny road which lay between the manger and the cross. For, as the Son of God became human that he might be humbled, as he assumed our nature that he might undertake our work and undergo our punishment, as he could not have been crucified, indeed, unless he had first been cradled, the prophet is to be regarded as including in this announcement of his birth all its high and saving purposes—the work and atoning sufferings, the life and death for which, gift of his Father's love, the Child was born and the Son was given.

Here, then, is the mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh; one above all in the Love; or, the Great Thing Wanted.

The great thing necessary to make christian intercourse a profit and a pleasure, is the exercise of love. The great thing necessary to preserve people from giving offence to their sincere brothers and sisters, is love. It is not worldly politeness that is wanted, nor is it better knowledge so much that is wanted: the great, the principal want, is more love. If all would talk as friends, as lovers, as persons who took delight in serving each other in love, it would be next to impossible for offences to be given. Love would make people mild both in asking questions and in giving answers. Love would make people's exhortations and counsels more profitable. It would make them consider what counsels or instructions were most needed. It would make them utter their instructions and their counsels in softer, gentler, simpler words. It would make them speak with feeling and with power. It would preserve them from speaking at random, and occupying the time of their friends with things that did not concern them. It would work within them both a spirit of revelation, of direction and of power.

Love would make people tolerant, forbearing, kind. It would make them glad to give the preference to their brethren, both in power and in interest. And there is nothing can serve as a substitute for love. No laws, no regulations, will serve as a substitute for love Love; love to God our Father, making us desirous in all things to do God's will, and love to our brethren, making us tender of their feelings, and desirous to promote their welfare; this, and this alone, can turn our intercourse into joy and mutual blessing.

And love is the great lesson inculcated by the Saviour and his Apostles. Love to the brethren, such love as Jesus showed, is what is enjoined in the new commandment. Love, love like Christ's, is the mark of true discipleship, the proof that we have passed from death unto life, the ground and measure of our future reward, the bond of christian union, the image of our heavenly Father, the first fruit of the Holy Spirit, and greater than faith and hope. Tongues, knowledge, understanding mysteries, prophecy, all are nothing without love. Love is all in all.

My dear friends, let us live in love, let us talk in love, let us bear in love. Let us cherish love, and labor, to bring it to perfection in our hearts. Let us check or exterminate all that is opposed to love. If we are faithful, love will grow within us. It will gather fresh strength daily. It will not rise into full dominion in an hour or in a year; it may take several years to master, or exterminate all that is opposed to love; still, if we are faithful, love will gradually grow, till it fills and rules our whole being.

Some think that because they cannot master their unruly tempers in a day, nor kill at once their harsher and unkindly feelings, they cannot do it at all. They have heard of instantaneous sanctification, or instantaneous perfection, and have tried to work themselves into it in the way of certain sects, and because they could not do it, they have lost all hopes. But let them hope again. They may all become as kind as Christ. They may master and subdue their spirits entirely. They may, by degrees, and patient perseverance, come to experience a perfect and most happy transformation. The heart is changing every day for better or for worse; and his who struggles faithfully against evil, and labors after what is good, is always changing for the better. You may not be able to perceive the change for a long time, but it is sure to take place, and you will see it in due season. No work is lost: no godly effort fails: every resistance to evil, every effort after goodness or perfection, makes you more like Jesus, more like God.

Strive, then, my friends, and be not weary. Strive, and be not faint-hearted. Be resolute, and be hopeful. Be faithful and trust God. For the sake of your own comfort, for the sake of your brethren, for the sake of Christ and his gospel, for the sake of God, and for the sake of a dark and wretched world, be resolute, be true, be faithful. Cherish the spirit of love, as your very life: repress, exterminate ill-will, as your great eternal foe. Love is your life, and hatred is your death. "Above all things, therefore, put on charity." "Love, not in word or profession merely, but in deed and in truth." "Love one another with a pure heart fervently." "Love is of God, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him; for God is love." "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, but the greatest of these is charity." Love would renovate the world. Love would instruct the ignorant. Love would correct the erring. Love would emancipate the oppressed. Love would put an end to war. Love would remodel all the the institutions of nations. Love would bind all nations together as one great family. Love would enrich all nations. Love would blend all tribes, and perfect the human frame and the human mind. Love would give health and longer life to men. Love would lay hold of universal truth, and bring to light all useful hidden science. Love would perfect all arts. It would bring under man's own power all the elements of nature, and make us the lords of the wide universe. It would join all worlds in one at last, and make all worlds one heaven. How wonderful that love should be so little cherished, and that its power and blessedness should be so little felt! But surely its growth and spread are coming nearer: surely the days will come when love shall reign in all, and be the lord and governor of all God's worlds. HOMO.

The "Invasion"

The doctrine of "No Life out of Christ"—miscalled, "annihilation," by our opponents—"has invaded the church," saith the Christian Advocate of the 24th inst. Read the following from that journal:

LIFE AND DEATH ETERNAL: a Refutation of the Theory of Annihilation. By Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D., Professor in Chicago Theological Seminary. Pp. 380. Boston: American Tract Society.

"Dr. Bartlett has done the church good service in preparing this volume. The latest and subtilest error of eschatology is annihilation. Universal salvation at death, against which our fathers fought so furiously, has now scarcely an advocate in the churches built especially to propagate it. Restorationism has taken its place, but that error has rarely invaded the church. It is an outside crutch offered by the devil to his disciples to help them limp the easier in his service. Annihilation has invaded the church. Its advocates are chiefly men of faith and prayer, and of churches that are built on Christ and are honored with the presence of the Spirit. It has some seeming support in some texts of scripture. Yet it is an error which, if clung to too obstinately and exclusively, will strip its advocates of power with God and man. It is adopted usually as a refuge from the doctrine of eternal fire. But the refuge is worse than that which it seeks to escape. Who would not prefer the dungeon to the cord, the rack to the guillotine? Death is the greatest punishment man or God can inflict. Eternal life in death is preferable to eternal annihilation. Dreadful as are both, each is far less so than the state of sin in which the condemned soul willfully and joyfully abides. This book is perhaps hardly sufficiently charitable to those who hold the opposite view, nor sufficiently philosophical or semi-rational for some students of the mystery. Yet it is what is especially needed in a subject far beyond the reach of reason, eminently scriptural. It examines the word acutely and satisfactorily. One can hardly read it without seeing that it is God's will, and the sinner's too, that he that is filthy shall be filthy still, to all eternity. Every minister should read this essay."

The work of Dr. BARTLETT we have not seen, and cannot say how deserving it is of praise or censure. Some seven years ago the Christian Advocate gave greater praise to a work written against our views by Mr. Landis, and commended it to all the churches. That work proved an abortion; and instead of accomplishing its design to arrest the "invasion of the church," it actually promoted it; so that to day "the church" is more saturated by the truth of literal life and death than on the day the Methodist officials published and commended Landis' work so fully. The notice of Dr Bartlett's work, given above by the Advocate, contains several things worthy of note.

1. The doctrine of no life out of Christ is admitted to have entered the church, thus proving it has a vitality in it which no barrier can resist.

2. The confession that, "Its advocates are chiefly men of faith and prayer," &c., is an honorable concession, and we thank the Advocate for it; we sincerely wish we had more faith among us, and greater fervency in prayer.

3. The admission that, "It has some seeming support in some texts of scripture," is of "some" value; but when such a mass of scripture testimony directly sustains the doctrine of literal life and death as to make it overwhelmingly true to "men of faith and prayer," we can hardly feel grateful for the scanty acknowledgement that there is only some seeming support for it. But we are willing to waive that point for this time.

4. "If it is clung to too obstinately and exclusively, it will strip its advocates of power with God and man," says the Advocate Convince us "it is an error" and you will find we shall not cling to it a moment. But till such times as our opposers can show us, from the Bible, that man has an immortal, or undying soul, we shall cling to the truth that, "the wages of sin is death," and "the soul that sinneth it SHALL DIE;" also, "except a man eat my flesh and drink my blood he has no life in him;" and "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life." Give us something besides Plato and assumptions—give us a "Thus saith the LORD, the soul is immortal and cannot die: the spirit is deathless." When anything thus plain can be produced, we bow to it with the reverence which becometh "men of faith and prayer;" and we will hasten, before our gray hairs go down to the grave, or we put on immortality, to undo all that we have done to "invade the church" with the views we advocate: you shall find we will not have "clung to it too obstinately," &c.

5. The Advocate says, our views are "adopted usually as a refuge from the doctrine of eternal fire." Not quite correct in this statement. They are adopted with the firm conviction that the doctrine of the eternal torment by the CREATOR of the work of his hands can never be reconciled with the known perfections of God and the general tenor of scripture, and that such a doctrine imputed to God is a dishonor done to His oath, "As I live, I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth," and His added expostulation, "Turn ye, for why will ye DIE."

6. But, says the Advocate, "The refuge is worse than that which it seeks to escape." That is, death is worse than eternal torments. We hope, after this, we shall not be accused of "lessening the terror of the punishment of sin, and thereby leading sinners not to care for it." It is now settled officially by the Advocate that our idea of punishment is more terrfiic than their own. We thank them for thus stopping the mouths of our opposers on that point; for that has been one of their chief batteries to keep us from "invading the church." That battery is now surrendered, and our Life views will no longer be hindered by the cry of "No punishment at all." Our opposers must now urge eternal torments as the more desirable punishment of the two. So the "invasion" advances; and other fortified points will soon give way; a breach has been made, and our opposers may be assured we shall push the advantage till the Revelator's vision shall become an eternal reality, viz., "And every creature which is in heaven, and on earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I, saying, Blessing and honor, and glory and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." Rev. v. 13. When this vision becomes an accomplished fact—and it will be—either all the wicked are "annihilated" or converted; they will all be literally dead, or have been made holy and happy. To us, there is no escape from this conclusion. We believe, of course, they will all have been "utterly exterminated," as Peter saith, Acts iii. 23. See Dr. Bloomfield's Note on the word "destroyed," in that verse.

7. The Advocate says, Dr. Bartlett's book "is perhaps hardly sufficiently charitable to those who hold the opposite view," &c. Then it lacks a most important element to commend it to our notice or attention; for though a man have "all knowledge," if he is destitute of this grace, he is "nothing;" so saith a greater than Dr. Bartlett. But we have no time to add more now.

Timeists.

We take the following extract from an article by WM. N. PILE, in the Crisis of the 16th instant. After having endeavored to fix the date of the commencement of the 1260 days, or years, of Daniel and Revelation, he says:

"If the 1335 do not begin with the 1260 years, the book of Revelation, after calling our especial attention to the 1260 years, has left us wholly in the dark as far as definite time is concerned, as there is not a period in it which reaches to Christ's coming. Our kind heavenly Father has not placed definite time in his word and left it to be a matter of mere conjecture as to whether those periods revealed anything definite or not. And we say, with all due reverence and humility, that if some one does not understand the year of Christ's coming, the promise of God will fail, and this can never be. We believe, then, that this present year, 1867, will witness the grand consummation—the coming of Christ and the resurrection of Daniel for his lot, with all the sleeping saints."

Here is assumption enough, and something that borders very near on blasphemy. The assumption that the 1335 begin with the 1260, is the first step, which we believe to be wholly groundless. The next assumption is that, God "has placed definite time in his word" for "Christ's coming." The third assumption, coupled with blasphemy, is in these words—"If some one does not understand the year of Christ's coming, the promise of God will fail."

All this is characteristic of "definite time" hunters; and shows the spirit begotten by such efforts. We believe the proximity of the second advent can be known; and we doubt not it will take place at no distant day; but that our time setters are all doomed to disappointment, we have little doubt. If any man will not live as he ought without having "definite time for the advent," we have no faith in their religion, at all. The laziest drone on earth will work when he sees his employer is right upon him, because he is coming; but a faithful servant keeps about his employer's work because he loves his master and his work.

Such kind of talk as that which occasions these remarks, may take with timid persons; but with the reflecting and sober christian they can have no other effect than to produce regret [illegible] such persons are doing the truth [illegible] the hindrance such are likely [illegible] the spread of the truth of the advent [illegible] is not likely they will heed [illegible] angel from heaven were to proclaim [illegible] error. Let us all work while it is day; and "occupy till" our Lord "come," as He has bid us do. Then shall we be found of Him in peace.

Trials.

"Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth: * * * if ye be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons." Heb. xii. 5-8. Again, when was our Lord's greatest suffering and agony? When was his soul exceeding sorrowful even unto death? When did he sweat, as it were, great drops of blood falling down to the ground? Was it not at the closing up, or near the closing up, of his state of trial? Was it not a short time previous to his being glorified? May it not be, then, as his saints draw nearer to the period of their glorification, that they also shall be called to drink of his cup and be baptized with the baptism wherewithal he was baptized? Would it be strange if their Master and Lord should thus give them practical and experimental knowledge that they must sympathize with him in his humiliation before they can be prepared to share in his glory? Sufferings and distress will show to ourselves and demonstrate before our Lord whether we love Christ, and his coming and kingdom, more than we love this present world. From the latter we must be weaned before we are prepared for the glory of Christ's fellow-heirs. Many of us may painfully find that we were more joined to the world, and the things of this present time, than we were aware. Happy shall we be if the distress and trials crucify us unto the world and the world unto us. No matter from what source the trials come, let us give ourselves to God and we shall be purified by them. But if we fret, murmur, and repine under them, we may suffer loss; or if we do not lose ourselves, the merciful God will have to keep us under the rod all the longer or more severely, to save us from perishing with the ungodly. Yet, we have need to sympathize with one another as members of Christ, and to pray one for another. Most sincerely do we say in the language of Paul, "Brethren, pray for us;" never did we more feel the need of the prayers of praying souls. May God, the Lord, keep his tempted, tried ones, and guide them safe to life eternal.

Persecution for the Truth's Sake.

DEAR FRIEND:—We pray you be firm; and if you cannot go forward in your calling without doing violence to your conscience, do, by all means, allow God to make you a living or dying martyr of his truth. It is plain to us, that nothing but resoluteness on the part of those who are led to embrace the truth, will ever conquer or destroy the intolerance of a fancied "orthodoxy" and carnality. If all are to relinquish the truth, or shrink from its profession, whenever it begins to subject them to reproach, or loss, or persecution, we may give up the hope of a christian reformation, at once. If those who receive the truth will not patiently suffer, or cheerfully die for its sake, the truth will fall, and error and selfishness will rule over all. It is plain that firmness, patient suffering, and even numerous martyrdoms will be necessary to the overthrow of the present overgrown system of delusion, and fraud, and cruelty. And if there is to be suffering or martyrdom, why should not we be willing to bear our share of them? If we are to shrink from them, why may not others? Or if others are to bear them, why should not we? I any are to bear them, why should we not all be willing to bear them? If we refuse to suffer reproach, or loss, or want, or martyrdom for the sake of truth, we are not worthy of the blessings of truth, we are not worthy of fellowship with Christ, we are not worthy of the favor of God If we shrink from the free profession of the truth for fear of want, or reproach, or martyrdom, we do, so far as we are concerned, give up the world to everlasting thralldom, to everlasting darkness, to everlasting and unmitigated wretchedness. When the profession and the spread of the truth require us to subject ourselves to reproach, or loss, or martyrdom, God does, in effect, say to us, "You may ransom your brethren by the sacrifice of your reputation, your situation, your ease, your friends, or your life;—will you pay that price for their redemption?" And shall we tell God, Nay? Shall we, after having been redeemed by the sufferings, reproaches, and blood of Christ, and his followers, refuse to endure the like reproaches and sufferings for the redemption of our brethren?

Dear Friend, this shrinking from persecution, this fear of reproach and desertion, this sacrifice of truth to the interests of the flesh, is the ruin of the world. It was the crime, the curse, the plague of the ancient Gentiles; it was the crime, the curse, the ruin of the ancient Jews; it is the principal crime and curse of the present generation. If all, who have been convinced of the errors of modern theology, had courage and faith enough to give them up, the dreadful curse of immortal souls in endless torture would soon have perished from the christian world. If all who have been led to see the truth and glory of the doctrine of Life future and eternal, only through Christ, had acted up to their convictions, fearlessly and faithfully, this grand, glorious, and crowning truth of the gospel would have made more progress, and soon have overrun the earth. How long will christians seek to avoid persecution, by smothering the light of God's truth for fear of the reproach of men?

It is in vain to expect that ever a time will come when ancient errors can be rejected, and corrupt institutions opposed, without exposure to suffering and reproach. And it is equally vain to expect that a time will ever come when simple, clear, unadulterated truth can be professed or propagated without risk of persecution. If we wait for a more convenient season for the profession and practice of our principles, we may wait for ever. No such convenient season will ever come. Delays in professors, are as bad, as foolish, and as dangerous as delays in the profane. We may as well attempt to justify the postponement of religion altogether, as attempt to justify the postponement of a thorough reformation. We do hope, friend, that you will be found faithful. We know you will be severely tried, as you have been tried already; but you will never have cause to repent of being faithful. On the contrary, you will not have proved faithful a year, before you will begin to rejoice in your faithfulness, and count your sufferings joy. It has been so with us. We have seldom had to wait a year, before we have proved our persecutions work for our good. We have seldom had to wait a year, before we have received a reward, a compensation for our sacrifices, not only in inward, spiritual joy, but in outward blessings also. If we have sacrificed one friend, we have often gained two others. If we have met with treachery and cruelty from some, we have met with kinder and more respectful treatment from others. Even in point of the wealth and worldly influence of friends, we appear not to have suffered any loss in the long run; but the contrary. In all things God has shown that he can neither fail to fulfil his promises, nor long remain his children's debtor. We are often amazed when we look on these things, and see how God has cared for us. And if he had seen fit to double our trials, and had thought well not to return us our losses in kind; if he had seen good to withhold from us all recompense in earthly, outward blessings, we have no doubt but he would have abounded towards us the more in inward gifts, in blessings of heavenly love. And he will do so to you. If you do his will and risk your all for truth and duty, he will turn it to your advantage. He will in some way or other, make every thing you lose, and every pain you suffer, work for your present and eternal welfare. We know that "all things work together for good to them who love God."

The Adamic Penalty.

"God having created man after his own image, a living soul, endowed with the powers of reason, in order to form in him all the habits of virtue, besides the obligations resulting from the natures and relations of things, was pleased, in a command of pure authority, to exercise his obedience to Himself, his Maker, by forbidding the use of one tree in the garden, called the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. The threatening, in case of transgression, was, that he should surely die. Death was to be the consequence of disobedience. Death is the losing of life. Death is opposed to life; and must be understood according to the nature of that life to which it is opposed. Now the death here threatened can, with any certainty, be opposed, only to the life God gave Adam when he created him, verse 7. Anything besides this must be pure conjecture, without a solid foundation. For no other life is spoken of before, to which death can be opposed; nor, can we conceive, from any thing in the history, how Adam could understand it of the loss of any other life than that he had newly received. In this light, the sense of the threatening will stand thus: 'Thou shalt surely die; as if he had said, 'I have formed thee of the dust of the ground, and breathed into thy nostrils the breath of life, and thus thou art become a living soul. But if thou eatest of the forbidden tree, thou shalt cease to be a living soul; for I will take from thee the breath of life, and thou shalt return unto the dust of which I formed thee.' Less than this, I think, the threatening cannot signify; and I do not see how anything more can be made of it."—Dr. Taylor, England.

God's Unspeakable Gift.

A very lofty mountain, rising in lonely grandeur on the horizon to cleave the blue sky with its snowy pinnacles, is descried from afar. We see it a long way off—from where hills and heights, shaggy forests, silent uplands, and busy towns, and all other individual objects that lie between, are lost in distance, and present the appearance of a level plain. So, just so, Adam and Eve descried a child of theirs rising above the common level of mankind, at the long distance of four thousand years. Of the millions who were to spring from them and people the earth of which they were the lonely tenants, this distinguished child was the only one on whom, on whose birth, and life, and death, and works, their weeping eyes and eager hopes were fixed.

On earth, the expectation of that event was coeval almost with the promise of it—Eve cherishing the hope that not any of her daughters, but she herself, should be the mother of the Messiah. Wrung with remorse for her incalculable crime, and eager to see its misery and mischief undone, she grasped at the fulfillment of the promise, but to be disappointed; to catch only a mocking shadow. It is a common saying, that the wish is father to the thought; what we eagerly desire, we easily believe. So the shipwrecked sailor, a miserable castaway tossed on the open sea, takes a sun-lit cloud for a sail, and rouses his fellows from their stupor with joyful cry of Land! land!—mistaking a fog-bank for the blessed shore: and so also our poor mother Eve, hailing in her first-born the promised seed, clasped Cain to her beating bosom. Alas! in the words of scripture, she fled from a lion, and a bear met her; she leant on a wall, and a serpent bit it. "I have gotten," she exclaimed, "the man"—the promised man—"from the Lord." Never was mother so bitterly disappointed; never more false, though fair, the bright, happy visions that have floated round many an infant's cradle! It was a serpent, not a Saviour, Eve pressed to her joyful bosom. For, strange to say, as there, where Pilate gives them their choice between Jesus and Barabbas, the infuriate multitude prefer a murderer to the Lord of Glory, here, in this quiet bower where Eve is singing her boy asleep, he who cruelly shed man's blood to kill is mistaken for Him who generously shed his own to save.

From that day onward many besides Eve were disappointed—if not so bitterly. The vision tarried; tarried long; for four thousand weary years eyes grew dim looking, and hearts grew faint hoping for it. But it came at last. Heaven is all moved. Its gates fly open, and, accompanied by a shining train, the Son of God descends upon the world; and in that stable over whose humble roof angels are singing, and within whose bare unfurnished walls an infant is wailing, the prophecy is fufilled, "Unto us a child is born, and unto us a Son is given." This announcement suggests two or three grand topics for our pen.

The person given, and his purpose?—This is our Lord Jesus Christ.

The verse where these words lie begins with our Saviour's humanity, but, mounting upward, rises to the height of his divinity; so that here, to borrow a figure from the earliest promise, and regard his humanity, or lower part, as his heel, here he stands with his feet on earth, but his head in heaven. A grand picture! Well is he entitled Wonderful! Language has often been abused—grand names being given to mean and good ones to bad objects; but never by baptismal font, nor elsewhere, was there bestowed on child of woman born a name so descriptive of its properties, qualities, career and character, as that given to this one—"His name shall be called Wonderful."

Of the properties which this verse catalogues as meeting, and harmonizing, in the person of our Redeemer, these words present that which, if it does not most exalt him in our admiration, most endears him to our hearts. It is not the throne of a divine and awful majesty the prophet unveils here. There is much to affect our eyes, but nothing—as there where angels stand adoring with faces their wings do screen—to dazzle them. Isaiah shows us Christ in the humanity which for our sakes he condescended to assume—as a man, and also "a man of sorrows, acquainted with grief." It is to Bethlehem, and its stable; to the desert, and its hunger; to the well, and its thirst; to the workshop, and its daily toil; to the sea, and its midnight storms; to the boat, and the deep sleep of the weary; to the garden, and its bloody sweat; to Calvary, and its ignominious death, he conducts our steps—all along that thorny road which lay between the manger and the cross. For, as the Son of God became human that he might be humbled, as he assumed our nature that he might undertake our work and undergo our punishment, as he could not have been crucified, indeed, unless he had first been cradled, the prophet is to be regarded as including in this announcement of his birth all its high and saving purposes—the work and atoning sufferings, the life and death, for which, gift of his Father's love, the Child was born and the Son was given.

dignity of his person, yet below almost any in the degradation of his circumstances—this his touching complaint, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." According to Job, and also to universal experience, man is "born to trouble as the sparks fly upward;" and whatever differences in respect of race or rank, color, character, or position, may distinguish one man from another, liability to trouble makes brothers of us all. All eyes are supplied with tears, and are made to shed them; all mankind enter the world with a cry,—the first sign of life,—and leave it with a groan; nor in the black fat mould of churchyards is there aught of difference between the dust of a beggar and of a king, nor could any tell whether these fleshless fingers had held a scepture or a plough, whether this grinning skull had worn a bonnet or a crown. We have sufferings in common; and there were also troubles in which we and the Son of God could have been fellow sufferers. I could have hungered with him in the parched desert; I could have thirsted with him at Jacob's well; touched by his grief, I could have wept with him by the grave of Lazarus; and having been often worn out with exhausting labors, tired as the boy who fell asleep beneath his gun amid the roar of battle, I might have slept by his side when the lightnings flashed, and loud thunders pealed, and tempests tossed the fishing boat on the waves of Galilee.

But for our sakes, and for man's redemption, this man was born to troubles we never bore, and cannot fancy. The ocean has been fathomed to depths that would receive, and top, and bury below her waves the snowy crests of the Andes. But there are abysses there, depths in the sea, profounder still; out of soundings; were man never struck bottom; which wheel never spun, nor ship carried line long enough to fathom. Like these, but more immeasurable, altogether inconceivable indeed, were the sufferings which, afflicting the Saviour's soul, dyed the flowers of Gethsemane with his blood, and wrung from his pale lips the lamentable cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" For these this child was born, the Son of God was given; and what a claim is his on our faith and warmest gratitude, on our love and perpetual service? He died, the just for the unjust, that we might be saved.

Letters and Extracts.

From Mrs. Catharine C. Williams.

BUTLER, Bates Co., Mo., Jan. 13, 1867.

BR. STORRS :—I little thought when I wrote you from Clarksville, Iowa, nearly a year since (if memory serves), directing that the HERALD OF LIFE should be sent to that place for six months, that it would be so long before I should write again. I believe in that letter I apprised you of our intended emigration to a more southern latitude. We left the goodly pleasant land and people of Iowa, last Aug. 27th; and after a long, tedious, overland journey (with our own teams), of nearly six weeks, we reached our Missouri home, Oct. 5th, in safety. The main object in exchanging a very desirable land, one that had been our home for eleven years, for an untried land and climate, so late in life, too, was to escape the rigor of northern winters, and at the same time be able to take care of animals with less labor and more comfort. Both these objects are attained; but at what cost, we have yet, in part, to learn. The price will be partly apparent when I tell you we are in the track of the late terrible war, about fifteen miles from the Kansas line. This whole region, through here bordering on Kansas, was depopulated, and devastated by fire, if not by sword. Bare chimneys are on every hand; only now and then a house and orchard remaining. About a year ago, here and there, some venturous body began to reoccupy and build up; and thus it has been during the past year, till now, there is quite a population, which is constantly and steadily swelling, bringing from the different Northern States capital and enterprise, and in some cases, I am glad and thankful to state, religion too.

I presume it will not be uninteresting to you to read something about this distant land. It is, in my estimation, a grand agricultural region; also, pastoral, it being well watered by some quite large, and many small streams, running over stony beds, cutting down, in many cases, making steep banks. Then springs seem to abound. It is rather high, rolling prairie; though not steep or broken. Grass is very luxuriant and abundant. It is said to be unsurpassed as a fruit region; while but a few miles north, peaches, generally, fail. The different kinds of oak, elm, ash, hackberry, sycamore, black walnut, hickory, &c., compose the timber. Hickory nuts, of perfectly monstrous size, abound in limitless abundance, at most. Everything needs to be taken here at the foundation, as school houses, mills, churches, &c., shared the general ruin; consequently the staples of life are dear, and as yet unhandy to get. At present, our nearest railroad point at Pleasant Hill, Cass Co., 45 miles distant; though a railroad is under contract from Kansas city to Ft. Scott, which will bring it to about 15 miles, on the west of us. The wants and deficiencies mentioned, are being met as fast as possible; but there are other wants which I fear may not be so soon forthcoming.

Those who live where they can enjoy christian converse can hardly realize what it is to be cut off from such sources of enjoyment. It seems to me I never felt so much like forgetting everything but the love of God in the heart, and dropping all party distinctions, uniting on the strength of that alone, as since we came here, where we are for the time quite isolated; though at our County Seat, 4 miles off, they have Baptist and Methodist preaching, in a place where a year since there was scarcely a human being. I have only been able to attend once, on a Methodist quarterly occasion; which was held in a respectable sized school room, which was filled to overflowing with a respectable looking audience. What a pity that man-made creeds cannot be thrown to the winds, so that those who feel they are one in heart should feel no bar to union. O, that the day might soon come when it should be felt in truth that in Christ Jesus all are one. This will not be, probably, so long as such an imperfect theology obtains. Would that this genial climate and fertile soil could be appropriated by earnest, zealous lovers of the gospel of the Son of God; or, at least, a good portion of it; so that a standard could be erected around which all lovers of this pure, glad message could rally, untrammelled, and free to learn so much of it as each could comprehend.

I feel I have been cut off from life lovers for some time. I could not well send sooner. I have not sent to have the address changed, because we left our three oldest children back in Iowa; and I wanted them to have the reading of it. I think I have mentioned about having a son in the army. Our oldest son enlisted before he was 18, and was gone nearly two and half a years, but was spared to come back again. Such a parting—such a meeting—I never expect again. I never want to cease to be grateful for the great mercy. May our faithless President be withheld from making a repetition of such scenes possible.

From Mrs. L. D. Heath.

BROCKPORT, N. Y., Jan. 23, 1867.

BR. STORRS :—I have a few words of good cheer for you this morning. The truth of no life except through Christ, has been shut up here, and not allowed to be spoken, and not received if it was; but the Lord has evidently set his hand to the work, and is shaking the children off from a preacher, on whom they have been built; and now they are ready to investigate for themselves, and the result is, they are getting their eyes opened to the truth. I have tried to lend my book—LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST—but could not till this winter. Now I could lend a dozen if I had them; and a brother, from Jones City, Illinois, says he is converted all over, through and through; and urged so hard for me to sell him my book, that I have done so. After working all day in the foundery, he would sit up till 12 o'clock at night to read; and yesterday mailed the book home to his family. He is perfectly delighted. Others are waiting for me to get another copy, not being able to buy yet.

The HERALD is most excellent. If I only had the means, I would send it to some 20 different persons for three months, and by that time they would become acquainted with it, and would nearly all become permanent subscribers, I think.

There is a young man here, that wants your views on the thief on the cross; also, where it says, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." If it will not be asking too much, please answer through the HERALD. The young man is in favor of the doctrine of "Life only in Christ." He got it entirely from the Bible, not knowing there were others of the same faith. We lent him "LIFE FROM THE DEAD," and are going to lend him some HERALDS.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The "young man" will find the case of the "Thief," and the words of our Lord, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living," both explained in LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST, about the middle of that work. We do not think best now to go into an explanation in the HERALD We think he will have no difficulty with those texts when he thoroughly examines them in the light of other scriptures.

From Sanford Hart.

UNIONVILLE, CONN., Jan. 25, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I have come to the conclusion that, "The wages of sin is death." It is that which commences after dying ceases. It is the extinction of life. It is not conscious suffering in any degree. It is not a realization of what man loses by sining; or, to feel pain. Thus, for one to think that a resurrection is needed in order to execute the penalty of the law, in my mind, is error. I believe whoever is worthy to obtain a resurrection from the dead, cannot die any more. If God is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and not the God of the dead, but of the living, then I must believe, either that there is a living conscious entity that survives death, or that the wicked dead forever remain under death's dominion. I must believe the latter until I have stronger proof than I now have of the former, or, that a resurrection of the wicked dead is needed in order for man to suffer the penalty of the law. The Lord told Adam if he ate of the tree of knowledge of good and evil he should surely die. After the lapse of 930 years, Adam suffered the penalty of the law of God. Who is so foolish as to believe that Adam must be raised from the dead to die again in order to receive the wages of sin? O, thou inexhaustible fountain of truth; thou art my only hope. "The wages of sin is death. But the gift of God is eternal life." "That which is born of the flesh, is flesh—and that which is born of the spirit, is spirit." He that sows to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption. He that sows to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The people of our country, as if the terrible scenes of carnage and waste we have just passed through had been entirely obliterated from their minds, have become absorbed in great gambling schemes. Schemes got up ostensibly for philanthropic purposes, but really to enrich a few gamblers by robbing and degrading the unwary and ignorant. What makes the matter worse, men really anxious to maintain good characters are drawn into the nets by the influence of great names, and especially of church members and even ministers of the gospel. The interest attending the drawings of these lotteries reminds one of the exciting scenes when news of great battles was announced during the rebellion.

The winner of the Crosby Opera House sold out to Mr. Crosby, the former proprietor, on Saturday, for $200,000. The balance sheet of the proprietors of the gift enterprise shows a total profit of $650,000 on the undertaking.

Rev. Joel Lindsley, the preacher who whipped his child to death in Orleans County last summer, has been convicted of manslaughter in the second degree.

FOREIGN.

Each week brings accounts from Candia—one day that the revolutionists are subdued, followed next day that the war is extending with great success for the heroic Cretans. It is certain the whole world is awakened to the great importance of this question, impelled, no doubt, to work out the designs of Him who ruleth among the nations. Without accepting any of the many theories about the end of the Gentile domination in Judea, with all christians we look for the end of the treading down of Jerusalem, when some signal act of divine appointment will be understood by God's people; perhaps the unfolding of prophecies yet obscure, if not the manifestation of the Saviour. The events transpiring in the dominion of the immediate desolator of the holy places is attracting unusual attention from students of the Bible. We, therefore, give the subject a good deal of space which, under other circumstances, we might not deem warranted.

Trustworthy reports represent the following to be the situation of affairs in Candia at the beginning of the present year:

The exact position of the combatants in Candia is this: Of the 40,000 men sent from Turkey and Egypt against the Cretans, there are scarcely half left—war, fatigue and the epidemics which invariably accompany Turkish armies, having destroyed about 20,000 Those that remain are disorganized and dispirited at the results of a struggle which has little in common with ordinary warfare. The real strength of Mustapha Pasha consists of a corps of 3,000 native Turks (they were originally 5,000 in number), who have distinguished themselves on every occasion. The Cretans can bring into line 8,000 combatants well armed, of whom 2,000 are volunteers. But this is only the kernel of the organized resistance. There are besides a number of guerrillas whose evolutions around the Turkish army are incessant and do immense damage. The 6,000 Cretans have arms, provisions and munitions at their disposal. They are full of ardor, like the volunteer troops, act under the orders of the able chiefs whose military education was completed in the schools of Greece and France, and all have entire confidence in the success of their enterprise. Even should the Porte be able to send 10,000 fresh troops to Crete, they would not be sufficient to suppress the revolt, and then it must become a question how long Europe will remain a spectator of a contest that apparently will be endless, if foreign intervention does not take place. In Epirus and Thessaly events are marching with the greatest rapidity. The insurgents have invited the Greek General Kouzzomilla and Colonel Kaskari to put themselves at their head, and it is reported in Athens that they have already left for this purpose, and fresh recruits leave every day to join the insurgents. The provisional government of Epirus have issued a proclamation inviting the Tessalians to make common cause with them and to unite under a common government.

The King of Italy's speech to the Representatives of the Chambers on New Year's Day continued to be the subject of speculation. It is quite certain that Victor Emanuel used strong language about the army, saying, "It must not be put down," and "it may soon be offered a field for winning new laurels." The approval of this speech, whatever was the text, at Paris is thought to indicate a previous knowledge of its purpose and an understanding between the two sovereigns, and is thought to forecast Eastern complications, but it is not yet clear how Italian sympathies with Greek insurrections and French opposition to them can be reconciled.

The reform decrees which were issued a few days ago by the French government have taken Paris, France and the world by surprise. The Emperor has kept his secrets well. No intimation of the appearance of the decrees had been given through the French or foreign press, and they were, therefore, all the more eagerly commented upon. A majority of the Paris papers, it is stated, regarded them as very liberal. The Cabinet seemed to regard the decree as a total change of policy, for all of the members tendered their resignations.

More recent advices from Paris state that France is disgusted with the measures recently put forward by the Emperor Napoleon.

The French, Russian and Prussian governments have agreed to negotiate with the Porte a settlement of the affairs of the East.

The Liberte has the following: "It would be vain to deny what is being plotted in secret—the division of the Ottoman Empire between Russia and England, both of them cordial allies of Prussia, their not disinterested instrument. England is to have Egypt; Prussia the whole of Germany; Russia to have Turkey, from which, however, would be cut out a Kingdom of Greece of a suitable size for King George, the brother-in-law of the Prince of Wales, the heir a parent to the English throne, and brother-in-law also to the presumptive heir to the throne of Muscovy, and, therefore, the bond of union between Russia and England. Turkey, who begins to suspect the fate that awaits her, is making her arrangements. But where is the money to pay the fresh troops she is going to arm? This state of things explains the haughty attitude of Italy toward Turkey. Italy is playing her card."

The closing months of the year 1866 were to have been "big with fate" for Ireland; but they calmly followed their predecessors into the regions of the past without the slightest exertions on the part of the Fenian Brotherhood to fulfil the promises and vows given in their name by their Chief Organizer. The new year finds the country not improved, but much injured by the credence given to his pretensions.

An interdict has been laid upon the continuance of religious services in the Scotch Protestant Church in Rome by the Papal authorities, and it is said that they threaten to put a stop also to services held in the American Chapel.

The Greek Patriarch has just been removed. All the stories about a union between the Roman and Greek churches are a lie.

It seems indeed that the Vienna government will at last succeed in ruining the Austrian monarchy, a task which was too difficult either for Kossuth or for Bismark, but which, after all may be achieved by that fatal tendency of unsettling everything without laying the foundations of a better future.

On New Year's eve the Vienna Gazette contained an order in Council introducing general conscription without exception. Each young man, on attaining his twentieth year, must enter the army, serve three years in the line, three years in the first, and six years in the second reserve.

Spurgeon's Monday Night Prayer-meeting "draws" a congregation of 2,000.

A Note of Explanation.

BR. STORRS :—In my notice of the "Salem Discussion" it is thought by some that I implicated both parties, in speaking of the "disturbed state of feeling manifested at some stages of the debate." I designed no such thing, as all could see, from my statement, who was the chaffed one, and who would be likely to manifest it. I simply state that it was all on one side.

Labor for God.

ADVICE TO A FRIEND.

Let nothing hinder you from doing all the providence of God enables you to do to arouse our dying fellow-men to the importance of seeking the life Christ has to bestow, and to spread the light and blessings of the gospel through the world. Do labor for this. This must be right. Whatever else is doubtful, there can be no doubt but that we ought to live in love, and labor to improve and bless our fellow-men. Everything calls us to labor for the good of our fellows. The law of love and beneficence is written both within us and without us; both on the tables of our hearts, on the pages of the sacred writings, and on the universe around us. God has so made us, that we cannot be at ease, while we see our brethren in torments or in peril by our side. God has so formed us, that we cannot but rejoice, when we see a fellow-man relieved from suffering or from danger. God has so formed us, that the sufferings and enjoyments, the danger and the safety, the smiles and the tears of our brethren are our own. And what is this but a revelation of God's will, a revelation of our duty; a revelation that it is our duty to relieve our needy brother, to instruct our ignorant or erring brother, to comfort our afflicted brethren, and to do our best to promote the safety, the improvement, and the eternal life of all of our fellow-men? What is it, but a proof, that God would have us to live in love with all mankind, and to make it the great end of all our thoughts and labors to fill the world with joy.

And christianity reveals the same great principle, and inculcates the same great law. Christianity proclaims without, what our hearts declare within. It proclaims the same great law of ardent, earnest, universal love. Our nature and the law of Christ are in perfect harmony: the law of Christ and the law of our hearts are one. Jesus is the perfection of our humanity. He is the revelation of what the nature of every man may be. He is the revelation to the eye from without, of what is revealed to the mind of every living man. The revelation within requires attention in order to be read; it requires respect, in order that it may become clear, distinct, or loud; it requires time and nurture, in order to its growth and perfection. Still, it is there, and Jesus is only without us, what our own minds are formed to be, if rightly cultured, and properly obeyed within us. The law of our hearts, is the law of love; and the law of Jesus is the same. His words were love, his works were love; his tears, his sufferings, and his death were love. He was the revelation of pure, eternal, boundless love. He loved all, and he loved them unto death. He "went about doing good" this was his history: "It is more blessed to give than to receive," was his soul or feeling. And do we bear his name? And can we allow ourselves to live for any other object than to love and bless mankind? Can we bear Christ's name, and yet put off our labors for men's welfare? No, no, my friend. Whether we can settle controversies, or explain mysteries, or penetrate the darkness that surrounds us or not, we must do good. We must do good now. We must do good with diligence and zeal. We must do good to all as we have opportunity: we must make love and doing good the element and business of our lives.

And I am greatly mistaken if we are not to discover the yet buried principles of christian truth, while we are laboring to promote the welfare of our fellow-men. I am greatly mistaken, if God has not ordained, that they only shall be able to discern and apply to advantage the principles of christian truth and duty, who devote themselves with zeal and constancy to works of love. It is while we labor in love that our minds acquire their manly vigor, and have the law of God within developed and made readable. And it is by the revelation of the law within, that we are enabled to interpret the law of God without. The man who keeps to his closet, and labors as a student only, kills himself, he makes himself both a maniac and a skeleton; he both deranges the powers of his mind, and cuts short the life of his body. It is he only, who works with what light he has, and, in working, seeks and waits for more, that is blest of God. God meant us to work out in order every principle we discover, and not to wait for the revelation of a second great principle, before we apply the first. Do not, therefore, wait, but set to work at once; teach all you know, and practice all you teach, and God will bless you.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, IS to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

AN ACROSTIC.

BY DANIEL WESTON; NOW ASLEEP IN JESUS.

Ordain'd of God, to vindicate the truth,
Nor less to justify His ways to man;
With firm and steady pace pursue the track
Assign'd. Arm'd with all-conquering Love—the Routed foe, with Gideon's sword beat down—
Despoil'd and vanquished—glad to quit the field.

Dauntless go on—the victory is sure;
Expect and brave the scoffing jeers of men;
A few short days will terminate the strife,
Rewarded with the crown of Endless Life.

Bedew with tears the seed—the harvest will Repay with rich and more abundant sheaves.
Onward—ten thousand kindred spirits cry,
The truth of God is mighty to prevail:
Heaven's blessing hath and will attend your efforts,
Extend the triumphs of long-hidd'n truths,
Reveal'd in plainness—but for men-made creeds!

Onward—in fearless contest urge your way,
No weapon form'd against you can prevail;
What though sectarian bigotry may rage,
And labor to evade the force of truth?
Rejoice to know your mission from on high
Demands these efforts till your work is done.

Go on, dear brother—arm'd with power divine—
Omnipotence your safe, your sure defence.

Not many links of the prophetic chain,
Or days of toil and conflict, now remain;
Rejoice in hope—our King is at the door;

His weeping saints ere long shall weep no more.
Eternal Life!—how infinite the prize!
Exchange of suffering—for immortal joys!
Despis'd rejected—joyful onward go,

Till He the crown of Endless Life bestow.
His chariot wheels, not distant far, we hear,
Echo'd in sounds that speak his coming near;

Sweet is the hope, the joy, our triumph soon!
To hear the welcome plaudit, of "well done;"
Our absent Lord will come, nor long delay,
Restore lost Eden, and his sceptre sway,
Moulded and fashion'd in our glorious Head,

No spot or stain of sin, no cause of dread;
Our afflictions pass unheeded on,
Resigned to suffer till the prize is won.

Filled with the Spirit of our conqu'ring Lord,
Exulting in his strength and promised word,
As giants girded for the fight, we go,
Resolv'd through Him to vanquish ev'ry foe.

These scenes of conflict hasten to a close,
Hush'd to a calm—the ruthless storm shall cease,
Exalted far above the reach of foes,

For transient ills, reap endless joy and peace:
O'er all the past our raptur'd thoughts shall range;
Exult and triumph in the mighty change.

THE LOST JEWEL.

[From The Methodist.]

Carlo's father had been, in Italy, an excellent gardener. Few American or English travellers failed to visit his beautiful garden, to enjoy the exquisite fruits and flowers, and to discuss freely the topics of the day. It was from these that Zucchi learned the difference between a free and a despotic government, and, as he had not sense enough to keep his opinions to himself, the police found him out, and would have thrown him into prison, had not some friends aided him to escape. Yes, even at this day men in many European countries dare not speak out freely as we do here or in England, and we can not but pray that the time may hasten when all the world shall be free to express an honest opinion and to worship God in spirit and in truth. Carlo Zucchi accompanied his father, but the cold winds of the North, and his sad lot, all worked against him, and in a few months Zucchi was lying in a stranger's grave, and Carlo was alone in a strange land with nothing to remind him of his home but an old violin and a raven. Poor little exile, he had seen too much sorrow to be able to endure his sad lot with the carelessness of childhood, so he was grave and silent—and the tunes that he played upon his violin were rather mournful. The Italian Benevolent Society had buried his father, and now they interested themselves for the son. An excellent situation with a jeweller was found for him, and though he would have preferred to work in a garden and find familiar friends in the beautiful flowers, still he was pleased enough to learn about precious stones, and be able to sit quietly at his work undisturbed by rough boys or coarse men. His master was an old German who was famous for working in jewels, and he took a great fancy to the young Italian exile, and was kinder to him than to any one else. The boy could not bear the crowded city, so he had hired a small room in the top floor of a house near the Central Park. Here would he climb after his day's work with his supper in a paper—some fruit and salad, and a few rolls; for Carlo knew little of meat and cared less for it; but he could not do without fruit. His room was neat, but very small. It contained a small bed, two stools, a table, a closet, and a tiny stove on which he used to boil chestnuts and maccaroni when he had company. On the wall were some pretty pictures, his raven's cage, and the green bag in which he kept his violin.

After supper he would clear away the table, and taking his violin, sit down in the window, while the bird would perch upon the sill or in a neighboring tree and listen approvingly while he played over all the tunes he had ever learned and thought about his home, his mother and dear little Beppina, the sister that he left behind. Sometimes he would quite forget that it was late until poor old Gaz, his sleepy bird, would try to call out "Buona notte!" which means "good-night," and thus remind Carlo that it was time for honest folks and ravens to be in bed.

Gaz, which sounded, as Carlo pronounced it, like cats, was a great favorite, and he would often accompany the lad to the shop, flying or hopping before him, unmindful of dogs or other early visitors. Usually he sat on his master's shoulder, and the neighbors soon ceased to wonder at the black bird who was so tame and such a comrade of the lonely boy.

Carlo began to make other friends. He was a Protestant, and he took real delight on Sundays in attending church. He was unable to understand the preaching, as he was not familiar with English, but he listened to the music, and often on returning home would play over the tunes he had heard. He was soon able to turn off some very neat work. His master had engaged to supply him with clothes, and he carefully saved up his earnings, not from a miserly love of hoarding, but that he might have enough to pay Beppina's passage to America. She and her mother were living with an uncle, but he longed to bring them, or at least his sister, to this happy home of the poor exile. So he did not waste his money on selfish pleasures. His frugal meals and the rent of his room did not take much. A walk in the Park was his chief delight, for here he could breathe the fresh air, and wander through the Ramble with Gaz for a companion, and, soothed by the gentle, quiet and delicious fragrance, fancy he was back in the old garden at home.

One day when he went to the shop, there was a great commotion; the master was in a great excitement, all the tools and furniture were displaced, the cases of precious stones were all open, and it was easily seen that something very unusual had disturbed the quiet place. A stone which the master had been showing Carlo the day before, and telling him was worth a great sum, was missing. It had been lost or stolen, and the poor jeweller was in despair. He had hunted through every place, and examined all the rubbish on the floor, but all in vain. He now turned to Carlo and questioned him closely. He knew how anxious the boy was to obtain the money for his sister's passage, and he suspected that the temptation had been too great. Poor Carlo, pale and trembling, in vain protested his innocence. The jeweller, though generally a good man, was apt to lose his temper, and when Carlo stoutly denied having touched the stone, and declared that he would not be called a thief, Mr. Steinbrecher only grew more angry, and called in a policeman, accusing the apprentice of the theft.

It would have wrung your heart to see the policeman hurry off the boy, followed by a crowd of young ragamuffins, to the station house. Carlo was in great distress; he felt his innocence, but knew not how to prove it; then there came into his mind some hymns that he had heard in church, and they seemed to comfort him and to lead his thoughts to that best Friend, who alone is always a very present help in time of trouble. He felt a sudden calm and peace, and by the time he reached the station house he had recovered his serenity, knowing that in some way his innocence would be made clear.

JERUSALEM: THE OLD AND THE NEW.

BY WM. WOOD.

By way of introduction, I would say that my mind has been much exercised in relation to the literal New Jerusalem city, and future kingdom of God. Though a believer for ten years in this theory, I have at times many doubts in regard to the subject, and will give to the readers, especially those belonging to the commonwealth of Israel (or as we are called, "age to come"), with others who are looking for a literal city to come down from God out of heaven, some of the inharmonies attending it. It is a source of much gratification to the diligent searcher of bible expositions, that there are so many able minds engaged in this great work, by means of which, the word of God will be most powerfully tested, in a short period of time, as relates to the fulfilment of prophecy and closing up scenes of this present dispensation. Agitate, agitate, should still be the cry of every seeker after truth. With much pleasure the writer of this peruses the various correspondence of the HERALD; especially of Life Eternal only to the righteous through Christ; the coming of Elijah; and the views of Br. Curry, with responses by Br. Storrs in the last issues.

It has been my earnest belief for the past three years, that God never intended immortality to be bestowed upon the race by the then tree of life, or through our first parents; they being representatives only of mortality: but his ultimate purpose will be manifested in his Son, the second Adam. The first dominion as well as first man was perishable. The second, or dominion restored, will be, like the second man, eternal; both the first man and his dominion are to be restored: or more properly, regenerated, conditionally by or through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

We will now turn our thoughts upon the two Jerusalems; giving only the general outlines and showing their relation to each other. Jerusalem signifies "They shall see peace;" from Jeru, they shall see; and Salem, peace. David, the son of Jesse, was the first king. "In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah." During his, and the reign of his son Solomon, God manifested himself in an especial manner by raising up a class of people from a low condition to the highest earthly elevation. Ancient Jerusalem was typical of the new; standing in the same relation to the heavenly one, as the first covenant to the second; the man Adam to the man Jesus; or the tree of life in Eden to the tree of Life—Christ, the anointed.

The high position to which the old Jerusalem attained was not attributable to her riches, beauty, glory, or to the courage of her people; but in obeying the ordinances which God had commanded them to observe. Here laid their great strength. This properly constituted their kingdom; and hence, when failing to comply with the requirements of the Almighty, in after years, these ordinances were taken away from the house of Jacob, and given, under another form, to a people that would bring forth the fruits thereof. Without these forms and ceremonies, which was then the only true worship, Israel and Judah would have been inferior to other nations by which they were surrounded, and probably swallowed up by them. The civil and military power of the Jewish economy, was not given to another people that they might bring forth the fruit thereof (just the reverse), but it was the ecclesiastical; and when transferred under another form to others, those which received became a new creation, or a spiritual house of Jacob; grafted into the richness of the olive tree in place of the branches, or members, that were broken off. Hence the apostle says, Rom. xi. 23, "If they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in: for God is able to graft them in again." Then what will their conversion be but life from the dead? (This, with other passages of like import, will help give a solution of John v. 28.) Heb. vii., Paul gives us to understand that the Levitical priesthood could not bring perfection; consequently there must be a change not only in the priesthood, but in the law. When does this change take place? Surely we cannot say in the resurrection age: but when our great LIFE-GIVER expired on the cross. Then he became our High Priest, not after the Aaronic order of the old Jerusalem, but after the order of Melchizedec, King of Peace (Salem). Heb. vii. This Melchizedec was not only priest to the most High God, but king of Salem, at the same time; king and priest, or priest king, as was Melchizedec, was not found in the Jewish genealogies; therefore he is said to be "without father or mother, without descent," &c; showing to us, very visibly, another order of priesthood, of which we have had no revelation. Like unto this man was our great High Priest, or Priest King, not put down in the Jewish records, for they had no priesthood save after the order of Aaron, but our Lord came out from Judah, and became a priest (king) forever, after the order of Melchizedec. Ex. xix. 6. "The Lord spake unto Moses and said, Tell the children of Israel, If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people. . . . And ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." We cannot apply this text to the kingdom of ancient Jerusalem; for none could officiate in that capacity except the sons of Levi. But Christ, becoming our High Priest, or king (by one sacrifice of himself), after the order of Melchizedec; and if we lay hold of that sacrifice by offering up our bodies, we shall become kings and priests after the same order of Melchizedec. Then shall we be unto our God a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. Peter testifies to this. Pet. ii. 9. "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal (kingly) priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light. Which in times past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but have now obtained mercy." This, then, is one of the inharmonies attending a coming future kingdom.

Again, another objection arises to my mind, as regards the laws of primogeniture. The covenant of circumcision which God made with Abraham, also the covenant made with the children of Israel when God led them forth from Egypt, brought together a distinct and peculiar people; they continued to increase until they made a formidable appearance in the eyes of their enemies. The Lord led them step by step under his own inspection, until they reached Mount Sinai, where he gave them this law: afterward desiring a king, God gave to them Saul; he through disobedience lost his kingdom, which was transferred to David, he being a man to carry out, or accomplish, the purpose of God. David, while king of Jerusalem, received from the Lord, through Nathan the prophet, That his house and his kingdom should be established forever: also, There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel. The query now arises to my mind, Why this promise? The throne and kingdom was made secure to David; he never lost it; "And he died in a good old age, full of days, riches and honor, and Solomon his son reigned in his stead." 1 Chron. xxix. 28. Why have a successor? For the simple reason that David was mortal and died; hence the need of some person that was not mortal, and would not die. But as he did not lose his throne, nor was his kingdom at Jerusalem taken from him, and if that throne, which now lies prostrate in the dust, with its possessor, is raised up again or restored in the resurrection age, we ask (according to the rules of primogeniture among the Hebrews, which secure to the eldest the inheritance), whose is now the kingdom? Jesus Christ, the youngest? or Rehoboam, or Solomon, or David, which is the eldest? for it (the kingdom) was never taken away from him. If we make the correct application, we see why David needed a successor; one to hold in trust, or safe keeping, the kingdom until David should come to life again: that is, if the same kingdom and throne are to be restored. The covenant made with Abraham, and the law given on Mount Sinai, appended to that covenant, was the real secret of their success as a nation when established at Jerusalem; which, if they had continued to keep, would never have been broken up as a people, but would all have been ready to have entered into an agreement with the New Covenant, instead of the few, like Simeon, Anna, the apostles, and some others. There must be a change of covenant, law, priesthood, king and kingdom, with the sacrifices and ordinances, pertaining to the old, but the Jew did not see fit to embrace them, as they were not ushered in according his liking. We shall consider in our next some objections in the New Testament against a future coming kingdom.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

BY WALTER PATTERSON.

DELHI, N. Y., 1866.

BR. STORRS:—The occasion of the following communication was a discussion in a Bible Class in a christian church on the Lord's Supper; especially our Lord's saying "I will not henceforth drink of the fruit of the vine, till . . . . I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." The question was asked, "Will there be vines and wine in the kingdom of God?" I said, Yes. The inquirer smiled incredulously. I resolved to write him a letter, and the following is the result:

DEAR BROTHER:—Your inquiry respecting the meaning of the expression that fell from our Saviour's lips, when he said, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom," suggested the idea to me of writing out a few of my thoughts on "the kingdom of God" for your perusal. What subject is there of such thrilling interest to the christian as the idea of being a participant of the glories of the kingdom of God? In their exultant feelings, they will shout, "I am bound for the kingdom." The scriptures are very full and very explicit about the kingdom, with the design of confirming our faith, cheering our hopes, and sustaining us in the midst of the trials, afflictions, and tribulations that await us in our passage thither.

But notwithstanding our boasted enlightenment of the glorious truths of the gospel, what subject is there around which there is so much darkness, doubt, and uncertainty, as about "the kingdom of God" in the minds of professing christians? Indeed, it seems to me, we do not understand what the gospel is, unless we have some definite ideas what the kingdom is. The gospel is the good news of the kingdom. Could I tell what the good news of the "civil rights bill" were, if I did not know something definite about that bill. John the Baptist preached "the kingdom of heaven." Jesus preached "the gospel of the kingdom of God." The apostles the same message. And now, what is the kingdom of God?

Some may tell us that, "God's kingdom ruleth over all." Very true, it is God's right to rule over all, and the time will come when it will be said in truth, or fact, that God's kingdom ruleth over all. A little while ago the United States' government claimed the right to rule over the rebel States; but how was it during the four years of rebellion? Our world is in a revolted condition; but the time will come when God will take unto himself his great power and reign. Rev. xi. 17. Jesus says in Luke xxii. 18, "I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come." That speaks as if the kingdom of God was in the future.

Before I show what I think the kingdom of God is, I will first show what I think it is not. Some will say the kingdom of God is in the hearts of his people. Now, I admit we are commanded to "sanctify the Lord God in our hearts;" and if we are true christians we will give our hearts to him, and yield a willing and cheerful obedience to his laws. But how would it read, "there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the hearts of God's people, and you, yourselves thrust out. And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the hearts of God's people;" or, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread, in the hearts of God's people"

We see such a position involves an absurdity; hence cannot be the true idea; it will not do to shove off the responsibility of such a position by saying, God has a kingdom in the hearts of his people, and a kingdom here, and a kingdom there; because the Bible is very particular in its expression when speaking of the kingdom; it uses the definite article, the kingdom; not a kingdom, a kingdom of grace, and a kingdom of glory; although it is both a gracious and a glorious kingdom; but "the kingdom of God," or, "the kingdom of heaven" But it may be asked, What will I do with the passage, "Behold the kingdom of God is within you?" We can not suppose that Jesus meant the kingdom of God was within the Pharisees; but he was speaking to them. The margin of the Bible says, "or, among you." The Diaglot renders this verse in this manner, "Nor shall they say, Behold here! or there! for, behold, God's royal majesty is among you." In a note accompanying this translation it is said, "Prof. Whiting, an able Hebrew and Greek scholar, says, this clause in the 21st verse ought to be rendered, 'the king is among you.'"

Again, it is said, "The church is the kingdom." But this idea is out of harmony with the teachings of the Bible, which says, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God.' Again, James says, "Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom, which he hath promised to them that love him." Now, these "beloved brethren" were surely church members; but James does not recognize them as being in the kingdom, but only as HEIRS; and the kingdom is only a matter of promise to them; hence the church cannot be the kingdom.

But again, some tell us "The kingdom is in heaven." Some say, "above the skies." Others say, "beyond the bounds of time and space." Before I can have any faith in such a kingdom, I must have a "thus saith the LORD;" or, at least, one passage of scripture to rest my faith on. Is there any thing unreasonable in that? Must I believe it because my pious brother tells me it is so? Who told my brother?

Now I am come to where I must show what I believe the Bible tells about the kingdom of God. In the Lord's prayer, we are taught to pray, "Thy kingdom come." And it will come. The kingdom of God, as well as other kingdoms, is composed of essential elements: a king, a cabinet, a territory, a metropolis, subjects, and laws. 1. Jesus will be king. 2. His faithful, approved, people will form his cabinet, and be associate rulers. 3. Palestine, or that land deeded to Abraham and his seed, will be the kingdom proper. Abraham was to be heir of the world. So Jesus' dominion will extend over all nations. 4. Jerusalem will be the Metropolis. 5. The natural seed of Abraham will be the subjects of the kingdom; "the left of the nations" will inhabit the other portions of the earth, over which the dominion of Christ will extend. 6. God's will will be the laws.

I hope to sustain these statements by the unerring word. On the first of these statements, that Jesus Christ will be king, I need not dwell, because it will not be disputed. He is God's anointed king, the rightful heir to the throne of his father David. "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion." Psa. ii. 6.

I present a few passages to prove the 2d statement, that the true christian's high and holy calling is that he may be an associate ruler with Christ in his kingdom. "Fear not, little flock, it is my Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke xii. 32. "Jesus said unto them, Verily, I say to you, that ye who have followed me, at the renovation, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." (Bernard's translation). Math. xix. 28. "To him that overcometh I will grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and have sat down with my Father in his throne." Rev. iii. 21. Isaiah, prophesying of the blessings of Christ's kingdom, says, "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." Isa. xxxii. 1. I understand Jesus to be that king, and his saints the princes. John in vision beheld the redeemed in glory singing in this manner, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open its seals; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God, by thy blood from every tribe, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us kings and priests to our God; and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. v. 9, 10.

Now, dear brother, these promises mean something or nothing. Do they mean what they say? if not, who possibly can tell what they do mean? There is a plainness, a definiteness, a literality in the word and promises of God, that is ignored by the fanciful, vain, imaginations of men, who will substitute anything and everything rather than joyfully accept of God's word and believe it. In these few promises, I have quoted, think on the expressions used, "give you the kingdom"—"sit upon thrones judging"—"sit in my throne"—"ruling in judgment"—"made kings and priests"—"shall reign;" these expressions mean more than merely "salvation"—"made happy," or to be subjects in a kingdom. We might go into the kingdom of Great Britian, enjoy life, and be very happy; but would that be equivalent to receiving the kingdom, to sit on the throne; to reign; to judge? Certainly not; but this will appear plainer as we proceed.

3. The kingdom of God will have a territory. Every kingdom has a territory. England, for example, claims the territory of Great Britain and Ireland; yet still her dominion extendeth wide beyond her territory; she claims dominion over Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, over India, and many other places; yet she does not claim these provinces as the territory of her kingdom. Even so with the kingdom of God that is to be given to Christ and his saints; this kingdom will have a territory, or kingdom proper; although the dominion of that kingdom will extend over the whole habitable globe. I understand the territory of "the kingdom" to be the land given to Abraham and his seed in the everlasting covenant of God. That land is called "Palestine," "God's land"—"the holy land." Its boundaries are defined in Gen. xv. 18–21. This land, or rather a part of it, was temporally possessed by the children of Israel under a promise and covenant, which covenant they disregarded, and they are now dispersed and punished under their "seven times" punishment; but this does not affect the validity of God's promise to "Abraham and his seed."

Look a little at this promise to Abraham. God said to Abram, "Depart from thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, to a land I will shew thee." Gen. xii. 1. Then God would bless him, and make him a blessing. Abram comes into the land; then God appears to him and gives this promise, verse 7, "To thy seed will I give this land." But further, to shew the literalness of God's promises to men, we find that when Abram had fully obeyed the call of God, to leave his country, his father's house, and his kindred, that God then speaks to him and gives this particular promise. "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." There seems to be a literalness in that promise. It was the land on which he was; it was a land that could be seen, towards all the points of the compass; and, further, God said to him, "Arise, walk through the land in the length of it, and in the breadth of it; for I will give it to thee." Gen. xiii. 14–17. "Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath to Isaac, and confirmed the same to Jacob for an ordinance, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, saying, To thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance." Psa. cv. 9–11. Paul's exposition of this promise is, that the "seed" was Christ; and all that are in Christ Jesus are heirs according to the promise. See Gal. iii. 16–29. Is this the promise that christians are looking for, and expecting? If not, is there not a departure from the faith according to Paul's prediction? he said the time would come when the professed church would turn away from the truth unto fables. See 1 Tim.

OUR FAITH.

1. We believe that we are living in the last periods of the present dispensation.

2. That Christ will soon reappear upon earth, to avenge his elect, and fulfil his covenant to them.

3. That the expectation of a Millennium of universal righteousness and peace before the return of the Saviour, is an unchristian delusion.

4. That the church will remain under the cross until Christ comes; and that the present dispensation is only preparatory to another.

5. That the personal return of the Lord Jesus is the great hope of the church, to which, and not to the triumph of present institutions, we are to look for the fulfilment of the great promises of the world's ultimate blessedness.

6. That when Christ comes, it will not be to depopulate, annihilate, or destroy the earth, but to renovate it by judicial administrations, and to bless it with a new and heavenly rule.

7. That the saints shall rise first, and together with such of the living as shall be accounted worthy of such honor, be received up in the glorified state, to share with Christ in his subsequent dealings with our world and its inhabitants.

8. That Christ is to reign in glorious empire over all the earth, sending forth his law from Jerusalem; an earnest of the glory of which was furnished on the Mount of Transfiguration.

9. That great judgments are pending over christendom, and that all present systems in church and state shall be revolutionized by them, if not quite destroyed.

10. That in the new order of things to come, the house of Israel, or Jewish race, shall again occupy their own land, and hold the first place among the nations, under their proper King, the Son of David, forever.

11. That the earth, and the heavens enveloping it, are to be renovated by him who is to have the dominion; and that the heavens and the earth which are now, shall be made into new heavens and earth, as the natural man by regeneration is made into the new man.

12. That only those who are properly awake to these truths, and watchful, and waiting, and looking for the Lord's speedy return, and prepare accordingly, shall escape the dreadful tribulations which are to mark the last years of this dispensation, or secure the high and peculiar honors in reservation for the wise and faithful.—Prophetic Times.

ORIGINALITY OF CHRIST'S SAYINGS.

The object of the following remarks is to draw attention to a particular feature in the gospel history which even thoughtful readers might overlook, namely, the originality (if the word may be used without offence) of the character of Christ, as it is expressed in his sayings.

It appears to the writer that this character of "originality" in the sayings of Christ, affords an evidence, which, when once pointed out, the simplest reader can appreciate, of their genuineness. It has been a common and true remark, that the unaffected simplicity of the gospel narratives generally leaves upon the mind a strong impression of the reality of the scenes and incidents described in them; an observation which has great weight, although it would be unreasonable to extend it to the length of asserting that every event in that series of records carries with it internal evidence of its truthfulness.

A few instances from our Lord's discourses, as related in the gospels, will bring before the reader's mind the nature of our argument. We will first select one or two in which the words of Christ strike us, even now, with a kind of surprise, and convey an impression which we had not expected to receive of his character and feeling. Such is that remarkable saying, mentioned both by St. Matthew and St. Luke, addressed to one who seemed to be ready to follow Christ, but said, "Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father;" "Let the dead bury their dead." We may soften the startling impression of the words by supposing that Christ saw that the man to whom he spoke was only making a false excuse; or we may explain him to have meant (as he doubtless did mean) that earthly interests must sometimes give way altogether before higher duties, while they are the natural sphere of the earthly minded. But, however explained, the words are unexpectedly severe and stern. That they came from the lips of Jesus it is impossible to doubt, for they certainly never would have been ascribed to him otherwise. Of the same class are those stern denunciations against the Scribes and Pharisees, pronounced a few days before the Lord's death, and related in the twenty-third chapter of St. Matthew. Every sentence is weighty with indignation, which seems to gather strength in the speaker's mind, as he turns from the people and his disciples, whom he had been addressing, and attacks directly the Pharisees themselves. There is indeed a tone of bitterness and irony in some of the denunciations, which we might have thought alien from the character of Christ, but which, for that very reason, bear the stamp of genuineness. The circumstances under which this remarkable invective was uttered must not be forgotten. The three years' persecution with which the Pharisees had met Christ was now about to end successfully, and he speaks in prospect of their triumph. "Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers." There is more of indignation than of sorrow in his tone; nor is it derogatory to his divine nature to say that a personal feeling of anger at his own unworthy treatment mingles with that which he expresses on account of their wickedness, which was to issue in such calamity to their nation generally. Then, when he turns to the latter and thinks of the woe soon to fall upon Jerusalem, the full tide of his tenderness flows back upon him, and finds vent in those words of sorrowing love which remind us of the yearning lamentations uttered by the prophets of the Old Testament, as the voice of God mourning for his people, "O Jerusalem! Jerusalem! thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not."

Among sayings of unexpected severity which are ascribed to Christ, another instance is his rebuke of St. Peter, when the latter suggested that his mission could not really end in suffering and death. "Get thee behind me, Satan; thou art an offence unto me; for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." No doubt St. Peter was here but a mouthpiece of the tempter, and afterwards, though not perhaps until his great fall, attained to a truer conception of his master's design. But his words, "Be it far from thee, Lord; this shall not be unto thee," were dictated by personal love to Christ; and this makes the stern reproof that he received the more remarkable. Christ would not acknowledge that personal affection, which, out of human tenderness, could interfere with his plan of self-sacrifice, and would spare him the suffering which lay before him in his work. Sudden and startling as the rebuke must have been to Peter, it is hardly less startling in its vivid reality to us who read it. We seem to behold the expression of indignation and abhorrence at the suggestion which passed across the features of our Saviour as he "turned" and spoke. Nor are the words less observable, as they give us an insight into the temptation by which Jesus was beset, perhaps frequently, during his ministry. It was the temptation by which Satan had at first tried to draw him away after his baptism, the temptation to shrink from the path of suffering and death which he yet knew to be the appointment of his Father. We do not speak here of the import of that suffering and death, or the reasons why it was appointed. Suffice it that Christ foresaw it, and calmly resolved to face it. He could, no doubt, have made his teaching more palatable to the authorities, and deferred or escaped his own death. Without any irreverent speculation we may say that the temptation to do this may have been frequently suggested to him. Indeed, at any time, perhaps at the very last, if he would but have fallen in with the wishes of the people, and allowed them to call him their Messiah (in their sense of the word) he would have had a crowd of enthusiastic adherents. And if he would but have exerted his miraculous powers to establish a visible kingdom, like that of David, the great majority of the nation would no doubt have followed him. The temptation by which Satan assaulted him at the beginning of his ministry, and which probably recurred from time to time, may have been the subtle suggestion, not indeed to give up his scheme of establishing the kingdom of God upon earth (certainly Peter could not have proposed this), but of doing this by virtue of his miraculous power and the use of force. It is obvious to us now that this would have been no spiritual kingdom, but none the less it may have been a temptation to Christ, to aim at his end by a less painful path than that which his Father had appointed him. Rejecting this temptation with abhorrence, he turned upon Peter with those strong words upon which we have been remarking.

It would be easy to multiply instances of this class of sayings in which the severe side of our Saviour's character (if the expression may be used) is exhibited. Such are those in which he enjoins the plucking out of the eye, or cutting off of the hand or foot, if they cause "offence;" or declares that for every idle word account must be given on the day of judgment; or teaches that everlasting punishment shall be the lot of the uncharitable. Men endeavor to explain away the meaning of these sayings, or to soften them; but no one can doubt that they bear the stamp of genuineness. And this remark may be extended to the whole of that feature in the character of Christ which they express, namely, his awful severity and unsparing condemnation of sin. It would have fallen in with many of our instinctive feelings to have represented the Saviour as simply benevolent. Indeed, gentleness and mercy are such prominent features in the idea which the gospels give of him that they are sometimes taken to be the whole of his nature. On the other hand, a natural conception for the Messiah, as a restorer of righteousness and vindicator of God's law, might have been one which should fix our attention only upon these attributes, and represent him as a being of awful and severe holiness. But the union of these two opposite features in one portrait, and this so that there is no discord, but all is (so to speak) real and natural, is a remarkable fact, and one of which no good account can be given, but that the portrait was drawn from life. The conception of this twofold character in Christ is too high an idea to be ascribed to the invention of the writers of the New Testament. Like the words of Jesus, it has an "originality" which is the mark of truth.

DAMASCUS.

The French have established a diligence that starts from the sea-coast at Beyrout, and now climbing the steeps and winding through the picturesque valleys of Lebanon, descends after a long day's journey on the city of Damascus. This city is a point of interest to every traveller who visits the Holy Land; nor any wonder, since there are points, not a few, in which it claims pre-eminence over any other place in the world.

Akin to the veneration with which the men of his day regarded Methuselah, hoar with the snows of nine hundred, sixty, and nine years; with which we ourselves should gaze on the oldest living man, with which I felt on looking even on the ruins of a decayed but living yew, that, a sapling at the date of David's battle with Goliath, was a great tree, mantled in the mists or white with the snows of our hills, that winter night the Saviour was born—akin to this is the feeling with which an intelligent and thoughtful traveller must tread the streets of Damascus. Said by Josephus to have been founded by a great grandson of Noah, and certainly spreading along the banks of Abana at the time Abraham entered the land of Canaan, Damascus is the oldest existing inhabited city of the world. Of all those that were coeval with it, it only stands. The hand of Time, committing its ravages less suddenly but no less surely than the flood that swept away Enoch, the first city, as it did Eden, the first garden in the world, has left no other memorial of these than their names in the page of history, or some desolate and lonely ruin. It is not so with Damascus. Long anterior to the building either of Athens or of Rome it was a busy city; and, sole survivor of a remote antiquity, it is a busy city still. How great its age! It boasts of streets along which the tide of human life has ebbed and flowed for nearly four thousand years. Were the title one which could be properly applied to any place but heaven, not Rome, but Damascus, should be called the "Eternal City."

Singularly interesting to antiquarians on account of its extreme antiquity, the city presents also features of peculiar interest to men engaged in the pursuits of trade; whether they be the arts of peace or war they cultivate. Famous during long ages for its silk manufacturers, it gives its own name to a fabric which is esteemed of superior richness and value—damask being called so from the circumstance that it was invented in Damascus, and first woven in its looms. Its weapons of steel were even more famous than its webs of silk. Happy the man in battle who carried a Damascus blade; no other place forging swords of such exquisite temper. I know not, but probably the Bible alludes to the superior excellence of these where it says, "Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?" I once happened to see this steel put to the test. It was in France, and in the chemistry class of the Sorbonne. In the course of a lecture on iron, Thenard, the professor, produced a Damascus blade, stating that he believed that these swords owed their remarkable temper to the iron of which they were made being smelted by the charcoal of a thorn bush that grew in the desert. To put it to the trial, he placed the sword in the hand of a very powerful man, his assistant; desiring him to strike it with all his might against a bar of iron. With the arm of a giant the assistant sent the blade flashing around his head, and then down on the iron block, into which, when I expected to see it shivered like glass, it embedded itself, quivering, but uninjured; giving, besides a remarkable proof of the trustworthiness of the sword, new force to the proverb, True as steel.

But Damascus, which her poets dignify with the title of "Pearl of the East," presents attractive charms to travellers that have no stake in trade, and feel no interest in antiquarian studies; for, besides being the oldest, it is in some of its aspects the most beautiful of cities. With its white towers and minarets shooting up through groves of green palms into the transparent air, it lies within sight of the snow-crowned Hermon; reposing at the feet of a grand mountain range, and encircled by a zone of gardens and of orchards of variously tinted foliage and the finest fruits. Its plain is watered by Abana and Pharpar. These rivers, reckoned by the Syrian leper better than all the waters of Israel, rush forth from their mountain gorges to be parted into a thousand streams that, foaming onward in their course, dance and sparkle in the bright sunshine, and cover the soil on their banks with a carpet of flowery verdure. No city in the world is more, perhaps none is so worthy of the encomium which the pride and patriotism of the Jews pronounced on their Jersualem, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth." Travellers have used the most glowing terms and exhausted the powers of language in their attempts to describe its charms; but no expressions can give us so vivid an idea of them as the part Mahomed acted, when, a camel driver traversing the neighboring mountains, he stood in a gorge where the city first burst on his view. Rapt for a while in astonishment, he gazed on the wondrous scene, but by-and-by recovered himself; and fearing, should he venture down into the city, that its charms would seduce him into forgetting the vast schemes of his life, he turned aside, and passed on, saying, with a self-denial and determination of purpose christians would do well to imitate, "Man can have but one paradise, and mine is fixed above."

Legends also cling to Damascus and the places around, which invest them with no ordinary interest. The origin and foundation of the city are lost in the mists of ages, but there is a common belief that he who looks on its lovely plain sees the cradle of the human race; and that it was from its red clay soil that God formed the first man and also gave him his name of Adam—which is, being interpreted, "red clay." If this is true, it imparts an air of probability to another of their legends, this, namely, that it was near Damascus that Abel fell a victim to his brother's envy, and his blood went up to heaven for vengeance on earth's first, if not worst, murderer. Here, on one of the mountain heights to the west of the city, is the place, it is said, where Abraham stood on that eventful day, when, following with anxious eye the setting course of star, and moon, and sun, he abandoned their worship for that of the true God; and there, down on the plain in yonder vast mound, is the sepulchre of Nimrod—that mighty hunter before the Lord, who, as the founder of Babel, looms so large through the mists of four thousand years, the first of earth's old great monarchs.

These traditions, however interesting, may possibly be mere fancies; although in such legends there are almost always some grains of truth. But though these were ranked with the "Arabian Nights' Entertainments," there are facts associated with Damascus which, after Bethlehem and Jerusalem, invest it with greater sacredness than any other spot on earth. It is interesting as the home of Namaan the Syrian; him who, advised by a captive girl that had campassion on her master, repaired to Israel, and lost both his pride and leprosy in the waters of the Jordan. It is interesting as the city from whose gates the proud armies marched forth, over which God wrought some of his greatest triumphs on behalf of his ancient people; striking that host of a sudden with blindness, and this with such a panic, that with Benhadad at their head, and two-and-thirty allied princes swelling the rout, they fled like sheep before a handful of the warriors of Israel. It is interesting to the students of scripture through its association with the two greatest of the prophets. Probably Elijah, but certainly Elisha, walked its streets. God had sent him there: and there he unveiled such a future of crime and cruelty before Hazael, that, hardened sinner as the soldier was, he started in horror from his own image, exclaiming, "Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing?"

But what especially makes Damascus interesting and "holy ground" is that it formed the scene of an event which, in its influence on the world, takes rank next to the birth and death of the Son of God. It was nigh to this city the great apostle of the Gentiles was converted. And what man occupies such a place in sacred history as he; did so much in his lifetime, or has done so much by his writings, to proclaim and propagate the Gospel? This "chief of sinners," as he humbly, penitently called himself, was unquestionably the chief of Apostles; in writings, as in labors and trials, more abundant than them all. Next to Jesus Christ, whose "name is as ointment poured forth," and than whose there is no other name given under heaven whereby we can be saved, no name on earth, in the homes of the godly, is such a "household word" as Paul's. How many have his pleadings moved; how many hearts have the arrows from his quiver pierced; to how many have his words brought life and comfort. There, the light shone that paled a noonday sun, and the darkness fell that issued in quenchless light, and Jesus last visited our world to convert his greatest persecutor into his greatest preacher. For this reason Damascus will ever be among the sacred places which a christian would like to visit.

The reputed birthplace of Adam, and certainly the spiritual birthplace of Paul, perhaps the greatest of his sons, this city gave birth to another man, of whom, and of whose remarkable virtues, it has no reason to be ashamed. Domestic servants form a very large, a very useful, and a very important class in society; and it can boast of having given birth to one who occupies a place of as great pre-eminence among them as Paul perhaps did in the apostleship of the church. And so, appreciating the higher virtues, however humble the sphere be which they adorn, more than for its beauty of situation, more than for its famous fabrics, more than for its hoar antiquity, I regard Damascus with interest as the birthplace of him—the steward of Abraham's house, as his own master calls him, "this Eliezer of Damascus."—Selected.

THE LAW AND COVENANT.

BY JACOB GRIM.

"One jot or tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled."

In our last we directed our remarks to the law under which Adam was placed. We find the word law occurs over 200 times in the Old and New Testaments, and in no instance in the Old Testament can we make it refer to the law under which Adam was placed. There appears to be a perfect blank, so far as the world was concerned, as regards any known law. In 1 Chron. xvi. 16, David speaks of an everlasting covenant made with Abraham and Isaac, and confirmed the same to Jacob, saying, "To thee will I give the land of Canaan." This covenant made with Abraham included only a particular class. We read in Gal. iv. 4, "But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the LAW; to redeem them that were under the law."

This brings us to our subject, what law was Christ made under; and what law was he tried by; and what law did he refer to, when he said, one jot or tittle shall not fail until all be fulfilled? In Rom. xv. 8, Paul says, "Jesus Christ was made a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers, and that the Gentiles might glorify God for his mercy."

Again we read in Heb. ii. 16, "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethern; that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God." If Jesus Christ was tried by the same law that Adam was tried, he should have been placed in the same condition that Adam was. But such was not the case. Again, if Jesus was to be tried by a spiritual law, he should have had a spiritual nature; but such was not the fact, "For he took not upon himself the nature of angels, but he did take upon him the seed of Abraham." In Eph. ii. 11, Paul in speaking of the Gentiles says, "At that time they were strangers to the covenants of promise, having no hope (in the promises) and without God in the world." Certainly Jesus could not be tried by any law that the Gentiles were under; as from the language of the apostle, they were under no law. Now, in order to have a proper understanding of the scriptures, we should first inquire into the circumstances connected with the subject under consideration. Here we find a covenant of promise made to Abraham and his sons, which David says was an everlasting covenant. And we are told by Stephen that, God never gave Abraham one foot of the land; yet he promised he would give it to him. And when Moses came into the land, God told him, "I am the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob." And Jesus said unto the Sadducees, this proved the fact that the dead would rise; because God had promised to give them the land, and they died without receiving the land, moreover they were to have it for an everlasting possession; which they could only enjoy in an immortal state. Paul says in 1 Cor. xv. "If Christ be not risen your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins, and they also who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished." Here, then, unless Christ is risen from the dead, Abraham's hope is gone. But Jesus was made a minister of the circumcision, to confirm the promise made unto the fathers.

Now, in order to get the true light on this subject, we will inquire what was this law of circumcision, of which Jesus became a Minister? "The law entered that sin might abound." Rom. v. We say, the law of Moses, or the covenant God made with Israel after he brought them out of the land of Egypt, contained in Deut. v. and summed up in a few words in Chap. vi. 5. "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Now, Paul supposed he was a good Pharisee, and was serving God; for he informs us he had a zeal for God. But when he squared his actions according to the import of the law of loving God with all his heart, soul, and mind, he cries out, "The law is good; the law is spiritual, and I am carnal, sin revived and I died." When the Lord was about placing Israel in the promised land, God informed them, they were not to say for their righteousness they were brought into the land; but for the wickedness of the nations before them. And that he might perform the word which the Lord sware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Deut. ix. 5

God was not confined to any particular family or tribe to fulfill his promise to Abraham. We find in Deut. ix. 13, 14, "Let me alone, that I may destroy them and blot out their name from under heaven." Is God forgetful of his promise to the fathers, that he would blot out their name from under heaven? No. He reserves a seed. "I will make of thee a nation, mightier and greater than they." What is the result? Moses was the mediator of this covenant, and he interceded in their behalf, and the Lord spared the nation. We learn from this fact, that God was not so much interested in the children of Israel at this point of time, but that, had it not been for the intercession of Moses, he would have made a complete end of them, and chosen Moses, through whom the promises should have come; and had the event have happened, the promises would have been transferred to, and through, Moses as the heir apparent to the inheritance.

Here then we find two covenants, running along parallel with each other; the one, God made with individuals, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; which covenant was an everlasting covenant: and the other he made with the nation when he brought them out of Egypt. This last covenant was the Ten Commandments, and the ceremonial law, which the Lord built up around them to keep them from mingling with the nations around them. And when we read of the law, in the New Testament, it is that which the apostle calls the first covenant, Heb. ix. 1, which, says the apostle, had ceremonies of divine service, &c.

Now I apprehend that when the apostle says, Jesus was made under the law, he means the Mosaic law. And when he says, Gal. iii. 2, "This only would I know of you, received ye the Spirit by the works of the law?" And all through this epistle he refers to the law of Moses.

In our next we will inquire why Jesus Christ was made under the law, and what the purpose of God was concerning his Son; for we may know the purposes of God only as he has made them known to us through his word.

REMEMBER CHRIST'S COMING.

The church, in the primitive times, did remember the coming of her Lord to judge the nations, especially pagan Rome, which had slain her children; and accordingly, under the fifth seal, the souls of them that had been slain for the word of God and for the testimony which they held, cried with a loud voice, and said, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?" But that same church which had glorified God in the fires of persecution, through the strength of her hope in a coming Lord, who had reserved judgment unto himself—that same church could not bear the prosperity of being established over the Roman Empire. She then forgot that she was a widow; she forgot that her Husband was in the heavens, and was about to appear again for her justification; she made love to the kings of the earth, and gave herself to them, even unto that beast who had slain her children, and which was possessed by Satan, that old serpent, the devil. But still God raised up witnesses to witness against this fornication; and he drew out this nation with a high hand, to protest against it, and to pray for judgment upon the mother of harlots, which rideth upon the beast. And this destruction our fathers expected at the coming of Christ. I say the reformers and fathers of the British church did not more certainly expect and believe in a personal advent of Christ than they expected that to destroy the antichristian papacy He was to come; so that, until these days, these high and palmy days as they dream, there ever was lifted up by the Widow a prayer unto the great Judge to be righted and redressed of all her wrongs upon that Papal destroyer, in whom is found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth. But now behold England and Scotland—church Presbyterian and church Episcopalian, churchman and dissenter—have altogether ceased from putting up this prayer for justice upon the adversary. Indeed, they have ceased to regard her as an adversary at all. They have forgotten her deeds of darkness and her words of blasphemy, and they desire to bring to her succor and help. I say again, except it be from those who have faith in the coming of the Son of man to judge the quick, there be hardly any members of any church in christendom who are heartily lifting up the prayer for judgment upon the adversary. There is no faith of such a judgment. They look for a conversion, and not for judgment. They have stricken a league with her upon the ground of political rights, as they are pleased to term them. Meanwhile, the rights of God's church have been forgotten; the rights of the Son of man to the only allegiance and affection of his church have been forgotten. Would that the parable of the poor widow, which our Lord constructed with such wisdom and applied with such earnestness, had been remembered; then would there neither have been an apostasy nor now would there have been proposals of a league with that apostasy. For is she not judged in terms of this very parable? as it is written (Rev. xviii. 7,) "For she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning and famine, and she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her."

They talk most idly who speak of a spiritual coming of the kingdom as yet future, for we have now his spiritual kingdom hidden within us: that is to say, he reigneth in the hearts of his believing people. The souls of believers are the only existences upon earth where Christ reigns. Through the soul, indeed, reclaimed by the Holy Ghost, Christ doth enforce the body unto obedience; and the worldly tools likewise; but Satan is natural master, both of the flesh and of the world, succumbing truly to the soul Christ possessed, but unwillingly, with diabolical reluctancy. Here we have no question with those Spiritualists, but hold much higher and distincter doctrine than they do. But when they, in their ignorance and blindness, will go about to say that this is all which God's word hath promised and Christ hath purchased, we totally abjure and abhor their narrow-mindedness and indifference to God's verity and to Christ's glory. And we hold that the Son of man is to come, like the lightning, and that he is to judge the quick, as the furnace judgeth between the gold and the dross, and is to separate bosom friends and closest united companions; the one unto destruction, like the deluge, or like Sodom; the other unto honor and to glory, according to no other principle of judgment than this: whether they are expecting him and ready to receive him or not. We say he is to come to destroy the careless church, all indifferent to his coming; to slay the great enemy of the Chosen One, which is antichrist in all his forms, and to deliver His elect ones, who have cried day and night for vengeance upon the adversary, from his oppression, whether that oppression be the oppression of the church upon the living or the oppression of the grave upon the dead. And I say, moreover, that it is His elect who cry to him day and night for vengeance, and they only who have the promise of this deliverance, and those only who are on tiptoe readiness to obey the summons, who receive the escape from the fiery deluge. What say you, are not these things in the warning of our Lord? Is not this, and this only, the substance of his warning? Shall I be ashamed to echo the words which my Lord hath spoken? Shall you be unwilling to hear the words which he hath commanded us to speak? God forbid. Let the gainsayer gainsay, and let the deniers to the uttermost deny that the Lord is coming in person to judge the antichristian church; it is the voice of God's word, and it cannot be broken. And if they would quench in death every living voice which declared it, then the thunders from the heaven above, and the lightnings flashing from pole to pole, and the earthquake's shock from beneath, will make men hear it; ay, and believe it too; but, like the devils, to believe and tremble. Therefore, O men, give heed how ye hear!

I observe, finally, that it is the duty, the safety, and the glory of every believer, to pray for the coming of the Lord in judgment upon the adversary of his church, to pray always, and not to faint; and those who have so little discernment as not to dare pray for the down fall of the oppressor, the casting out of Satan the destruction of Babylon, have neither lot nor part in this matter. Those who will not pray for Christ to come, who feel shocked at the thought of the rending bolt which bears him, and the arrowy shower of lightning which goes before him; those who have not their peace made with him, and are hanging in doubt whether he be their Saviour or not; those who love father, mother, brother, sister, life, more than him; those who love traffic, wealth, goods, estate, more than him; those who are not ready to take wing and flee from the storm, like doves unto their windows; those who are not, like old Simeon, waiting for his salvation; those who have a divided heart, like Lot's wife; what shall I say of such? That they shall not enter into his kingdom. Do these words strike to the quick? do they prick your heart? I mean it so: in love I mean it so, that ye may instantly shake loose the fetters, as Samson did, in the might of the Holy Ghost given unto you, and join yourselves to the Saviour whom I preach unto every sinner, for instant peace, for instant blessedness; so that I can say to every one who heareth these words and believeth them, If Christ were this night to appear, this night shalt thou be with him in paradise.—Irving.

During the long public career of Alexander Campbell, he was a violent opp ser of all schools and seminaries designed to teach men theology, and train them for the sacred office. He taught his people to look on all such institutions as an abomination, and while he lived he was obeyed. But the turf over his remains was hardly green by the advance of one spring, before the denomination abandoned his theories on this matter, and hastened to become like other nations or denominations. This is the universal law where men believe God has designed to build up church organizations. They thrive on the spiritual and mental strength of some leader, and then settle down to live on his reputation and labors on some one leading doctrine only.

The Christian Intelligencer says that while the fool says in his heart that there is no God, his conscience says there is a God. Theoretical Atheism it pronounces impossible; but it mourns the extent of practical, daily Atheism; and excessive worldliness is equivalent to this. We would suppose it natural enough for men to go wrong, when an orthodox journal splits hairs on the words heart and conscience, being distinct seats of independent consciousness. The word "fool" in the Bible, according to McCulloh, means irreligious or profligate, and not foolish, as usually understood.

A young Italian lady, daughter of a farmer near Monteforte, in the province of Avellino, recently stabbed to death the notorious bandit Muisa, who had broken in her father's house, and who was treated there to some refreshments, as a matter of protection against his murderous intention. While the young girl approached him under the pretext of taking from him an empty plate, she stabbed him with her stiletto so effectually that death ensued immediately. The reward of five thousand francs offered by the authorities for his capture has been paid to the plucky girl.

During the recent sickness of Count Baciochi, the Empress Eugenie sent, with a desire that it might be hung at the head of his bed as long as he was ill, a reliquary described as "the most precious jewel in the crown of France;" a rich casket containing a piece of the linen of Jesus Christ—a piece of a vail belonging to the Virgin Mary—a remnant of John the Baptist's graveclothes—the talisman of Charlemagne, containing two pieces of the true cross, and a fragment of Charlemagne's right arm! The French papers say: "The value of these relics is enormously enhanced by the fact that they were all in the bedroom of the Empress when the Prince Imperial was born!" But still the Count died.

The Presbyterian service held in a hired house at Rome has been suppressed at the personal instance of the Pope. The minister, the Rev. James Lewis, is under sentence of banishment. It is also stated that there is an intention to suppress the American service now conducted in a hired room separate from the Legation. Cardinal Antonelli has expressed his personal regret that this policy should be pursued.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 6, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The venerable Editor of the HERALD, Br. Storrs, has been called to go through deep waters of affliction since the last issue of the paper. His only son, Geo. F. Storrs, died on Saturday, Feb. 2. This blow fell with peculiar severity on our aged and beloved friend, who had lived in the closest intimacy with his son through his childhood, youth and manhood, and had become bound to him by the warmest affections of a doting father; and his dear son was eminently entitled to this tender love and the devotion of all the members of his family.

His last words expressed his fervent faith, in Jesus as the giver of eternal life, and were full of tender love to his stricken and sorrowing relatives.

We need not ask for our beloved brother Storrs the sympathy of friends in this his trying hour of sorrow, we know he will be remembered at our Father's throne that he may be sustained by the only solace that can assuage such grief as his. Although he may be thought by some to have been made rugged by the energy with which he has waged battle for the truth, and though strong in faith, our brother's heart is as tender as a child's in response to the sympathy of friends. Remember him, dear friends.

Br. Storrs, in his note elsewhere, referring to his bereavement, gives notice that no paper will be issued next week. This will not affect the general arrangement, as there is one number to be passed over each quarter to complete the 48 numbers for the year. He needs rest of body and mind, at this time, as his watching at the bedside of his son in his long and painful sickness has nearly worn him out; and it is a wonder how he has borne up so well under his severe exactions.

The present number of the paper has been prepared by other hands than his, and therefore he must not be held accountable for any matter in the editorial columns; and we trust our indulgent readers will make allowance and overlook whatever deficiencies may be observed. W. M.

"Sorrowful, yet Rejoicing."

Our son, GEO. F. STORRS, fell asleep in Jesus, at half-past three o'clock last Saturday morning. We have no time for words this week. He was a great sufferer, but he rests in hope of that inheritance where the inhabitants shall never say, "I am sick." There will be no issue of the HERALD OF LIFE next week: it is impossible for us to give any time to it, till some things are attended to which our son's decease has imposed upon us. For the same reason, you may find your communications and business matters not attended to as early as you desire.

While we sorrow, we rejoice; for, we have fresh proof of God's great mercy, and of Jesus' boundless love. God gave his only begotten and dearly beloved Son to suffering and death for us, and shall we murmur or complain that He takes from us our only son, for little season, that we may "receive him" again "forever?" We cannot, we will not, His grace being continued to us, to help our infirmity. "Pray for us."

The Cause.

We have little reason to look for any great progress in our just warfare against the deep-seated prejudices of this age. If we can hope to carry on the cause as successfully in the future as has been done in the past few years, we shall have ample reason to thank God and take courage. Without unity of action, little acquainted with each other just prior to the starting of the HERALD, with none but the obscure ones of earth to uphold our great distinctive doctrine, to a casual observers, it did seem as if its scattered pioneers must be overwhelmed and destroyed by the many difficulties they had to encounter. The cause has safely weathered that point. As a body we have since become more united and strengthened day by day, and now we see how God can use his weak ones to confound the mighty.

The Christian Advocate, the most prominent Methodist journal in the country, as we noticed last week, admits that our doctrine "has invaded the church," and better still, that "its advocates are chiefly men of faith and prayer, and of churches [Methodist of course] that are built on Christ and are honored with the presence of the Spirit." It has been obliged to admit, too, that the destruction of the wicked is a terrible punishment, even more so than the fabled one of torment in eternal fire: its words are, "Death is the greatest punishment God or man can inflict. Eternal life in death is preferable to annihilation."

We must bear in mind this language is spoken in reference to believers in the Methodist organization, and not to those who have been the means, under God, of shedding upon them the light of the great truth.

The Observer lately made admission that "annihiliation" had invaded the Presbyterian churches, and was rapidly spreading.

In conversation, recently, with a gentleman of acquirements, and a faithful and consistent upholder of the doctrine of the final extinction of the wicked, he stated as his opinion, that it would not be long before christians would be ashamed not to be known as believers in our views. His position brings him in contact with prominent men in New England and elsewhere, and he has seen such changes of sentiment in men, to our views, including many of its most noted D.D.'s, that he believes himself warranted in making this statement.

A prominent Methodist minister wrote an article favoring the destruction of the wicked, and offered it for publication to the Editor of the "Methodist Quarterly," but it was refused unless he could get endorsement from some of the prominent leaders of that sect. He at once produced seventeen names of distinguished ministers and three prominent laymen, and a noted D.D. accompanied his endorsement with a declaration of his readiness to defend the doctrine if published.

We might cite other similar facts to show how God is working to establish his truth, but not now. We can stand still and see the salvation of God. Those who have borne the beat and burthen of the battle may have to fight on in obscurity, unrecognized even by those who may, more honored perhaps, follow after them. But if we can maintain a just title to the compliment of the Journal, that we are men of faith and prayer, we may willingly be considered the offscouring of all things, for in due time we shall reap if we faint not.

Still another important point. As it in his great love God would have his children convinced of his truth that man is mortal, he has been raising up other agents to carry on his work. Men of science have unwittingly, but providentially, been investigating the subject of man's existence. Without any reference to the subject as a theological question, they have, without exception, declared themselves confident in being able to demonstrate that there is no sensation without contents; or, in other words no consciousness or existence apart from material organism. The idea that man is a dual being, his inner one an immaterial, self-existing essence, that continues in conscious existence when the physical system is destroyed, is scouted with derision. It has no claims in reason, nature or common sense. Prof. Youmans, in a lecture before a large and intelligent audience in Cooper Institute, New York, proclaimed this fact. His position received the public approval of a scientific body in England, embracing some of the most eminent philosophers in the world, after a similar address, there.

Now, brethren, God is working with us, or properly speaking, through us; and showing us the fact that we, humble as we are, are the instruments in his hands. Shall we not awake to the importance of our position? Should we not stir each other up to renewed diligence? Even if left without encouragement such as he has given us, we should rejoice in bearing up the glorious light of the gospel, and pass on in obscurity, and die unnoticed and unpitied, if demanded, and be happy that we had been called so to do; but now that our heavenly Father sees fit to gladden our hearts by setting his seal to his precious truth, shall we not arouse ourselves, and each and all, do still more valiantly to honor our great Master and Captain of our salvation, and bring joy to hearts now filled with dismay, doubts, and distractions? Let us see to it that our talent be not hid in a napkin, but employed to bring gain to our great soon-coming King.

Papal Arrogance.

While the papacy is rocking to its fall hated by all, even its own offspring in Rome, it must fill up the prophetic picture of its insolence, by gasping out its last breath in declarations that it is infallible, and will be upheld and cared for by Omnipotent power, and manifests the same devilish malignity against the religion of Jesus Christ as it did in its dark days of power. It seemed at one time that the poor pope would find rest and commiseration in England or this country, where offers of asylum were proffered him; but even these he must turn against himself at the last moment by acts which have drowned all feelings of pity and aroused an indignation that will doom him and his false religion to a hatred that will "burn his flesh with fire." We give the account of the closing of all places of worship in Rome.

"The Roman law strictly prohibits protestant worship in the city of Rome. The only exception to this restriction is that the Embassadors of foreign governments may have divine service celebrated in their houses. Under this protection, the Russian, the Prussian, the American and other representatives of foreign governments have had for many years chapels in their own houses. The British government has no diplomatic relations with Rome, but the British protestants have for forty years past been tolerated in holding worship in a hayloft, finished off as a chapel, just outside the walls of the Porto del Popolo. The practice, however, has been more tolerant than the law, and the Roman authorities have winked at or overlooked other religious assemblies of foreign residents. Thus there have been for six years two stations of Scotch Presbyterian, which have never been interfered with until, on December 29, the chaplains were served with the following most remarkable warning from the British Consulate:

"BRITISH CONSULATE AT ROME, Dec. 21, 1866.

"SIR:—It is my official duty inform you that that Monsignore Randi, Governor of Rome, has just communicated to me that you are holding illegal religious meetings in your house, which, you must know, are prohibited by the Roman law, and that you have thus placed yourself in the power of the INQUISITION, both for arrest and imprisonment.

"But as the Monsignore permits me to give you this notice, I would seriously advise that you at once put an end to these innovations, and that you will visit Monsignore Randi at Monte Citorio and assure him that you will never again repeat these illegal acts. I hope in this way you may possibly suspend your exile, which is now hanging over you. I am, your obedient servant,

"JOSEPH SEVERN, British Consul.

"To the Rev. James Lewis."

Some countrymen of the author of this remarkable document suspected him of approving the purpose of the government. All the representations made to the Papal authorities were fruitless, on and Jan. 4 the Presbyterian stations were closed. Mr. Odo Russell in vain appealed to Cardinal Antonelli. His reference to the liberty granted to the Americans to have a place of worship drew forth the remark, that "the government would attend to that also."

The American church in Rome has been attended to also, and ordered, with the rest, to be closed. The matter was discussed in Congress, but as it could not be reached by legislation, the only step it could take was to suppress the American mission to Rome, which it did and accompanied by some wholesome remarks from many members. By this act our country gives notice that the Papacy is hereafter to be treated as possessed of no political significance.

In noticing the comments of indignation from the religious press of this country, the Freeman's Journal makes the following remarks, which are in the true Catholic spirit:

"It is a great grievance to Beecher, and Tyng, and Coxe, and other 'miscegenationists,' that they cannot spout and shout in our Catholic Cathedrals. But the fact is, we Catholics have our churches blessed, in a way to keep all such spirits out of them. We buy a lot or two, and build a little church, perhaps only 40 feet by 80. But, in another place, we buy a space of 300 feet by 200. And the bigger church, like the smaller, is safe for us from the howlings of all the fantastical and discordant parsons. Now, pray, why cannot Catholics, numbering from two to three millions, having bought and paid for a larger area—the city of Rome—owning every foot of it—and asking nobody, that don't want to, to go there even on a visit—why cannot the Catholics of the entire globe be permitted to own, and to consecrate, the few square miles occupied by the city of Rome, to the residence of their Chief Pontiff, and to the offices of their religion? Have they required, as the Church of England does, people that don't believe in it to contribute to its support? Not at all! Rome is the property of Catholics, all over the world. It is as much so as the ground of the old St. Patrick's, in New York, with its ruin-looking walls, is the property of the Catholics in this city.

"A thousand Catholics need, for their church, a certain space—and they have the right to have it. Twenty thousand Catholics need a larger space, and have a right to it. How much space do nearly three hundred milions of Catholics need, for the offices that are in common among them?

"We reckon it would be a poser to say that they did not need all Rome, and find it crowded at that!"

On the Popular Side.

Many very good people do not like to take decided ground against prevailing opinions simply because of the annoyance, although well satisfied that such opinions are not only errors but injurious ones. In this respect this age is not peculiar. In the 16th century, during the Reformation, Erasmus and many other learned men sympathized with the views of Luther and Calvin, knowing that the church of Rome was corrupt and apostate, and yet they had not the nerve and decision of character to stand or fall with the dauntless Reformers. Preceding and succeeding that grand work, every great effort put forth against church declension, has developed the same class of timid slaves to popularity. These persons are numerous in our day. When the Bible evidence of the Second Advent is presented, many of them are convinced and tremble, but have not the courage to come out boldly and declare their belief. In seeking to save themselves they lose everything instead. Self-respect is sacrificed, peace of conscience, and confidence in the love of God, and, as in the case of Erasmus they gain the contempt of good men for their pusillanimity in withholding what might prove the light of life to perishing men to save themselves "lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ."

Among members of churches but few intelligent ones will avow a belief in the endless-torment theory so long preached; when approached for their positive grounds of belief they become equivocating and reckless in their statements. Of these, however, many see and acknowledge the beauty and force of the Bible evidence of the non-immortality of man, and no future life to the wicked. But while satisfied of their correctness they keep silent, being more apprehensive of the favor of their churches than that of their Saviour whom they profess to fellow. They argue with themselves that they shall lose their influence by an open avowal of their belief, and thus be deprived of the opportunity of doing the good they are accomplishing—while the motive is really a a mean one. A few make a start on the right road and seem willing to be guided by the light of truth, but tire and halt at every new point in their advance, finally remembering "the fish, the onions, the cucumbers and leaks," they left behind them, and are ever blaming and denouncing those who are desirous to press forward after the cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night; or, like Lot's wife, look back regretfully, and become pillars to admonish the foolish.

The way of salvation is not a "royal road" "In this life ye shall suffer tribulations," christians are admonished. Every step in deviation to avoid these is a compromise and sacrifice, to recover from which must bring adequte smarting from the correcting rod.

God designs that his truth shall be made known; those who are faithful will not take counsel with men; and whether few or many they will labor just in the way they are called to. They have their Saviour's example in performing his Father's will; he had respect for the recompense of reward. If the scriptures proclaim that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, it will not do to hide the truth under a bushel; if we learn that the wicked shall not see life, wo to the man who fails to warn his endangered fellow-creatures.

But it appears as if we are left to our free choice, either to have all the benefits this world affords, with the approbation of man, and enjoy them throughout life, and then to sink into oblivion, or deny ourselves, and meet the enemies of progress boldly, and stand by the truth whatever trials it may bring, and have that peace the world can neither give nor take away, and in the life everlasting, with that multitude that no man could number.

The Metaphors of St. Paul.

1.—ROMAN SOLDIERS.

Every part of the Holy scripture has its own distinctive imagery: and through the medium of this imagery its instruction is often conveyed. Thus, when we read the prophecies of Amos, "who was among the herdmen of Tekoa,"—himself a "herdman" in a wild and pastoral district,—the images are such as these: the "fat kine of Bashan, which say unto their masters, Bring, and let us drink;" "the lion roaring in the forest;" "the seven stars of Orion, before the shadow of death is turned into the morning;" "the basket of summer fruit;" "the grasshoppers in the shooting up of the latter growth." Unless we rightly apprehend the circumstances, the scenery, and the pursuits, in connection with which it was God's will that his prophet should speak, we cannot fully understand the meaning of his words; and so far, to us, their force and instructiveness are diminished.

The imagery of the book of Amos is an emphatic and strongly marked instance of a principle which is applicable, in various degrees, to all parts of the Bible. The life of Joseph, the life of Moses, the life of Ruth, the life of Elijah, all have their appropriate atmosphere and coloring; and if we look at them without reference to these, they fade away into something abstract and dead. And so it is with the New Testament. But here, though the principle is the same, we feel that we are brought into a new world, and that the principle must be applied to very different details. Every part of the Old Testament has an oriental complexion. We illustrate it by referring to what travellers tell us of the tents of the Bedouin Arabs, of the courts of Eastern princes, of caravans and camels and palm-trees. And so it is, no doubt, to some extent, in the case of the New Testament. But still, on the whole, in passing from one to the other, we are conscious that a change has come over the scene, and that God has begun to speak to us now through a different kind of imagery. We find ourselves brought in contact with circumstances far more nearly resembling those which surround us in modern life. We are in fact, when the New Testament is our study, on the borders or in the heart of Greek civilization, and we are always in the midst of the Roman empire. It is no more possible fully to understand what the apostles say to us, than what the propets say to us, if we dissever their words from the circumstances of their lives. The metaphors they use are drawn (as indeed they must have been drawn, to be intelligible at all) from the things which were around them. My endeavor will be to illustrate certain groups of images which are common in one part of the New Testament, and while keeping in view especially one very conspicuous passage in the Epistle to the Ephesians, to elucidate the military metaphors of St. Paul.

It seldom occurs to us to consider how large a portion of his time St. Paul spent in the close proximity of soldiers. He lived under the shadow of the greatest military monarchy which the world has seen. Englishmen are less able than others to realize all that is implied in this simple fact: hence they are startled into the impression of novelty, when they first travel in France or Austria, and see troops filing through the streets of every city, and large barracks in every country town. But such sights were no novelty to St. Paul. No doubt they were more frequent and conspicuous in some parts of the Empire than in others. In Philippi, for instance, in Troas and Antioch in Pisidia, which were Roman Colonies, we may well believe that the warlike symbols of Rome were more prominent than in other cities which he visited: and the state of Syria, which was a very uneasy province, and was held by a standing army of 60,000 men, was very different from that of Achaia or Bithynia, which were comparatively quiet and settled districts. But wherever he resided, military uniforms and military quarters were familiar objects; wherever he travelled, he was liable to meet troops on their march from one province to another, or in the pursuit of banditti, or acting as an escort of prisoners.

But we are not left to this general kind of illustration. We are well acquainted with several incidents of his life, which connected him, in a manner peculiarly intimate, with Roman soldiers, and their officers, and their armor. It is enough to make a simple reference to his arrest in the court of the Temple, when the commandant of the garrison of Antonia, with some of his subalterns and a body of troops, ran down and took him into custody, —then to the time which the apostle spent in the barracks within Antonia, and to the events which took place there—then to his night journey to Antipatris, under the charge of a guard almost as numerous as half an English regiment, besides a sqadron of dragoons—then to his captivity of two years at Cæsarea, the centre of the provincial military government, where he was probably chained by the hand to a soldier—then to his adventurous voyage, when an officer of a distinguished corps was his close companion, and when the swords of the soldiers under his command, which had cut the fastenings of the boat were only just prevented from taking the Apostle's life and the lives of his fellow-prisoners—then to the delivering up of the prisoners to the commander of the Prætorian Guards, after which, though Paul was suffered to dwell by himself, yet it was not without "a soldier who kept him"—and lastly, to the facts hinted at in passages of the Epistles written at Rome, as when he says, in affiixing his autograph to the Colossian letter, "the salutation by the hand of me Paul," and then, feeling the chain clank on his wrist as he writes, he adds, "remember my chains,"—or, in the Eastern letter, when he describes himself as "an ambassador in bonds,"—an ambassador of the free Gospel, fastened to a soldier; it is enough to enumerate these things in order to see how natural it is St. Paul should speak to us in military metaphors, nay, how unnatural it would be (if I may say so with reverence) were no such metaphors to be found in his writings.

St. Luke and his Gospel.

BY EDWARD IRVING.

It is manifest that the third gospel was written by the same person who wrote the Acts of the Apostles. Their being dedicated to the same individual, Theophilus, strongly supports this view, more especially that in the latter of these dedications distinct reference is made to the former. Now, in a certain part of the latter treatise, where Paul's first passage into Europe from Troas is mentioned, the writer of the narrative changes the third for the first person, using we in place of they; whence we gather that at Troas he joined the apostle, and sailed with him to Philippi, where he first landed in Macedonia; and in all the apostolic transactions there he represents himself as present and taking part.

This style of speaking in the first person is discontinued as soon as Paul left Philippi, which shows that Luke went not with him; and during all his preaching in Greece and Asia it is discontinued, and it is not resumed till Paul comes back to Philippi after an interval of seven years. Here, for the second time, the narrator takes himself in along with Paul, and never afterwards separates himself. "We sailed away," says he, "from Philippi, and came to Troas;" so that Paul found Luke where he left him, which makes it likely that he had continued there all the intervening time. From Troas they came to Tyre, from thence to Cæsarea, where they abode with Philip the Evangelist, and thence to Jerusalem. Now at Jerusalem, it is to be noted, as casting light upon Luke's religion and country before he became a christian, that he speaks familiarly of all the Jewish services, and was not objected to by the scrupulous Jews, although one of the company, Trophimus the Ephesian, held that he was a Greek, and therefore admissible no further into the Temple than the Court of the Gentiles. This makes it almost certain that Luke was a Jew, which opinion agrees with the voice of antiquity. When Paul, to save his life, appealed from Festus the governor to the Emperor, Luke embarked with him from Jerusalem to Rome, was with him in the perilous voyage and the shipwreck on Melita, and in their re-embarkation and on their arrival. While Paul abode in Rome, preaching the kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus, he wrote several epistles to confirm the churches; in three of these—that to the Colossians, the second to Timothy, and that to Titus—he makes mention of Luke by name as present with him, and in every one of them with special distinction. In the first he writes, "Luke the beloved physician;" in the second, "Luke alone is with me," all the others having forsaken him; in the third, "Luke, my fellow-laborer." In the other three—those to the Galatians, Ephesians, and Philippians—no individual salutations being given, he is not mentioned. Therefore, so long as we have tidings of Paul at Rome, Luke was his beloved fellow-laborer and most steadfast friend, of whom he never loses an opportunity to make mention in the most flattering terms. Here are twelve years of acquaintanceship and five years of constant and most loving communion between the Apostle and the Evangelist—and these when the Apostle was most at leisure; for with the exceptien of the troublesome time at Jerusalem, these years were all spent either on shipboard, in the island of Melita, or in his own hired house at Rome. So far we have perfect certainty of Luke. One thing more about him, which, if not cert in, is next to certain. During the seven years between the Apostle's visits to Philippi, where he left Luke and joined him again, it is reasonable to think that Luke resided there; and if he resided there, one whom Paul denominates a beloved fellow-laborer would not be unoccupied. Doubtless he would have a charge over the churches in these parts, for no other person is named in connection with that duty; and when Paul returned, they were found in that flourishing condition he boasts of in Second Corinthians. Paul came to Philippi the second time, as we said, to collect for the saints in Judea round by the way of Corinth, and being at Philippi found it necessary to write a letter, the second to the Corinthians, that they should have their gifts ready. This he sent by the hands of Titus and another, to whom he gives these high testimonials: "The brother whose praise is in the gospel throughout all the churches; and not that only, but who was also chosen of the churches to travel with their gift, which is administered by us to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind." This most honorable testimony the voice of all antiquity hath given unto Luke, and accordingly we have at the close of the epistle; "Sent by Titus and Lucas." There can be no doubt this must have been Luke, for he did actually accompany Paul to Jerusalem, and when they arrived he went in with him to James the bishop, and to the elders of the church, as also to Philip the Evangelist at Cæsarea, as one that had commission. Besides, whom should the Macedonian churches chose to accompany Paul but him whom Paul had brought amongst them, and left amongst them, and who had abided bound to them for seven years? It is certain, that of all the deputation which went up from the European churches trusted with the gift, he was the only one that sailed with Paul from Philippi, the rest having gone before to Troas.

It cannot but be satisfactory to our minds to know so many particulars of this Evangelist, and to learn that, whatever he had been before, he w Paul's most trustworthy friend and most constant companion. Often praised by him, chosen by a church amongst whom he had resided seven years to bear their trust, famed in the gospel throughout all the churches; a physician, and consequently a man of learning and knowledge—which truly, as well as his accurate and elegant mind, every sentence of his two treatises doth evince; an accurate observer and faithful narrator, and having much general knowledge, even down to naval tactics, as his account of the voyage and shipwreck manifest,—indeed, whether you regard himself or his opportunities, a man altogether worthy of being chosen by the Holy Spirit to record the mighty works of the Lord and the acts of his holy servants.

Perhaps you will bear with me a little longer, while from scripture we descend to the ancient Fathers, and from certainty to the highest historical probability, to get further information of our Evangelist. When Paul came down to Corinth, and Luke was entrusted with the contribution of the Macedonian churches, they abode there three months; and thence was written the mighty epistle to the Romans, at the close of which a whole chapter is taken up with salutations, there being much intercourse between the two cities of Corinth and Rome. In these salutations, among many others, Lucius is mentioned, whom Paul denominates his kinsman. This Lucius, as Origen, the most learned bishop of his time, no more than 150 years after, says, was believed to be no other than our Evangelist—Lucius being the Roman form, Lucas the Greek. Luke certainly was with the apostle at the time, and he was not wont, we have seen, to be forgotten by him, it being very probable from this testimony and consideration that his name was written Lucius as well as Lucas. He has been thought by learned men to be that Lucius of Cyrene, who with others were scattered in the persecution after Stephen's death, and who is named amongst those prophets and teachers at Antioch who set apart Paul and Barnabas to the ministry of the gentiles. This shows him to have been at Jerusalem about the resurrection, and to have been an early believer, and to have walked with the apostles, perhaps to have seen the Lord.

I confess myself very much inclined to go into this opinion, because if he had been a convert of Paul's, as some have thought, surely there would have been some notification of it, as of Timothy, Apollos, and others; and if he had not been already acquainted with Paul, when they met at Troas, it would certainly not have been treated so much as a matter of course. Besides, he has so much knowledge of the infant church, and his narrative is so particular about those who were in a second place to the apostles, and on a level with himself, such as Stephen, Philip, and others; and besides, when he comes to Jerusalem and meets them once again, he seems so much at home, that, all these things being taken together, and supported by the identity of names, and by the opinions of the ancients, make it a matter of high probability that he was, at an early period and in a most minute manner, conversant with the matters he writes of. These high probabilities and good opinions of the Fathers are confirmed by his own words: "Having had perfect understanding in all things from the very first;" an expression altogether wide of the truth if he had been converted by Paul at Antioch full twelve years after the resurrection of the Lord. Also by those other words: "As they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eyewitnesses, and ministers of the word,"—when he includes himself with those who derived their knowledge from immediate eyes-witnesses, which Paul was not. Also by this consideration, that though for the gospel he gives up his authorities to Theophilus, he does not so for the Acts, as if he was here authority to himself.

God's Unspeakable Gift.

BY WHOM WAS THIS SON GIVEN?

ANS. By His Father. He who sees the end from the beginning is never taken by surprise. The life-boat was on the beach, ere the ship had struck, or the storm had begun to blow. As the angel that, hovering over Moriah, watched Abraham climb the mountain, build the altar, tenderly bind the lad, and with averted eyes raise his hand to strike, was ready to seize his arm and arrest the fatal blow, so when we were as near to perish, Jesus was as ready to save—saving in Abel the very first victim of death. True, Jesus Christ had not yet died, nor had yet been born. But as the bond of a man of honor. and of wealth is reckoned of equal value with his money, so God held the covenant promise of his Son to be as valid as its performance: and thus, long ages before Jesus died, the benefits of his death were applied by anticipation. And so John speaks of him, as a Lamb slain, not eighteen hundred years ago, but centuries before his birth and death, before the tree he hung on grew, before the flood had drowned or the fall had ruined our world, "a Lamb slain," says the Apostle, "from the foundation of the world."....

From these mysterious councils revelation has partially withdrawn the veil; showing us the Son addressing the Father—these his words, In the volume of the book, it is written of me, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. Here the Son is represented as offering, himself; but for what purpose? It is to do his Father's will. The devil's will is that all men should perish: God's is that all men should be saved, and come to a knowledge of the truth: and whatever difficulties may be started, it is the duty, and should be the delight, of every minister to proclaim a free and also a full salvation; casting the mercy of God like a zone around the world, and assuring men that whosoever cometh unto him he will in no wise cast out. God, who has no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, but would rather that the sinner would come to him and live, was no mere spectator of redemption; only looking on to applaud the actor, and approve the sacrifice. The Son was given by his Father as well as by himself; and the claim God has on our love is, not that he loved us because Christ died for us, but that Christ, the incarnation of saving mercy, died for us because his Father loved us.. He so loved the world as to give up his only begotten Son, "that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

The Son was a gift: and what a gift was there? Were we condemned to die, where should we find a father to offer, in answer to our most earnest prayers, to give his Son for us? I speak not of him who is a mother's joy, and the staff of a father's age; but of the profligate, the prodigal, who has covered an honored family with disgrace, and is bringing down the old man's gray hairs with sorrow to the grave? David had the very son we ask for; yet how fondly did his heart cling to Absalom? "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" There is no father, though he had twenty sons, who would part with one of them, the wickedest and worst, and, taking it from our neck, fasten the rope on his; yet God gave up his Son, his only and well-beloved Son, not sparing him that he might spare us. And were our hearts not cold as the icy pole, and hard as a granite stone, how would that warm, and soften, and melt them? God take out of us the hearts that can despise a gift so precious, and resist love so divine!—for this unspeakable mercy kindling such gratitude within us, that we shall offer him all, indeed the only thing, he asks in return, when, as if it were a gift worth his receiving, he says, Give me thy heart, my son?

To whom was this son given? To us. God commended his love to us, in that while we were sinners Christ died for us. Herein is love indeed, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and gave up his Son to die for us.

There was nothing to astonish the eyes of Abraham when, leaving an anxious and sleepless bed, he hastened to a hill-top that commanded a view of Sodom, and saw the guilty cities in one, wide, blazing flame; their smoke going up like a furnace, and spreading a funeral pall on the face of day. The spectacle, however terrible, was not unexpected. The voice of outraged virtue had been crying against Sodom, How long? O Lord, how long? and its sinners had nothing else to look for but this outburst of fiery indignation. The only wonder was that it had been so long suspended.

When the sea burst its ancient bounds, and, invading the solid land, rose till its waves drowned the eagle in her mountain nest, and washed their snows from the highest Alps, how terrible the spectacle?—a shoreless ocean, where one lonely ship, afloat on its silent waters, went driving over buried tower and town. Terrible, it was not incomprehensible. The earth had grown so foul and fetid, that nothing less than a deluge could wash it clean. We are not surprised at these things, or at seeing justice vindicating its authority wherever crimes are committed. We expect to find a prison in every town; nor would start to meet the hangman within its gloomy walls. And did any province cast off a sovereign's authority, its inhabitants, however much occasion they had to be alarmed, would have none to be surprised at the sight of a host advancing, amid the glance of bayonets and the roar of cannon, to put down the revolt, and put every rebel to the sword.

For such an avenging purpose the Son of God, attended by an angel host, might have descended on this guilty world. He came, but

No weapons in his hand are seen,
No voice of terror heard.

The angels who announced his advent proclaimed its gracious purpose, singing, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will toward the children of men!" And the light they scattered from their quivering wings was a happy omen of the event that was to illuminate the darkness of man's guilty soul, and turn our night of sorrow into an eternal day. The Son comes to vindicate his Father's justice, but—hear O Heavens, and be astonished O Earth!—it is at his own expense, not ours; he comes to subdue a rebel race, but it is by love, not war; he comes to destroy, but it is sin, not the sinner. He gave himself to us; and, wounded, for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities, died, the innocent for the guilty, the lawmaker for the law-breaker.

Did Simon start from his couch, deeming it beneath his Master's dignity to stoop to a menial office, and wash his servants' feet? And can we contemplate the Son of God, not stooping to wash us with water, but dying to was us with his own precious blood, without these words bursting from our lips, "Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him?" Nay, rather, should not, and shall not this be our language, That thou hast done for me, what shall I do for thee? What? but fondly embrace thee with all my affections, love thee with all my heart, serve thee with all my powers, and denying myself, but never thee, say, "What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits? I will take the cup of salvation, and pay my vows to the Lord, now in the presence of all his people."—[English] Sunday Magazine.

Letters and Extracts.

From Helen Robertson.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., JAN. 30, 1866.

BR. STORRS:—I have felt for some time as if you ought to be hearing from the field of labor here; but this severe cold weather has brought so much additional work that I sometimes hardly know how to find the time. There are so many poor, suffering creatures, that much time is consumed in waiting on them. Also, going to their homes and finding out their real needs, and then supplying them. The demand is so great that we often feel it is but little we can do; but that little we are glad to do. I here heartily thank my Advent brethren and sisters for their kindness in sending me money and clothing. One brother sent me ten dollars, and, not wishing his name known, said I might call it Mat. vi. 3. May our Father who sees in secret reward him openly. A sister in Maine, also, sent me five dollars; but did not wish her name mentioned in the HERALD OF LIFE. I trust it is in the Lamb's book of life, and will at last be openly acknowledged. What a joyful day that will be. Sr. Mercy J. Leonard, Pompey, N. Y., also sent me one dollar. I have never seen either of these three; but hope to meet them soon in the blessed kingdom. I am glad to have the opportunity of dispensing their alms to the poor freedmen, and my heart is cheered by their kind letters of sympathy. We need such comfort away off here. In addition, I had three dollars from a tried friend in New Jersey "to bless the poor with." I would say to these brethren and sisters that I went, two days ago, and bought seven pairs of shoes, thus making some hearts glad and feet warm. Sometimes I buy meal and give them to keep them from starving, and thus expend the money according to my best judgment. Trying to be a faithful steward before the Lord.

My school is prospering finely. To-day I had seventy-four present; a large school for one teacher, but they crowd in, and I don't like to send them away. My scholars are large, and I have some very interesting cases. It is astonishing and almost incredulous how quickly some of them learn to read. Those that are large go right into it, and I take extra pains to help them along; and if I were to tell you, you would scarcely believe how rapidly they get along. I have one man I should think nearly fifty years of age. In the second year of the war he paid eighteen hundred dollars, in gold and silver, of his hard-earned savings, for his freedom. He is a blacksmith, and has a business of his own here in Alexandria; but has hired a man to take his place for a time, and so comes to school. He says if he only had the money he paid for his freedom, he would expend it in education. He progresses rapidly both in reading and writing. Such cases are interesting indeed, and help us bear our hardships and privations much more cheerfully.

The signs of the times seem to indicate the near approach of our blessed LIFE-GIVER, to set up his everlasting kingdom; and the prayer of my heart is, Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. The whole creation seems groaning and travailing. Surely deliverance is at hand. O, to be enabled so to live so that we shall be ready to open to him.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

There is a great dullness in business, just now, when usually trade is active. The cessation of war threw two millions of producers on the country who had been consumers, drawing so much on the industry of the country that all establishments were strained, and so inadequate to supply the government's necessities, that Europe was also enriched by its demands. With the close of the war the excessive importations went on, which, with the additional strength to the industry of our own country by the disbanding of the army, overstocked the markets, bringing the present stagnation, and throwing our laboring classes out of employment. The taxes consequent on the enormous debt piled up by the war, have to be paid whether business be good or bad; but if the latter is the case, financial troubles must ensue and bring consequent distress on the people. Congress, just now, is seeking how to work out some plan to save the country, and its financial measures are entirely in accordance with the view of the large body of the people. A higher protective tariff has been adopted by the Senate, and will doubtless pass the House, which will shut off foreign goods and open our own manufactories, and set our industries into activity. Congress has not been as fortunate in its political measures. Reconstruction, owing to the divided counsels of the executive and legislative branches, goes on slowly. Steadily, however, the subject is being worked out. The South is growing wiser by the discussion and the experience it is going through, and will accept submissively whatever is offered. General amnesty, with impartial suffrage, is most likely to be the end of the dispute, from the present tone of feeling North and South.

January, 1867, has been the coldest for many years. On Sunday morning, February 3d, a violent thunder storm occurred, very early, while people were yet in bed, and it startled a great many, who hardly knew what to make of such a strange occurrence.

The great miracle wrought on a nun in Canada, Jan. 1st, over which so much joy was manifested by the deluded inhabitants, didn't amount to much after all. The poor creature died instead of getting well.

In Canton, Pa., lately, a young lady hanged herself because her husband scolded her for giving away sixteen dollars in charity. The person for whom the money was intended did not get it, and she poisoned herself in vexation; and a third person, who had intercepted the sixteen dollars, hearing that his dishonesty had caused the death of two others, threw himself into a well.

To show how degraded a condition the politics of New York City are in, it is only necessary to instance who manage its educational institutions, which should be in the hands of the best and most educated men. Of the present School Commissioners and Trustees, eight are liquor dealers, while the names of no fewer than seventeen are not to be found in the City Directory. They are bar-tenders, office sweeps, or something lower—but are all Catholics or under the domination of some priest.

Our government has sent an agent to Syria to see about the suffering colony of Americans at Jaffa. Perhaps we may learn that the rule of the Turk in Palestine will come to an end by the interference of the United States to protect and revenge the wrongs of this providential body of christian colonists

A large meeting was held at Cooper Union last week to give expression to the sympathy entertained by the residents of this city for the suffering women and children of the Cretan patriots, and to adopt measures for their relief.

The session of the British Parliament to begin a few days hence, promises to be an exciting one, and will probably furnish one of the most important pages in modern English history.

An embassy from Japan, consisting of 19 persons of whom two are ambassadors, ten officers, secretaries and interpreters, and seven servants, has arrived at Paris en route to Berlin and St. Petersburg, and thence to the United States.

The Matamoros Ranchero of the 20th inst. says that a new and great movement for the reformation of the Roman Church was being inaugurated throughout Mexico. Rev. Rafael Diaz Martinez has been elected bishop of this new Catholic Apostolic National church of Mexico. The object of this movement is to break off from the old Roman church, for the reason as charged that through Romish influences were sent the French armies which have invaded Mexico and deluged the land with republican blood.

Rev. Father Hernandez, who was captured by the imperialists, was shot by them, after suffering unheard of atrocities, on the ground that he was a liberal, and inclined to break off from the Church of Rome.

The chief of the insurgents in Candia has written a long letter to the United States Consul here, thanking the American people through him, for the sympathy extended to the Cretans. He also petitions the Consul for American ships of war to convey the women and children.

The amount of poverty and destitution pervading all parts of the English metropolis is frightful and unequaled, and it is feared that an appeal must be made to Parliament for Governmentaid.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

A SONG OF PENITENCE.

Stray sheep are we amid the wilderness;
There is no water near—there is no grass;
Hot winds across the arid reaches pass—
Not the soft breezes in the fold that bless.
The way to turn we cannot see—alas!
Stray sheep, lost sheep, amid the wilderness.

O Shepherd far away—how kind wert Thou!
Tender Thy voice among the lilies sweet;
Sunshine in cold, and shadow in the heat.
Fainting by day, we shiver nightly now;
But Who comes up with bleeding hands and feet?
O Shepherd very near—it must be Thou!

Stray sheep were we amid the wilderness,
But on our fleeces still His mark we bore;
And so, though faint with toil, and wounded sore,
He would not have his flock one lamb the less.
We follow feebly now; He goes before;
He will not leave us in the wilderness.—Selected.

THE LOST JEWEL.

[From The Methodist.]

[Concluded.]

Of course nothing was proved in his examination. One of the gentlemen of the Italian Benevolent Society had been sent for, and he readily went bail for Carlo's appearance on the following Saturday, when he would be tried. Bail means a promise to pay a certain sum of money if an accused person does not appear for trial. Carlo thanked Mr. Bianchi, and again and again protested his innocence.

Mr. Steinbrecher was very indignant, and refused to receive the boy again, and would give him no recommendation; thus was he thrown out of employment, with the sad suspicion of being dishonest clinging to him. Nevertheless the peace that had come in his soul when he was on his way to the station house still pervaded his spirit, and he was almost happy, so sure was he that, in some unexpected manner, the God of the fatherless would bring to light his innocence. He went to his room, and taking down his violin, played a low, sweet hymn, and then went on from one tune to another until he forgot all the harsh things that had been said to him. So true is it that, for the really innocent, no cruelty of man can destroy the peace of perfect quiet and faith. As he played, Gaz jumped down from his perch and strutted round the floor, chattering violently, now in Italian, now in English, endeavoring, it would seem, to give his advice and comfort. "Oh Gaz! Gaz!" exclaimed Carlo, "I am miserable; I am in disgrace; people have called Carlo Zucchi a thief!" Then he suddenly recollected how fond Gaz was of shining things; he remembered that all ravens will take possession of bright bits of tin, glass, spoons, and ribbon, and hide them away. He wondered that he had not before thought of this, and rushing to the corner of his room where there was a hole, and where he had often observed Gaz at work, he tore away a part of the wainscot and hunted through the rubbish. He found a silver spoon, some glass, and a few other objects, but no trace of any valuable stone. Gaz stood watching the operation, standing first on one foot and then on the other, thinking, no doubt, "Search away, Carlo, you won't find anything to convict me." Presently he flew out of the window, and Carlo heard him from the topmost branches of a tall poplar chattering away lustily.

With a sigh the disappointed boy arose and hunted thoroughly all through the room. All in vain. If Gaz were the thief, he had not secreted the stone in that spot. Then the poor tired boy threw himself on the bed, and soon fell asleep to dream uneasy dreams of his sister and his troubles. After several days he was almost entirely disheartened; the time for his trial was drawing near, and he had no way of proving his innocence. He had watched Gaz narrowly, but the perverse bird never seemed to desire to leave his master. On Friday afternoon, as he was leaning on the window looking down into the busy street, and up into the soft blue sky, he observed Gaz busy upon the very top of the poplar tree, and the impression darted into his mind that Gaz had hidden the jewel there. He well remembered that on that particular afternoon before the jewel was missed Gaz had flown home alone, and that he was sitting on that very tree when Carlo came in to supper. Now what to do! The little Italian could not climb; besides, the police were always driving boys off the trees, and he knew of no one to ask. He ran down stairs, and just at the foot met Mrs. O'Flynn, his landlady, who thought much of Carlo for his quiet, polite ways, and his kindness to her little boys. He told her the whole story. Mrs. O'Flynn, without losing one moment, called a policeman, who was a particular friend of hers, and asked permission to let some one go up the tree. "Shure, it's agin the law," said patrolman, Barney, "but if ye has iver a one that can spiel up the tree, I'll jist be afther steppin' round the corner to see afther them bonfires!"

Barney obligingly went round the corner, and Mrs. O'Flynn's sailor boy ran up the tree as nimbly as he would have gone up to the masthead, while Mrs. O'Flynn and Carlo waited in breathless anxiety. It seemed a long time before he came down again, and the mother could not speak for excitement. Tim took Carlo's hand and laid in it a bright red stone; it was the missing ruby. Carlo, pale as death and trembling from head to foot, burst into tears. Tim explained that he had had a great hunt, but under some leaves had found a hole deep in the tree; he had thrust in his hand, and after feeling about had drawn forth this bright stone. Carlo looked up through his tears, and thanked the kind young sailor. Mrs. O'Flynn, who had been explaining the whole matter to her friend Barney—who was too curious to remain long round the corner—exclaimed: "I'll put on me bonnet, and we'll all go to the shop, and show the boss that yer no more a thief than himself!"

They did all go. Mr. Steinbrecher was almost as delighted to find out Carlo's innocence as to recover his lost jewel; and although Mrs. O'Flynn gave him a great lecture for taking away the boy's character, he bore it patiently, and promised to make it all up to him.

All of Carlo's friends rejoiced to learn that his innocence had been brought to light, and Mr. Steinbrecher was so sorry the he had been so hasty, that he went early the next morning to the Italian Benevolent Society and paid Beppini's passage. The mother had gone to join her husband in that land where there are no more partings.

You may guess Carlo's joy when, after a short time, he clasped his beloved sister to his bosom, and welcomed her to a neat room that Mr. Steinbrecher had hired and furnished. She was an elegant embroiderer, and with her needle and Carlo's wages they succeeded admirably; Carlo's friends were hers. They attended faithfully to their religious as well as worldly duties, and success attended all their steps. Their future life bids fair to erase, by its quiet peace and happiness, all unpleasant memories of their early privations, separation and sorrow.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

BY WALTER PATTERSON.

Paul's hope was in unison with Abraham's faith, and based upon the promise of God to the fathers. See Paul's defence before king Agrippa. "And now I stand, and am tried for the hope of the promise made by God to our fathers; to which promise our twelve tribes, earnestly serving God, day and night, hope to attain. Concerning which hope, king Agrippa, I am accused by the Jews." Acts xxvi. 6, 7. And furthermore, Paul declares in plain language to the Romans, that, "Jesus Christ hath become a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made to the fathers." Rom. xv. 8. It is evident that Paul did not expect a fulfilment of the promises, nor his hope to be realized until the resurrection. He alludes to this in his defence before King Agrippa. "What," says he, "is it thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead." Stephen, a man "full of faith and of the Holy Spirit," gives emphatic evidence on this point. Speaking of Abraham, he says, "And he (God) gave him no inheritance in it (the promised land) not even a foot-breadth; yet he promised to give it to him for a possfession." Now, if Stephen had been an infidel, using such language, trying to overthrow the truth of God's promises, we might understand him in this wise. "See, God promised to give Abraham the land of Canaan for a possession, yea, an everlasting possession, yet he gave him not as much as he could cover with his foot, and before he could be buried there, he had to purchase a spot from the sons of Heth. Now Abraham is dead and where is God's promise?" But Stephen, instead of being an infidel wishing to overthrow God's word, was a man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit; he believed that all the promises of God are "Yea, and Amen, in Christ Jesus;" and that they will have their full and literal accomplishment in God's good time; that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob will be raised from the dead and rejoice in the faithfulness of their God. If Paul was the author of Hebrews, he there informs us that, "By faith Abraham when called to go out into the place which he was to receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tents with Isaac and Jacob, heirs with him of the same promise; .... these all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and being persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth; .... these all having obtained a good report, through faith, received not the promise: God having for our sakes provided something better, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. xi. Is there not good reason to believe, that God's promise to Abraham and his seed will have a literal and sure accomplishment? Is there not a territory for God's kingdom? But this also will become plainer as we proceed.

4. Let us consider where the Metropolis of this kingdom will be. Jerusalem was the Metropolis of the kingdom of Israel, before the kingdom was divided. David reigned over 30 years there; and Mount Zion, one of the mountains or hills on which Jerusalem was built, was called the "City of David," where he had his royal residence. Jerusalem is frequently called "the city of God"—"the holy city." It was the city where God chose to place his name for the tribes of Israel to go up and worship. The sins of that people have brought desolation upon that city. But although the besom of destruction has swept over it, and brought its splendor, its beauty, and its strength, to rubbish and dust; yet, "glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God" Psa. lxxxvii. 3. And although the Gentiles tread it now beneath their impious feet, yet I believe the time is not far distant when it shall be called "The city of God; the Zion of the holy One of Israel." Then it will be built up and gloriously adorned, so that the place of his feet will be glorious. "God hath sworn in truth to David; he will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I set on thy throne; .... for the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever; here will I dwell; for I have desired it." Psa. cxxxii. That Jerusalem will be the Metropolis of the glorious kingdom, promised to Jesus Christ and his saints, will be more evident as we proceed to consider who will be the subjects of that kingdom.

5. THE SUBJECTS.—Every kingdom has had its subjects. It would be a curious kingdom, an empty reigning, if there were no subjects to reign over. The kingdom is promised to Christ; the kingdom is promised to his saints; they are said to have received the "Spirit of Sonship, by which they cry, Abba, Father." "Children of God"—"And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified with him." Rom. viii. 17. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him" 2 Tim. ii. 12. Now, in the kingdom there will be subjects to reign over. We cannot doubt the correctness of the angel Gabriel's testimony, when he announced to Mary the conception and birth of Jesus. "And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God; and, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 30–33. Take this promise in connection with the oath of God to David, Psa. cxxxii., and the testimony of Peter on the day of Pentecost that Christ's resurrection was in accordance with God's promise and oath to David, and that now he was ascended into heaven, until the time came that he receives the kingdom, ["until I make thy foes thy footstool"]. Acts. ii. 35. And Peter also says in the next chapter, "whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Acts. iii. 21. Now, here is specified one part of the subjects of Christ's kingdom, "the house of Jacob;" in accordance with this, Jesus promised his twelve apostles to sit on twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. In unison with this, the prophet Isaiah says, "For to us a child is born, to us a son is given; and the government shall be on his shoulder; and his name shall be called, Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace; of the increase of his government there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of Hosts will perform this."

The prophets all seem to dwell with delight on the subject of the restoration of the scattered Israelites to their own land, with Christ as their king. Mark some of the points. God sware to David that Christ should sit on his throne. Now, where was David's throne? It was on Mount Zion, in Jerusalem. Here is another evidence that Jerusalem will be the Capital, or Metropolis of Christ's kingdom, as Isaiah says, "Then shall the moon be confounded, and the sun ashamed when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv. 23. The apostles contemplated the same when they were assembled in council at Jerusalem. They had to learn truths by degrees. They were slow to learn God's purposes with respect to the Gentiles. Like many of the present day they were prejudiced against the reception of new truths; God had to give them special visions before they could comprehend his purposes with respect to the Gentiles. But when Peter was taught, he was made to see those glorious truths respecting the Gentiles, as foretold by the prophets. Hence when the apostles were assembled in council, Peter rehearsed what God had done by him among the Gentiles. Then James addresses the council in these words, "Men and brethren, hearken unto me; Simeon hath decleared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." Then he says, "to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is writen, After this I will return." After what? After visiting the Gentiles for the purpose mentioned, "I will return, and build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." Now, this seems very plain to me; the apostles meaning that, after the visiting of the Gentile nations with the gospel, whosoever believeth and obeyeth, shall with Christ be a joint heir of the promises; who, in the end of this dispensation, will return, having received the kingdom; and in harmony with God's oath and promise to David, with the angel's prediction to Mary, "sit on David's throne." Then what follows—"that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." Acts xv.

That passage I quoted from Isa. xxiv. 23, where it says, "the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem," has its counterpart in Rev. xxi. 23, "And the city had no need of the sun, nor of the moon to shine in it; for the glory of God enlighteth it, and the Lamb is its light, and the nations of those who are saved will walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth will bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of the city shall not be shut at all by day; for there shall be no night there; and they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it." Truly, "Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God." I have often been pained when listening to ministers, who profess to be the leaders and teachers of the people, when quoting or preaching from that passage in Rev. would say, "among all the wonderful discoveries that have been made none has discovered where that place will be." Such are the results of mystifying God's word, and denying that it says what it means, and means what it says.

When Christ's kingdom is established on earth, it will be an era of redemption to his people, and of recompense to his enemies; "they shall be made to lick the dust." His judgments, I apprehend, will fall heavy upon the tyrants of earth and their armies or fighting powers; yet from those awful judgments some will "escape." Isa. lxvi. 19. And it seems they will be sent as ambassadors to the nations, to summon them to subjection to the King of kings; and finally those nations that refuse to come and worship the King at Jerusalem shall be punished as it is written in Zech. xiv. The time will eventually arrive when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; and he will reign for ever and ever." Rev. xi. 15. The time will come when, "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 27.

[To be concluded next week.]

CHRIST'S SERVANT.

As a preacher of Christ's gospel I have no right to let or sell myself to any man, or body of men. And when the servant of Christ stands to hold forth, his holding forth is to be according to the mind of him whom he serves; and it cannot be that the body who invite the labors of such a servant are responsible to any one for what may be said in such labors. There is not any one who in all points believes as do the entire company of believers to whom they preach. "To his own Master he stands or falls;" and the truth never can have full course, and be glorified, until free ears and free tongues (in Christ) are obtained. For a servant of Christ to give his influence to sustain that which is not according to truth, in his own judgment, is to sell himself from being the Lord's freeman, for the approbation of those who would "muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn."

Every true servant of Christ is free. Every free servant in Christ desires that every other servant in Christ, that is free, should speak, pray, and exhort, free. As there are various gifts in this free body, so every one in this freedom desires that every other gift shall enjoy the same.

QUESTION.—Does the Father, the Son, the Spirit, make selection of slavish men to promulgate the truth of God? K. D.

Roxbury, Mass.

EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS.

"The Spirit invites in the Bride,
Her heavenly Lord to descend;
And place her enthroned at His side,
In glory that never shall end."
C. Wesley.

Our desires pant after the end of this age, the passing away of the world at the great day of God.—Tertullian.

Let us every hour expect the kingdom of God in love and righteousness, because we know not the day of God's appearing.—Clement.

It were a self-contradictory thing for us who pray that the kingdom of God may quickly come, to be looking for long life here below.—Cyprian.

This (the advent) is what we wish and pray for when we say, "Thy kingdom come."—Augustine.

At the fall of Babylon, will begin that kingdom for which we continually pray, "Thy kingdom come." O, how good it will be for us to be there.—Joachim Abbas.

They—the first christians—deemed it a kind of apostasy not to sigh after the day of the Lord.—Massillon.

Let us therefore have a desire that this day may come quickly; let us hasten God forward; let us cry unto him day and night, Thy kingdom come.—Latimer.

There is but one trumpet remaining; therefore let us lift up our heads because our redemption draweth nigh.—Bullinger.

The scripture uniformly commands us to look forward with eager expectation to the coming of Christ, and defers the crown of glory that awaits till that period.—Calvin.

O God, grant that it may come without delay; I would readily eat up this necklace—of agates—to-day for the judgment to come tomorrow.—Luther.

Come forth out of Thy royal chambers, O Prince of all the kings of the earth. Put on the invisible robes of thy imperial majesty. Take up that unlimited sceptre which thy Almighty Father hath bequeathed thee. For now the voice of thy bride calls thee, and all creatures sigh to be renewed.—Milton.

The thoughts of the coming of the Lord are most sweet and joyful to me, so that if I were but sure that I should live to see it, and that the trumpet should sound, and the dead should arise, and the Lord appear before the period of my age, it would be the most joyful tidings to me in the world. O, that I might see His kingdom come!—Baxter.

This is the day I look for, and wait for, and have laid up all my hopes in. If the Lord return not, I profess myself undone.—Alleine.

Persuade yourself that the King is coming. Read his letter sent before him, Rev. xxii. 20. Behold, I come quickly. Wait with the wearied night-watch for the breaking of the eastern sky, and think that ye have not a morrow.—Rutherford.

Come, Lord Jesus! thus beats the pulse of the church, thus breathes that gracious spirit which actuates and informs the mystical body of Christ, and we should never be satisfied till we find such a spirit breathing in us, and causing us to look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ.—M. Henry.

We should pray for the coming of that day. Thus Christ has taught us to pray, Thy kingdom come. We must therefore pray for the day of judgment: for the kingdom of Christ will not come in all the glory of it before that blessed day.—Increase Mather.

He comes quickly: and I trust you can answer with a glad Amen that the warning is not troublesome or unpleasant to your ears, but rather that his coming, his certain, his speedy coming, is the object of your delightful hope, and of your longing expectation.—Doddridge.

Guilt is incurred by all those who lay hindrances in the way of the faithful, which prevent them from hearing their Lord's I come! and answering, Come, Lord Jesus.—J. Wesley.

Hasten, O Lord, that blessed time. O, let thy kingdom come!—Whitefield.

The Lord cometh! The heart of many an one thrills at this call. O, were he already here.—Krummacher.

Tell the church to hold on till Christ comes. —J. K. Lord.

There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.—Paul.

Gentle reader, do you love his appearing?

RUSKIN ON JUDAS.

John Ruskin, in the Crown of Wild Olive, characterizes in his trenchant style those who like to make money as imitators of Judas:

"We do great injustice to Iscariot, in thinking him wicked above all common wickness. He was only a common money-lover, and like all money-lovers, didn't understand Christ; couldn't make out the worth of him or meaning of him. He didn't want him to be killed. He was horror-struck when he found that Christ would be killed; threw his money away instantly, and hanged himself. How many of our present money-seekers, think you, would have the grace to hang themselves, whoever they killed? But Judas was a common, selfish, muddle-headed, pilfering fellow; his hand always in the bag of the poor, not caring for them. He didn't understand Christ, yet believed in him much more than most of us do; had seen him do miracles, thought he was quite strong enough to shift for himself, and he, Judas, might as well make his own little bye perquisites out of the affair. Christ would come out of it well enough, and he have thirty pieces. Now that is the money-seeker's idea, all over the world. He doesn't hate Christ, but can't understand him—he doesn't care for him—sees no good in that benevolent business; makes his own little job out of it, at all events, come what will. And thus, out of every mass of men, you have a certain number of bag-men—your 'free first' men, whose main object is to make money. And they do make it—make it in all sorts of unfair ways, chiefly by the weight and force of money itself, or what is called the power of capital; that is to say, the power which money, once obtained, has over the labor of the poor, so that the capitalist can take all its produce to himself except the laborer's food. That is the modern Judas' way of 'carrying the bag' and 'bearing what is put therein.'"

THE HOLY ASS OF VERONA.

One of the Continental papers observes that, while the Venetians are loudly complaining that the Austrians have taken away with them some of the treasures of art and antiquity which the city contained, the Veronese not only see their monks depart without a regret, but permit them to carry off also their most precious relic, the Holy Ass of Verona. The tradition about the ass is said to be as follows:—The ass on which our Saviour sat when he entered Jerusalem refused, after the Jews had accomplished their will of Him, any longer to dwell in the city. It therefore crossed the seas (which were miraculously made solid beneath its hoofs), went by Cyprus, Candia, Malta, Sicily, and, after various wanderings, at length took up its abode at Verona, where it lived for many years. From it is descended a race of remarkably fine asses, said still to abound in that city. When the holy animal died, a pompous funeral was accorded to it, but it was not buried. Its mortal remains were preserved and placed in the interior of an artificial ass made expressly for the purpose, and which was confided to the care of forty monks of the Convent of Notre Dame des Orgues. On certain occasions at Verona the ass was carried in procession round the city. A young girl represented the Holy Virgin sitting on the ass and with a child in her arms, followed by the monks with suitable banners. It is further profanely asserted, that formerly, after the mass was said, the priest, instead of uttering the usual Ite missa est, was wont to bray with all his strength, and that the brethren responded in chorus. Though the monks have departed and taken their ass with them, it does not appear that they were in any way compelled to do so by the new Government. They have set out for Austria, where it is understood they are promised recompense for their loss in earthly goods by the faithful in that country. This verifies the saying attributed to St. Francis de Sales: "The worldly prosperity of the church is like the beard—the closer they shave it the faster it grows."

THE WIDOW'S MITE.

Not long since, in visiting Philadelphia, we went to see the United States Mint, where all our bright gold and silver coins are made, as well as the copper and nickel pennies. We passed through long rooms where rollers of immense length, and all the other intricacies of manufacture, were in motion. The workmen all wear heavy mittens, and the floor of the smelting room is of iron plate, perforated with round holes to let the particles of precious metals dropped fall through to the cellar, and thus be preserved. Large numbers of men, women and girls were employed in the finishing room, polishing, counting and packing the treasure when ready for them. We purchased some of the bright gold and silver fresh from the minter's hands, declining the copper on account of its weight, and then passed on to the museum. There is an extensive collection of ancient coins. There were massive specimens of Greece and Rome, as well as of modern nations. There might have been seen the ancient "ring money" of Egypt.

Of all that I saw nothing impresses me so much as the little "mite" which the guide exhibited with exultation. It was a small black bit of stone or metal, about the size of a common garden pea, flattened at the side. It has no inscription, and was probably a Roman coin, as we cannot find that the Jews had anything smaller than the shekel, a silver piece of about the worth of our quarter dollar. These silver shekels were made in the time of the Maccabees. It was no doubt a very insignificant thing in the estimation of the Jews, when the widow cast two into the treasury of the Lord, which was about three cents of our money, one mite being seven English farthings, and a cent and a half of our currency. As I looked upon the little messenger that had been sent across the great sea to confirm our faith and freshen our remembrances, I resolved not to soon forget the lesson of the scriptures it taught. —American Baptist.

CONSIDER IT WELL.

Have you attentively considered the great crowning truth, that Jesus is soon coming? Are you prepared for the great and terrible events which are about to transpire? Are you a half-hearted professor? If so, your christianity will soon fail you. It is the pure in heart that shall see God; the meek that shall inherit the earth: the willing and obedient that shall eat of the good of the land, and none others. God grant that you may not reap the fearful consequences of this lukewarmness in the service of God, but that you may lay all upon the altar, and become wholly consecrated to his cause.

Are you one that trembles at the thought of God's approaching day of wrath? See! there is Christ, who died for you. Confess your guilt, turn from the error of your ways throw yourself unreservedly upon his mercy, and trust him alone for salvation. He will in no wise cast you out. Fear not; confess him now before the world, and he will confess you before the Father and the angels. O, make haste! delay not for a moment, lest thou be destroyed with the ungodly, for their destruction is certain and inevitable. Come and be reconciled to God while it is an accepted time, and a day of salvation. God is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

"Oh, prepare to meet thy God!" The great and notable day of the Lord is at hand. This generation must witness the coming of our Saviour. Any moment he may come. Is the bride prepared to receive him? Consider it well. O man! O woman! consider it well.—Selected.

CHRIST THE LORD OF NATURE.

BY KRUPTOS.

Christ is a person, a living person. God grant that none of us may still need to be taught who and what He is. Nature is a personification; one of those lively figures by which human language sums up under a sort of personal title a vast aggregate of things. Nature is the sum total of those material agencies which surround us, and of those agencies which God set going in creation, and has kept in orderly movement from the first day until now. Nature, in the sense in which we now use it, means the world of matter, and the laws (that is, the habits) of its working. Now we ought to think of Christ as the Lord of this nature; the Lord and Master of that world of matter in or amidst which man dwells, and of the laws or habits of its working. If holy scripture be listened to, He is so of right. For St. John says that, "all things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." And St. Paul, that, "God created all things by Jesus Christ." And again, that "all things were created by him and for him, and in him all things consist." All things have their coherence and their consistency in the same person, our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom God made them. And so, once more we read, in the Epistle to the Hebrews, that "by him God made the worlds;" and that Christ still "upholds all things by the word of his power." There is no lordship like that of creation. He who made, he who upholds all things, is the Lord of all things by the highest, the alone indefeasible title. Here then is the root and spring of that dominion which we ascribe to Christ in describing him as the Lord of Nature.

But our purpose is to assist ourselves in grasping this mighty reality, by seeing what our Lord Jesus Christ, in the days of his flesh, actually did upon earth in proof of this lordship. We would dwell upon some of those acts by which he claimed, and by which he exemplified his ownership of things created.

The recorded miracles of Christ wrought upon what is called external Nature, are, altogether, nine in number.

First, there is a class of miracles (three in number) which had their place in what we may call productive nature; in those processes which have to do with the supply of food for man's life. Seated at the marriage feast in Cana of Galilee, Jesus marks a deficiency in the provision of wine. He came, unlike the Baptist, eating and drinking; mingling in human society, and teaching us, by word and example, how therein to abide with God. In him there was nothing morose, nothing ungenial; with him there was a time for all things; yes, even for the unbending of the knit brow in cheerful converse with those whom he came to save. Therefore, instead of seizing the opportunity to enforce abstemiousness or abstinence, he rather seized the opportunity to exemplify kindliness; to remove the embarrassment of the host, and to furnish forth his table with miraculous stores. The attendants were bidden to fill a number of large vessels with water—that there might be no pretence afterwards of collusion or deceit—and from these ample pitchers, newly filled with water, the astonished servants find themselves drawing forth excellent wine. It was proof of the lordship of Christ over Nature. Those processes which He, upholding all things by the word of his power, commonly makes the condition of a successful vintage, He here by the same word dispenses with or precipitates. It is one of those proofs of power which the most ignorant and least spiritual can appreciate. As the Evangelist says, he thus "manifested forth his glory, and his disciples believed on him."

Surrounded for three long days in the wilderness, by a patient, and now hungering multitude, he at length bids his disciples to feed them from their scanty stores. With every preparation, calmly made for a meal, the orderly arrangement, the reclining posture, the preliminary blessing, he takes the five loaves, one by one, into his hands, breaks them into pieces, and, by means of his disciples, distributes to the five thousand guests. The satisfying of hunger is a thing which allows of no mistake; and the miracle was wrought in the open air, in broad daylight, and with numberless spectators, upon whose minds it acted with unusual strength. It was afterwards repeated on another occasion, under circumstances only just less (if less) astounding.

He who bringeth food out of the earth—"wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and bread to strengthen man's heart"—was here manifestly present in his own world, purposing to attract the attention of his creatures by the works of his hands to the words of his lips.

Next, there is a class of miracles (also three in number) proving the dominion of Christ over animated Nature.

After long discourse to the multitudes who thronged the beach, listening, Jesus bids the fishermen of the boat, in which he had sat speaking, to launch out into the deep water and let down their nets for a draught. They had toiled all the night, and had taken nothing; it seemed as though daylight and the stir of men promised less still; yet in obedience to a voice which carried authority as well as persuasion in its tones, at his word they will let down the net. This done, they enclose a vast multitude of fishes—and the net breaks. One of the men, afterwards to be a great Apostle, finds his sins brought to remembrance by a Presence so Divine, and even entreats his future Master to depart from him. And when that wrong use of the miracle is corrected, and the fearful soul has been reassured by the promise of work to be done hereafter, not in his poor calling as a fisherman, but in the hearts of men, then he and his friends join themselves finally to the company of Jesus; "when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all, and followed him."

The very same sign after his resurrection was employed to confirm and consolidate the same conviction. "Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast, therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes."

What was this but the exercise of the same power which still congregates the fishes of the sea here and not there in their season; bids them, by instinct, which the Creator only could have implanted, obey certain laws, and minister in definite ways to man's dominion? What was it but to say, not by word but by infallible signs, "The Lord of Nature is here—and I that speak unto you am he?"

Of the same kind was that other, less conspicuous, but even more singular miracle, which at the need of him who had on earth neither silver nor gold, brought to a particular spot a fish, having in his mouth a particular coin, required of one, who might, he said, as the very Son of the Great King, have claimed an exemption from that tribute. This, too, is an example of the lordship of Christ over animated Nature.

Thirdly, we have two remarkable examples of the sovereignty of Christ over elemental Nature; over winds and storms; over air and sea.

At the close of a long day's teaching, our Lord craved an interval of seclusion and repose. "Let us go over," he said to his disciples, "to the other side of the lake." As they made the transit, there came on a sudden storm. The wind rose, and the waves beat into the ship, till it was now full of water. Through all the tumult and agitation of the scene, Christ, the Lord of Nature, slept calmly. "He was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow." At last, reluctantly (it may be) and reverently, the disciples roused him; not without something of surprise in their tone, that he should so long have left them to suffer. "Carest thou not," they said, "that we perish?" "Lord, save us; we perish." Then he rose; stilled, first, the storm of terror within by the majestic remonstrance, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?" and then rebuked the wind and the raging of the water—as though seeing in their violence a token of that disturbing power of evil which had brought havoc and ruin everywhere into God's handiwork—and restored by that word of reproof the sea to its calm, and the wind to its silence. Well might they who witnessed that instant change in the most unruly elements of nature draw from it the wondering inference, "What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?"

At a later point in the Gospel history, on the night after the feeding of the five thousand, a yet more marvellous proof was given of the dominion of Christ our Lord over the elements which he created. After that weary day of instruction first, and then of bodily ministration to the vast multitudes which surrounded him, he had for once desired to be left alone, even by his disciples. His soul craved a protracted season of Divine communion. "When he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain, apart, to pray." Doubtless he foreknew also the lesson by which he was about to discipline his disciples to higher attainments in faith and grace. For the present, they were sent without him across the waters of that same well-known sea. Again they had experience of its liability to sudden tempests. "The ship was in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves." "The wind was contrary." "It was now dark," St. John adds, "and Jesus was not come to them. And the sea arose by reason of a great wind that blew." From his mountain solitude, Christ marked them with a considerate eye; marked, and felt for them, but as yet interposed not. He saw here a needful training; a discipline of fear and patience, not for the present joyous but grievous, yet out of which should be perfected, afterwards, a peaceable fruit of righteousness. "He saw them toiling in rowing;" and till the fourth, the latest, watch of the night he came not to their rescue. And when he came, how did he manifest himself? In a way most unexpected, and most startling. "In the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea." By the power of his own almighty will, he constrained the liquid, wavering water to support the footsteps of its Creator. The disciples seeing him thus walking on the sea, and apparently (St. Mark adds) purposing to pass by them, thought they saw a spirit, and cried out for fear. But it was his own voice, of power and love, which spake and said to them, "Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid." And then, passing with characteristic impetuosity from despondency to over-courage, Peter asks that a proof of his Lord's presence may be given in enabling him also to walk safely upon the deep; and he, who afterward gave a doubting apostle the sign which he demanded of his risen life, though he seemed to chide him for demanding it—and who is pleased sometimes to vouchsafe to doubters now a token which they ought not to require of his living grace and love—so, here also, for the more confirmation of the faith, bade Peter come to him, as he desired, upon the water; and when faith failed, and fear led to sinking, and he who had been so brave to come, yet, seeing the wind boisterous, had to cry out in terror, "Lord, save me," still again that prayer, too, was heard; "Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" What a parable for all time! the sinking of courage through unbelief, and the restoration of safety through reviving faith! "When they were come into the ship, the wind ceased. Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying, Of a truth, thou art the Son of God." It was the inference of truth and soberness from the manifestation of the lordship of Christ over elemental nature.

In the last place, we have one example—one only amongst all the nine—of the sovereignty of Christ in the domain of what may be called morbid nature; over those processes of disease and decay by which Nature herself bears testimony to man's sin and fall and ruin.

Our Lord, passing from his night's sojourn at Bethany to his day's work in the faithless and now doomed city, observed at some distance a fig-tree, already, at that early season of the year, clad with leaves, and therefore, much more, promising fruit; for in the fig-tree, it is said, the fruit appears before the leaves. This tree seemed, as it were, to make an unusual profession. Before the regular season it displayed those leaves which were commonly the index of existing fruit. Other fig-trees at that season had neither leaves nor fruit; this single tree had the one, and thereby professed to offer also the other. But when the Saviour approached it, he found leaves only. Not then for being fruitless, but for being false, he took it as the type of a nation and of a life. Even such was Jerusalem, the holy city; even such was the degenerate house of Israel; full of profession, empty of performance; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. He took, then, this tree—this thing, remember—this thing, towards which therefore there could be no cruelty or unkindness done—as a type of what Israel was, and of what should befall it under the hand of God's judgement. "No man," he said to it, "eat fruit of thee hereafter forever." "His disciples heard it;" and when the next morning they tried again, for the first time afterwards in daylight, the same path from Bethany to Jerusalem, they were eye-witnesses of the fulfilment of that sentence; "they saw the fig-tree dried up from the roots;" they saw, in other words, the divine sovereignty of Christ, as before over the productive, and over the animated, and over the elemental parts of nature; so here, over its morbid workings—over that department of nature which bears witness to a fall from an original perfection, and to an infection of sin and death which has spread itself over that face of creation upon which God looked in the beginning and pronounced it to be very good.

"Christ the Lord of Nature." It was necessary that the Son of God, coming into this world for the redemption and salvation of men, should prove himself, and his mission, by many infallible and irresistible signs. It was in mercy as well as in wisdom that he furnished this demonstration. If he had not openly asserted, and openly claimed, and openly demonstrated his divinity, man might have refused the message for the simple want of having his attention turned perforce to the Messenger. What could the simple peasant, or fisherman of Galilee have known of a Gospel which offered only philosophical or metaphysical satisfactions as to its authority and its origin? It pleased God, designing to instruct, to bless and to save, to give proofs of that design intelligible to the most ignorant, and level to the humblest of mankind. What could be so forcible, to guests seated at a feast, or to multitudes hungering in a desert, as the production before their eyes of a supply of needed wine, or the offering to their distress of an ample provision of bread? What could be more impressive, to a company of hungry fishermen, who had spent their night in fruitless and vexatious efforts after a draught which came not, than the simple direction where to cast, and the instant experience of a superabundant reward for obeying it? What could be more overwhelming, in its simple and direct argument for the Divinity of the Presence, in which they stood, than to find a tempest, which had lain heavy all the night upon experienced mariners, in those waters, stilled in a moment by the authoritative word of one who, in outward appearance, was a man like themselves? or to see the uniform experience of long years contradicted, to their very senses, by the unstable element of water being made to support the footsteps of a person in flesh and blood, corporal and material, as concerning his human nature, even as they? These things, and such as these, are indications of God's working, such as it was not more wise than merciful to accord in the first instance to an unlettered and unphilosophical, but on that very account the more straightforward and competent tribunal. Without miracle, revelation could hardly have gained its first footing in a busy, preoccupied, and unspiritual world. Miracle is God's call to attention; God's token and signal that he is about to speak.

We might go further, and say, that, if Christ was indeed and truth the very and eternal Son of God, it could scarcely be but that he should assert here his dominion over the works of God's creation, and over the processes of God's providence. We do not ask any one to begin with the miracles; to regard power, and still more the record of power centuries afterwards, as the one irresistible proof of the truth and Divine origin of a revelation. This has been done—done perhaps too long—done certainly in this age without conviction. But this we say; that, when Christ has been proved to come from God by his words of Divine wisdom, and by his character of Divine goodness, then we expect of him the third seal, which is the seal of omnipotent strength. Then things which would have been unnatural, and almost indemonstrable, in another, become natural and almost to be expected and anticipated in Him. That Christ, being Divine, showed himself to be so by visible and sensible evidences, needs just as much and just as little proof as any fact of history or any of the commonest incidents of this common life. He who is the Son of God will probably do God's works—works of creative, of omnipotent, strength—as well as speak God's words, and live God's life below.

Yet let us be careful how we speak of miracles, such as these on which we have dwelt, as if they were indeed contradictions of God's natural laws, or contraventions of God's providential operations. It has been well and truly urged, that, on the contrary, each one of our Lord's miracles was rather the reparation of a broken law, than the breach of a law obeyed. With one exception—needing a word by itself—every single miracle now touched upon was a restoration of a harmony impaired, the removal (for the moment) of a discord introduced, by sin. What is want, what is hunger, what is fear, what is a raging sea or a howling tempest, but something which breaks in upon the sweet concord and unity of the mighty universe as God made it? When Christ wrought a miracle upon nature, it was to give a glimpse of some good thing lost, of some perfect thing deteriorated, of some joyous and glorious thing spoiled and ruined, by reason of the fall, and to be brought in again and given back to man through the Redemption which is in him. It was as the Creator that he put aside for the moment one of nature's bad habits; because that habit itself testified of sin, and because he would promise deliverance for "the creation itself, also from the bondage of corruption, into the glorious liberty of the children of God." And if there was just one exception to this rule of his miraculous working; just one instance in which he interposed his omnipotence, not to heal, but to destroy; yet even there, even in the one miracle of the fruitless fig-tree, he was ministering to a spiritual if not a physical harmony; he was teaching a lesson, in a lifeless object, for the warning and edification of men, and in the same degree evoking out of a present disarrangement and disorganization the seed of a future and eternal reconciliation.

In the miracles which attest the sovereignty of Christ over nature, we have one of the surest grounds of comfort for christians.

There can be no greater comfort to christian persons than to feel that their Lord and Saviour is the sovereign of the universe in which they dwell. When they are exposed to any of the manifold perils which befall us through the world that is seen; when they are in danger by land or by sea; when tempests shake their homes, or want threatens their families; when they are compelled to ask, "What shall I eat? or what shall I drink?" how strong the consolation which tells of a Saviour omnipotent over Nature herself, without whom not a sparrow falls to the ground, and who can at his pleasure turn the very wilderness into a pasture, or allay the raging of the elements against his people, his chosen!

And surely in those more desolate wants which depress, and in those fiercer storms which agitate the mind, they find comfort, neither feeble nor fanciful, in the record of his marvellous working who fed famishing thousands as with bread from heaven, and said to the tempestuous sea, "Peace, be still!" He who did the less can do the greater; he who found bread for the body, he who stilled the outward storm, can both give himself by his Holy Spirit for the strengthening and refreshing of the man, and say to the restless cares, the eager longings, and the raging passions of the inner being, "It is I; be not afraid"—"It is I; my grace is sufficient for thee" "It is I; peace, be still!"

Finally, that which has comfort in it for the true christian has also (is it not ever so?) warning and admonition for the careless and the sinful. Do not imagine, it says to them, that the power of Christ over you is all future. Do not think only—though it be indeed worthy of all your thought—of the life lost when this life is ended. Already, he whom you are resisting is the Lord of Nature. Already it is in him and by his daily sustentation that you live and move and have your being. Upon his blessing or upon his curse depends already all that makes it a happiness or a misery for you to possess existence. If he gives not his benediction, food itself, light and air, rest and waking, can bring you no abiding enjoyment. These things, too, are his; these things, as well as the comfort, and the support, and the blessedness of a spiritual being. The agencies of Nature, as well as of grace, of Providence as of the Spirit, are in the hands of Christ. How fearful, if you be not his—if you be not his, but his enemy! "Christ the Lord of Nature"—do not those few words of themselves tell us how it is that christian godliness has the promise of the life that now is, as much as of the life to come? Is it not because a christian can look upwards, through all that he has, to a loving heart and to a loving hand in heaven? because a christian sees in all that he here possesses, the assurance of a Saviour's love and the foretaste of an eternal inheritance? because a christian, being the servant and the friend of a known and trusted Redeemer, can receive in that which is given an intended blessing, and recognize in all that is witholden a no less intended mark of love?

Yes, "the earth is the Lord's, and all that therein is," and therefore they only can be at peace on earth who are at one with its Owner. God give us all grace to seek him now, through the Atonement and the Propitiation, that we may know him also as the Lord of the living, and as the life of the dead.

THE LAW AND THE COVENANT.

BY JACOB GRIM.

We know very little of the purposes of God, in the history of the world. The author of the Hebrews sums up but very few before the time of Abraham. Here God began to unfold his purposes concerning the children of men. From all we can gather from the scriptures prior to this, the promises seemed confined to the present state of things. Adam's condition seemed to relate to this, or that state of things which then existed. And during the time of Noah, the Lord said, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh." "The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them." In Gen. vii. 4, God says, He will blot out from off the face of the earth every living substance that I have made. Here God deals with man as though he was no more to him than the rest of the living things around him. But amongst this corrupt multitude he finds one with whom he can start the world anew. I am asked here if the purpose of God had failed in the creation of man? I answer, God has not yet told me what his purpose was. All that I know is, God said it repented him that he had made man. And he did the next best thing he could do; which was to destroy that which he was sorry he had made. Here God makes a covenant with Noah, which was that he would no more destroy the earth with a flood. This covenant was made unconditionally with every living creature.

God has not developed his plan, so far as we can learn, even at this time. After selecting Noah for his righteousness, the world soon became again corrupt. And we find the Lord appeared unto Abraham and said unto him, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee." And we read that the Lord led him into the land of Canaan. "And the Lord appeared unto Abram and said, 'Unto thy seed will I give this land.' So far, this looks like a temporal promise. But in chapter xiii. 15 we read, "For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." Here the purpose of God begins to unfold. And in chap. xvii. 7 we have the covenant. "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, in their generations, for an everlasting covenant; to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee." And God said unto Abraham, Thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, thou, and thy seed after thee, in their generations. "This is my covenant, which ye shall kee , between me and you, and thy seed after thee. Every man child among you shall be circumcised."

Again he says, "My covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant." "And the uncircumcised man child . . . . . that soul shall be cut off from his people; he hath broken my covenant." Here we have the covenant all described, and the purpose so far unfolded; and so far as here developed no man can have any part in the everlasting covenant, unless he is circumcised. This covenant was a conditional covenant; and an individual covenant.

Exodus xix. 5, "Now, therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Here is also a conditional covenant made with the nation. Hence, we will call this a national covenant. The words of the covenant follow on in this chapter and the following, and all the people agree to all the words of the covenant.

The conditions are, "If ye will obey my voice and keep my covenant, THEN ye shall be to me a peculiar treasure above all people." This is the condition. On the other hand, if they would not keep his commandments, what then? Exodus xxiv. 7, "And Moses took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of all the people: and they said: all that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." Here is the confirmation of the covenant with Moses as mediator.

We find in Ex. xxxii. this very people who had covenanted with God to obey him in all things, and one was that they should make no graven image, as soon as Moses' back was turned, they, with Aaron at the lead, making for themselves a calf, and call it their God. And although God promised them to make them a peculiar people above all nations, IF they obeyed him, he asks Moses to let him alone that he may consume them.

In Ex. xxxiv. Moses again appeared in the presence of the Lord, "And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands and forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin; and that will by no means clear the guilty." Here then, is God's law, laid down so clear and so plain that it is impossible to misunderstand it. Shall we then, when we find a covenant so plainly written out upon the pages of scripture, ignore the law, as though it never existed, and go back to Adam to seek a law that we know but little about? This covenant with Abram was a covenant of faith in God's promise, made with him individually; and he was obedient under it, and likewise his son Isaac; but for some time Jacob showed no disposition to follow in the footsteps of his father; and his children were anything but God-fearing men; and as they began to multiply they were like the nations around them; and even forgot the everlasting covenant; for when they came out of the land of Egypt they had to be circumcised; and even Joshua was compelled to do it the second time. Josh. v. 2. And in order to keep them from mingling with the nations around them, God placed them under another covenant, and gave them a form, or species of will-worship, and promised them, if they would be obedient, he would give them the land for an inheritance.

In Jeremiah xi. 8, we find the Lord is charging the same people with breaking his covenant and disobeying his commandments; and he threatens to bring upon them all the words of the covenant. Now Israel having consented to this covenant, and agreeing to comply with all the conditions thereof, we find them, as a nation, involved in all the calamities that were threatened under that covenant. And one of two things is quite aparent to my mind, God must execute all the conditions of that covenant or find some method of taking it out of the way. Hence, we hear Jesus saying, "one jot or tittle of the law shall in no wise pass until all be fulfilled." "Then said (he), Lo I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God." (Then said He) "He taketh away the first (covenant) that he may establish the second (covenant). Now, it shall be our object to show, that Jesus was made under this covenant for the express purpose of taking it out of the way. The covenant made with Abraham was an individual covenant to be kept or obeyed by each individual for himself. The covenant of Moses was a national covenant, and could not be kept by individuals in their individual capacity; but must be kept by the nation in their national capacity.

DIVINE BLESSINGS.—It is good to see our blessings as they issue from grace and mercy. It much commends any blessing to see the love and favor of God in it, which is more to be valued than the blessing itself.—Gibbs.

The Appearing of Christ.

Among those who are looking for the advent of Christ, there is diversity of opinion as to the manner in which it is to take place; some contending that it will be secretly, the world knowing nothing of it until it is established in Jerusalem; while others expect him to descend from his present abode in the heavens, as soon as his work as the great High Priest is finished, and in an instant make the world aware of his presence. Many theories are presented built on each of these views. We once heard a preacher who prided himself on his scholarship, cite Christ's words as found in Matt. xxiv. 27, "For as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be," as evidence that it would be so rapid that no one could know of it. Like others having much learning, he allowed his judgment to be formed from a mistranslated word. Lightning in that verse should be light, as "an unlearned" man may perceive by the connection "from the east even unto the west," which lightning is not apt to do, but sunlight always does. The context shows, however, that Christ in that chapter (Matt. xxiv.) is instructing us of the clear, open and unmistakable manner he will signalize his return, and not necessarily its rapidity. He there warns them that they must not be deluded by any declaration or theory that he will come to any part of the world secretly, as all such announcements would be made by enemies, and says, "Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders [such are evidently yet to appear] insomuch that if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold I have told you before, wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold he is in the desert [Jerusalem, Joppa, or elsewhere], go not forth; behold he is in the secret chambers, believe it not." Why Lord?

"For as the lightning [sunlight] that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of Man be in his day." Luke xxii. 24. What will follow until he consummates his work of establishing his kingdom "under the whole heaven," we do not intend to discuss here. The point we make is the unmistakable character of Christ's return to earth—whether it takes an instant, day, month or year—the world at the time will not be in doubt of the fact, both saint and sinner, because it is the conspicuousness that Jesus wishes to impress on us. We may say, however, of the righteous, that they immediately, both the dead and the living, ascend at once to the Saviour in the heavens. Matt. xxiv. "Then shall two be in the field, the one shall be taken the other left." "I tell you in that night, there shall be two in one bed; the one shall be taken, the other left." Luke xvii. 34. Paul also in corroboration says (2 Cor. xv. 51, 62): "Behold I will show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep [die], but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed." Also, 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17, 18. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we who are alive shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words." It is also very evident that not only the sense of sight will be made aware of his presence, but that of hearing also. Paul's language can admit of no other interpretation. Against such testimony as we have cited, it seems unjustifiable to offer any obscure language of the Old Testament prophecies to explain it away and substitute something directly the opposite. If we are faithful servants we shall be standing waiting for him. "For in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh." We must "wait for his Son from heaven," that we may ever be with him when he comes. W. M.

Orthodoxy going after Strange Gods.

Austin Phelps, a writer of note, and Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, in a recent work entitled "The New Birth," lays down this proposition: "In the nature of conversion there is nothing that we know of which forbids its occurrence in a disembodied state. If we could know that probation encloses the intermediate state of the departed, we might conceive of regeneration in all its majesty, as experienced in that land of pure spirits. Without a form to signalize it, without a whisper to proclaim it, there would be joy in heaven." One of the regular contributors of the Independent thinks it justifiable for christians to invoke the assistance of dead saints, on the ground that if their spirits are in heaven they are as interested in their friends as when on earth in the flesh, and as their prayers here availed with God, they must now be even more effectual. Every thinking man who assumes that the soul is an immortal consciousness, finds it necessary to devise schemes of the above kind to escape the difficulties the primal error leads to. But each of these human devices breeds new difficulties, until many, in despair, give up their faith entirely. Professor Phelps, in making the above remark, shows that he does not know how to dispose of the disembodied spirit. He has a host with him in his difficulty. The purgatory of the Catholics is a natural sequence of their assumption of a disembodied state, and to that or worse they are hastening. W. M.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 20, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"Who is Kruptos?"

This question has often been asked, but we have never been able to answer it till since the author of those articles has fallen "asleep in Jesus." Never, up to that time, had we the slightest suspicion that Geo. F. Storrs, our only son, was the author. We were never more surprised than when his wife informed us that our sleeping son was "Kruptos." Our heart had been made to rejoice by his strong faith, manifested in the dying struggle, as he exclaimed amidst deepest agony of body, "Blessed Jesus—eternal life;" and added, "The Lord will take care of you all," with a few other expressions to his sorrowing wife, his mother, his only sister, and to ourself. With our own hands we closed his eyes, to open again only at the resurrection. This sad office was scarcely finished when we were informed by his wife, that we were not yet aware of the greatness of our loss—that our son was the author of the articles signed Kruptos; and that he was stimulated to write and prepare them, to see if he could accustom himself to prepare matter of interest for the Herald of Life, which he dearly loved, so that he might help his father and lighten his labor in his old age. He sought not to be known, and would never put himself forward in the things of religion; for, he had the greatest abhorrence of anything like hypocrisy in so sacred a matter. The fear of professing to be what he was not, and thereby to bring a reproach on the cause of the "blessed Jesus," kept him always in a retired position; and nothing grieved him more than to learn that any of those who professed faith in the doctrine of "Life only in Christ" had failed to show the power of that truth in their life and conversation. Judge, then, of our double sorrow and joy on learning the above facts. Joy to know his mind had been thus occupied for months past; and sorrow, to think we were to be denied the intended help.

The last of the "Kruptos" articles was published in No. 14 of the present volume; and to it we appended the following "Note:"

"We are asked, 'Who is Kruptos?' Our answer is found in Judges xiii. 18. 'Why askest thou thus after' his 'name, seeing it is secret?' The reader knows all about it that the Editor does. We look at the matter, but know not who the writer is. If he is an inhabitant of the upper world, we are glad to give place to his interesting communications. Let us try to profit by them."

This note was written a few days after our son's last sickness commenced. The articles all came to us through the post office, and without any signature. We appended "Kruptos," which is a Greek word signifying secret. We suspected some others, but never suspected our son as being the author. But the fact, now revealed to us, has been a matter of thankfulness to our "blessed Jesus," that He reserved this cup of consolation for our heart in this trying hour. Our son was made doubly dear to us by this knowledge; and our loss is the more deeply felt; but the consolation is also double. Much as we loved him, and much as we know he loved us, what could a loving father desire more than the evidence, God, in His covenant love, has given us, that our beloved one has been "made perfect through suffering," and rests in the hands of Him who has the "keys of death and the grave," and who is "the resurrection and the life?"

In his last sickness he could talk but little, and his sufferings were great; and he scarcely slept at all during the thirty-three days and nights of that sickness. Not a murmur nor an expression of "O, dear," either now or for years past, in his sufferings, has escaped from him. He was "an example," in this matter, "of patience." To the grace of God in the "blessed Jesus" we ascribe this victory; and to Him we desire to give all the glory now and forever.

He has left a deeply afflicted wife, father, mother, and an only sister; but, no children. For the first time, in forty two years, has our family circle been broken by "the last enemy." Great has been the mercy and love of God our Redeemer and Life giver unto us. We bless and give him glory. Our prayer has ever been for this son, and each member of our household, "Lord bring us to life eternal at whatever cost, whatever else is denied us." Nor did we dare, during his sickness, pray otherwise for his recovery than to say, "Lord, if it can consist with Thy purposes of wisdom and love towards him, and towards us all, restore him, and prolong his life here." We bow without a murmur or complaint, yea, with joy, to our heavenly Father's appointment; knowing that He hath done all things well. Our gracious God is too wise to err, and too loving to be unkind; and what we "know not now, we shall know hereafter." We have felt to sympathize with Abraham when called to offer up his "only son, whom he loved;" and we have felt some of Abraham's faith when he "Accounted that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead." He "sleeps in Jesus" till our Life-giver shall use His "keys" to open the "gates of the grave" and call him forth; and that time is nigh, "even at the door." So, hail the blessed morning when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise." Then we expect to meet him again; and not till then. Then "death shall be swallowed up in victory, and God shall wipe away all tears." "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

After our son fell asleep, we found he had left two more articles, which had not been sent us. One of these our readers will find on the first page of this week's issue. How much of the articles were his own orignal thoughts, and how much borrowed from his reading, we have no means of knowing; nor is it important that we should; since, if borrowed, they were his by adoption, and clothed in his own form of thought, and presented to us in manuscript. The last that was published previous to this date was on "The Birth of Christ." To this our "Note" was attached. That note we do not know that he ever saw, as he was too sick to read or hear reading when it appeared.

Our friends who have written us words of sympathy, will accept our thanks for their kind remembrance of us in this day of sorrow and triumph—for our heart doth triumph in the Lord, and in his power and grace in the "blessed Jesus." All the treasures of earth, and all its honors would be lighter than vanity compared with the divine consolation poured into our heart during this trial of our faith We magnify God for his grace in Jesus Christ to us and ours, in this time of need. We know we have had the prayers of many; and they have been answered. "Praise God with me, and let us exalt His name together." May you all have like consolation in your trials, as our covenant God and Life giver has imparted to us. We give glory to God and the Lamb. O, how precious is our faith, of "Life only in Christ," to us, in this time when earthly things are seen in their true light! How wise, how kind, how loving is our gracious Lord. Who would not love Him, if they knew Him as we do this day? O, that His glorious character may be made to appear to all in its true light, and that the dishonor done to his name by the theology of the age may soon be known no more. Life—eternal life—life from the dead only in and through the "blessed Jesus," to die no more, is the grand truth of the gospel of God, through his Son, and by his Holy Spirit.

"Kruptos."

The dread enemy, whose course we hope is well nigh run, has again entered our midst, and sorrow, loneliness, and disappointed hopes mark his footsteps. It was not from the gay and bouyant throng of youth, who know not the stern realities of life, and that it has many a false idol, that he chose his victim. Nor was it from among them who, with trembling limbs and forms bent with age, suffering, and toil, betokening a warfare nearly ended, are almost ready to welcome the quiet sleep of death; but from the early meridian of life, the fulness of manhood, he hath taken a husband, son, and brother. Although these sorrowing ones, our beloved Editor and his dear family, are keenly appreciative of every expression of human sympathy, they know well how to draw, in full measure, consolation and comfort from the eternal fountain, him who is their joy, their stay, their hope, their all.

"Kruptos," our fellow laborer, has passed away. He has fallen into that sleep

"From which none ever wake to weep."

We mourn his loss, and sorrow that we shall no more see him, through time, nor be permited to receive from him, through the columns of the Herald, that encouragement and instruction which was our wont; yet dear to us all is the sweet assurance that, standing in the darkest spot of this dark vale of tears, he could look over and beyond the dark valley of the shadow of death and see his title clear to an inheritance in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, whose praise was on his lips while he had yet strength to lisp that precious name. He lies down in the late watch of the night, and his slumber will be short. The morning of that happy day, which we all pray for when we say "thy kingdom come," will soon dawn; for the Lord of life and glory will ere long appear. He will soon have fulfilled his mission in the "holy of holies," whither he hath entered to make intercession for his people, and with his angels treading the burning pathway of his glory he will come to speak the word of power, and obedient thereto the sleeping saints shall come forth, decked with the bloom of immortal youth, while the living ones shall be "clothed upon," and mortality "swallowed up of life." May we all hold fast unto the end, and thus be permitted, like our brother, to experience the confident assurance that we shall be "accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead."

As some of our friends wish to look at those articles again, they will find them in the following order:

"Christ our Peace," July 11, and August 22, 1866.

"The Light of the World," Oct. 10, 1866.

"Good will to Men," Oct. 31, 1866.

"God's good will," Nov. 14, 1866.

"The Fall and its Reversal," Dec. 5, 1866.

"Trust in the Lord Forever," Dec. 12, 1866.

"The Comm n Duties," Dec. 12, 1866.

"The Birth of Christ," Jan. 9, 1867.

One appears in this week's issue, viz: "Christ the Lord of Nature;" and the last, on "Glory to God," will appear next week.

A New and Invaluable Work.

Those who pretend to be learned have not failed to raise the cry that the believers in No Life out of Christ "do not understand the original languages of the scriptures." This, as an unqualified statement, is not true; but if it were, God has taken the work into his own hands and raised up men to wipe out this attempted stigma. Our opponents, instead of looking at our arguments fairly, have endeavored to bring us into contempt by what may be called ridicule; representing us as ignorant of the true meaning of Bible language; forgetting that we possessed the same means of knowing the sense of scripture they enjoyed; for, "not many mighty, not many noble" ever were "called" to promulgate the truth of God; but "God hath chosen" what proud and conceited men have called "the foolish things of the world to confound the wise," &c., "that no flesh should glory in his presence." The work of the triumph of truth is, mainly, by instruments which the pride of men leads them to hold in contempt, that the excellency of its "power may be" seen to be "of God, and not of us." Yet, at times, he has raised up men, to confirm the labors of his more humble servants, who were powerful in the field against the learned perverters of truth or deceitful in their pretences of superior knowledge of the original scriptures. So it has now come to pass. While such men as Landis, Alger, Bartlett, and others of more or less note, have put forth their strength, by a show of learning and philosophy, God has put it into the heart of a layman to show the teaching of the Bible, out of its own mouth, making the word its own interpreter. This is a work of over 600 pages, octavo: and is thus announced:

"The Theology of the Bible: itself the teacher, and its own interpreter. Five versions of the Old Testament and four of the New. compared with the originals. By Oliver Spencer Halsted, ex-Chancellor of the State of New Jersey."

The only Preface to this work is the following:

"A new English version of all the Bible, however much to be desired, is not necessary for the development of what most concerns us to know,—the will and purpose of God in reference to mankind. The meaning of a few of the leading words of Scripture, in fact of any one of several of them, makes His revelation, in that respect, plain, simple, and harmonious from beginning to end; just what was certainly intended; easy to be understood by the faculties he himself gave, and to which it is addressed.

"The words I refer to I take from the English version. They are the words: soul; spirit; ghost; death; paradise; hell; satan; devil; heaven; and the word and subject, resurrection; and to whom the promise is made of becoming a child of the resurrection.

"The Bible is its own dictionary; its own interpreter. By its various modes of expressing the same idea, it so fixes the meaning of each of these words, as to render that meaning incontrovertible."

Ex-Chancellor Halsted is a man of years; a member of the Episcopal church; and thoroughly versed in the original of the scriptures. If therefore human authority is of any value we may find it in his work; and the value of this work outweighs all mere human speculations, from the fact that it is mostly the exact language of scripture as found in the original of several versions.

The work is especially fitted to convince intelligent and sincere men of learning that the theology of this age—called "orthodox"—is as far from the theology of the Bible, as superstition is distant from a revelation from God. Judge Halsted's work employs so many words from the Hebrew without the vowels that it cannot be read, by the unlearned, with so much interest, perhaps not with so much profit, as it would have been if he had supplied them. And, then, his translation of the original, leaving the words in the same order as they stand in the original, will make it less interesting to the common people than if he had transposed the words, as is usual in translations. With studious care, however, this is no real obstacle to the understanding of the text. The work is one to be studied, like the Bible itself; and will be of little use to such as refuse to study. We hope it will be studied by all who prefer truth to tradition. It establishes beyond all reasonable controversy, that none but the righteous dead will ever be revived from the dead: that life from the dead to the wicked was not known to the patriarchs, prophets, nor to the inspired men of the New Testament: the righteous—the just—the straight—the upright, only, will come from the gates of death: to all others, "death is a finality." We have neither time nor space to enlarge this week.

The work, we suppose, can be had of the author at Newark, N. J. The price we do not know, but suppose it must be about $3.

An Apology.—The poetry, on the last page, is republished by special request. It was published during our son's last sickness, taken from a number of items he gave us just before that time.

We also owe an apology to the children for the lack of their Department this week; but we know they will forgive us, when they think of the cares that have been upon us. May the Lord, the "blessed Jesus," bless all the little ones who look into our columns; and guide them all to life eternal.

Our Correspondents, likewise, must pardon us for what may seem to them neglect. The fact is, but a small portion of the communications have yet been examined, for lack of time and health. We will do all we can, and as fast as we can.

The Salem Discussion.—An article on the discussion between Eli. Preble and Rufus Wendell, which occurred some time since, on the resurrection of the wicked dead, is received from Br. Wendell, but too late for this week's issue. It will appear next week.

Hide not the Light.

BY L. C. T.

When society is agitated by those struggles which God institutes for the working out of religious reform, besides the bold, earnest, unflinching advocates whose love of truth and faith in God enable them to brave all opposition, however severe, and to defy the power of impious denunciation, there is always a class of christians who sympathize with the work of progress, and desire its success, but who regard it only from a creaturely stand-point, calculating the effect of this or that step, fearing lest they should do something which might impair their fancied "influence for good" upon the minds of others. They know that much of gospel truth has been supplanted by gross theological errors, and they desire to see it reinstated; but, under the plea of guarding their field of usefulness, they tax their ingenuity to present the truth in language so skilfully arranged as to partake largely of ambiguity; judging, apparently, that the presentation of plain, simple truth would shock the delicate sensibilities of their fellow christians; as if gospel truths were so uncouth and objectionable as to require to be polished and trimmed down before they are presentable. The fact, however, doubtless is, that this class hope by a little maneuvering to accomplish the difficult feat of, at once, discharging their duty to God and preventing all innovations upon their darling popularity. Vain ambition. Each religious sect has established for itself a sort of theological turnpike upon which all its members are expected unitedly to travel, and, therefore, they whose duty it becomes to acquaint the throng of existent errors, dangers, and delusions, will be compelled to submit to the sundering of fond ties, or prove recreant to divinely confided trusts. I would not be understood as charging any protestant denomination with a practical denial of the right of its members to the full exercise of religious freedom; oh, no. None of them have the semblance of an objection to any indivual thinking as he pleases, provided he thinks right; a point which they find no difficulty whatever in determining to their complete satisfaction; for, as it is assumed that the majority think right, it consequently follows that, they who think differently think wrong; and to allow them to think aloud would be to open a door to the admission of 'damnable heresies." The disaffected ones are accordingly subjected to a process not unlike that known as "binding over to keep the peace." And have not these christian people f r all such attempts to control the thoughts of others, many eminent examples? Did not papal Rome long strive to convince the mind by torturing the body? Our pilgrim fathers were compelled to leave their native country because of the observance of a similar practice there, but having served an apprenticeship in the school of persecution, did they not soon show themselves masters of the art? The culture of the age has wrought a modification in the rigor of the practice, but a relic of the barbarous custom still prevails. The existing diversity of religious sentiments is proof of the kind of success that has ever attended such undertakings. One might wonder that religionists do not, by the light of past experiences, recognize the existence of some of their egregious follies, did he not know that they are persistently blind to still plainer facts. It is probably through dread of surveillance and the oft-repeated charge of "heretic," that many seek to let their light shine in such way and to such extent as not to bring themselves or their opinions into disrepute, but like the multitude of others who have attempted the pursuance of that kind of policy, they have signally failed and been compelled at last to proclaim the truth plainly and faithfully, or have shut their eyes to its light and fallen back into darkness far more terrible than that which beclouded their minds before the light of truth was received. If "the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other." If, therefore, any prefer the adoration of their fellow men to the blissful consciousness of having discharged the duties of faithful soldiers of the cross, they have their reward; but to what little purpose they have labored many will but too well learn when he of whom they are ashamed, will be ashamed of them before the Father and his holy angels. The love of praise is well, but when professed followers of Jesus unrein it; when they allow it to override their nobler impulses and crush out or dwarf their spiritual natures, stifling the yearnings and promptings of the spirit, and demanding, in its insatiate cravings, disobedience to the most obvious of Jehovah's requirements, what pitiable objects do they become. What is all the reproach that can be heaped upon us, in a whole lifetime, compared with the glory that shall soon be revealed. Our blessed Lord did not utter meaningless words when he said, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." If, then, the Lord be our God, let us serve him, unto whatever he may lead. Why should people so highly esteem their labors? Though a man speaks whole volumes, if it receive not the blessing of God, it passes for naught; but a simple word fitly spoken may be sanctified unto the accomplishing of much good. Let us, then, implicitly trust God, and press forward in the work to which we are assigned, letting our light shine brightly.

Was Paul Inspired?

This may appear a strange question; but I will explain. A few months ago, while listening to a sermon preached by a highly esteemed brother, I was somewhat startled in hearing him make a remark very much as follows. In speaking of the promise made to Abraham, he said: He did say, "unto seeds as of many," Paul to the contrary notwithstanding. He then said that, Paul in writing a letter to a church was just as liable to be mistaken as anybody else. Now, if this is true, it follows as a matter of course, that Paul's letters were not written by inspiration of the Spirit of God. That being the case, they are of no more authority than the writings or opinions of any good man. It is true, Paul being a good man, would aim to tell the truth. So would every other good man. But all good men are fallible, if uninspired; so was Paul All good men aim to get their theological faith correct, and strictly in harmony with the word of God; but they are all, notwithstanding their honest intentions in this direction, imperfect in judgment; consequently, no uninspired man, good though he may be, has ever been able to originate a perfect system of doctrine. If Paul be not inspired, it will be entirely unsafe to adopt any doctrine put forth by him, unless we can know from some more reliable source that it is in harmony with truth. But if we impeach Paul in this matter, we must also reject Peter. For Peter declares all Paul's epistles to be scripture. See 2 Pet. iii. 16. If Peter in his letter calls that scripture which is merely the opinions of a good man, then surely Peter is no more inspired than Paul. Will the brother give us the evidences that go to prove that the writings of Paul are uninspired? We have all been in the habit of quoting Paul as authority on points of doctrine. If we have made a mistake, and can be convinced of it, we will do so no more. But if it should turn out, after all, that our brother is mistaken, and that, as Peter says, Paul's writings are a part of the scriptures of divine truth, is it not running a fearful risk to thus underrate the word of God? Should we not be careful how we deal with sacred things? Is it not much the safest way to submit our judgment to that of Paul, rather than because Paul's writings cross our theological path to anathematize those writings as a mere human invention? All which is kindly submitted, by Stories for the Young Pilgrims.

We have already favorably noticed this little work as issued in numbers. It is now bound in a book-form of 200 pages, with illustrations, and for sale by the Boston Advent Christian Publication Society, 167 Hanover street. It is full of choice and interesting reading for the young, designed to give them a clear understanding of the Advent doctrine. It is just the thing for parents who wish to train up their children in the love of Bible truths and for Sunday Schools. Bro. W. B. Herron is the author, who writes under the cognomen of Uncle Pilgrim.

The Time Movement.

Our readers know how steadfastly the HERALD has opposed all "definite time" movements. Since 1844 there have been annual excitements awakened, but with gradually decreasing interest, until now it is with difficulty that any one can be persuaded that its advocates possess the confidence they assume. Outside of their thinned ranks little is heard of such believers, and as the time of the most active body is now drawing to a close, great moderation is manifested by it. A few who long since shipwrecked all reputation for discreetness, boldly declare their implicit confidence in their calculations, but as they have no adjectives to confirm their positiveness stronger than those they employed half a dozen times in the past, no interest is now awakened.

It is certain, however, that the efforts to fix the definite time are confined almost exclusively to believers in the Advent. Outside they do not elicit a passing notice from the secular journals, which would be the case if their preaching begat converts. We have nothing to say against the christian character of any of these teachers of definite time; they have a zeal without knowledge, and we oppose them because their mistaken efforts are calculated to do the cause of truth great harm. We have not learned that any arguments are used other than those heretofore presented in the HERALD OF LIFE. Elders Stewart and Pyle gave, recently, a series of lectures on the prophecies in Middletown, Conn., and took that occasion to introduce the definite time argument, contrary to the expectation of those who aided them in getting a hearing there. A discussion followed the course in regard to definite time, which attracted a large concourse of hearers. D. H. Chase, LL. D, of Middletown, successfully contended against them, as we learn by a letter from that place. He is eminently fitted to do justice to such a subject, being a ripe scholar, and thoroughly conversant with the Greek and Hebrew, and familiar with any point of the subject, having been a believer in the Advent doctrine and non-immortality of man for ten or fifteen years. He maintained that to investigate the time of the advent required much knowledge both of the orginal languages of the Bible and of history. Only a comparative few have ability to do this, and even after a positive theory is worked out, it requires equal knowledge and ability to criticise it, and is necessarily placed beyond the comprehension of the mass of men. Those who accept these conclusions, therefore, do so because they put faith in the preachers, not the evidence. On other grounds the doctor was equally sccessful in showing the weakness of the position of his opponents, and many of his points they could not meet.

Of course we cannot do justice to the debate without having it entire, but we have reason to believe that those who advocate definite time will do better further back in the woods than Middletown.

We hope to have something from the doctor's pen shortly. His personal experiences, we doubt not, would be valuable as well as interesting reading, as he has ever stoutly contended for the faith through evil and good report.

Little Things.

Franklin embodied a great deal of worldly wisdom in this maxim of his—"Take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves." It would be profitable for some one to provide as simple a lesson in religious instruction, and one that would make as deep and lasting an impression in laying up heavenly riches. It is a common belief that there is an easy and expeditious road to christian perfection; and that all that is requsite is to be put in a proper frame of feeling, when a divine and peculiar endowment of the spirit will do the work and bring the seeker to the happy goal. The young convert, who joins a church, begins by grasping in his arms of faith its entire system of belief, and thus precludes his adjusting its doctrines to the framework of his mind. After that he dare not question their truth nor examine their merits without feeling condemed as a skeptic. He thenceforth shuts out all doubts as criminal, and does his best to turn all he hears or learns to account for warping it to accommodate his church creed. He often ends in becoming a bigot, or a careless doubter.

We should forget there are grand schemes and theories and begin by gathering together the crumbs of scripture teachings and christian experience, and systems and theories will grow out of them as fast as it is healthy for any one. It is not uncommon to see men expounding the prophecies and the symbolic book of Revelation, who have to make many efforts to read an ordinary sentence. Without gifts or education, they deem it their privilege, as christians, to have all scripture knowledge made plain to them by the Divine Spirit. The idea of plodding through all the necessary branches of education fitting them for such duties, is scouted. "The wise shall understand," is a sufficient reply to all argument, and with that one text they go on proving themselves entitled to anything but to be ranked among the "wise." The family of the gourd grows, as it were, in a day, and perishes in a day The mighty oak and the lofty cedar acquire growth slowly but abide the age of the world. "By patient continuance in well doing we seek for honor, glory and immortality, and gain—eternal life.

Letters and Extracts.

From Maria M. Weaver.

BR. STORRS:—Peace from God, the blessed Father, be to you, and all the true Israel. Amen.

I deem it a privilege to speak through the HERALD now and then; though sensible that I cannot instruct any of its readers, still I love to tell them how lovely the "Chiefest among ten thousand" is. O blessed be the Lord forever. I am becoming more acquainted with my heavenly Father since I better understand his loving nature. Said Christ, "I say not unto you, I will pray the Father for you, for the Father himself loveth you." Blessed assurance, that God love sus from the beginning.

Well, the battle goes well. The "tug of war" has commenced. The truth offends some, and makes them foam and rage and make manifest what is in them. Others there are who calmly yet earnestly are seeking to "know of the doctrine." I bless God that the gospel is so given that the common people can understand it, and the plan of salvation is revealed so plainly that we may have a knowledge of it without understanding the symbols of the Book of Revelation. Thank God, it reads outside of "Revelation—"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." That isn't obscure, certainly.

Friends, I have watched you like a critic in past days, and if a word bordering on unkindness or uncharitableness escaped your lips or came from your pen, I was not slow to observe it. But now I am experiencing some of the trials that you have passed through before me, and find it necessary to watch my own mouth, and guide my own pen in God's order. O, how much grace we need. But the storehouse is full. My heart is pained often when I see how those that profess to love as God loves feel envious of the poor miserable blots that have gone down into death, whom God has brought into the land of forgetfulness. "O, they must come up to see what they have lost." Then they must see the glory of the city of God, and have a bite of the tree of life, and a taste of the pure river of life. That makes confusion, doesn't it?

God's plan is perfect. Man cannot improve it. It is plain, simple, just, and full of love.

We are yet full of courage, since we "know in whom" we "believe." The frowns of man cannot obliterate the light of truth; and the hate of foes cannot in this day prevent us from speaking the words of truth to those with whom we meet.

"God speed the right." He will, indeed, indeed, though earth and hell combine against it. May we be sanctified, soul, body and spirit, and be kept unspotted from the world till the angels come to call us home. Amen. Your Sister in the Lord.

Westfield, Mass, Jan., 1867,

From Mrs Polly G. Pitts.

FREDERICKBURG, IOWA, Jan. 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Through the mercy of God, who has raised me up from a bed of sickness, I am enabled to inform you that my love of God's eternal truth has not abated; no, and I hope it never will. O, I feel from day to day the blessedness of the one gospel hope, the hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord, and that by a resurrection from the dead. I have been very sick, and thought by some, nigh unto death; but I never felt a tie that bound me to life: I had no choice whether to live or die; but I was often in such distress that the grave looked like a resting place; and I would say,

"If this be death, I soon shall be
From every sin and sorrow free,
And sleep till Jesus calls for me.
All is well, All is well."

But it seems that my work is not yet done; for, I feel for those around me that are dying for lack of knowledge; and I do hope for strength from God to do the work that is my appointed share in His vineyard; so that at last I can say in truth with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith;" yes, the faith of Jesus, and of all the holy patriarchs and prophets which have been since the world began. And again, if I should fall asleep before our Master comes, I hope to know at the close of this mortal life that henceforth (from this time) there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give to me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them that love His appearing. I do not expect a crown of life till Jesus comes and rewards every man according to his works. God grant that we may ever work the work of God; i. e., believe on Him whom He hath sent. While meditating on Corth. xv. my mind was struck with these passages, "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." I then said, Where is the sinner whom sin has stung to death? and sin made strong by the law, and he out of Christ? Now, Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth; but the sinner does not believe. Who shall take away the sting of death? he has no sin offering, no atonement, no Spirit of God dwelling in him that shall raise him up, and and give him the victory over the grave. O, what glorious evidences from the scriptures of truth came into my mind, that the long suffering and mercy of God let him remain in the congregation of the dead; holden by the cords of his sin; perished like his own dung. O, how little of the gospel of the Son of God is preached in the popular churches; what will they do in the end, when God ariseth to shake terribly the earth? I have asked the prominent members of the church in this place to show me one passage of scripture to prove that a christian went to heaven at death; but I never could get an answer. I have told the deacon that I would give him four weeks to find a passage to that effect, but he has never produced one; and the truth is, they have not moral courage enough to confess the truth, if they see it.

I love the HERALD OF LIFE; it is a feast of fat things to me; tho' there are sometimes ideas that I cannot harmonize with the Bible, yet it does not abate my love for the truth; and I do think the readers and writers of the HERALD are advancing daily in the great truths of the One Gospel. I hope God in much mercy will give the Messenger (HERALD) as many wings as it shall need, and may He say unto it, "Fly, thou swift Messenger, take passage on the white winged vessel, whose steam shall speed thee on thy mission of mercy. Find thy place in the chariots who shall seem like torches, and run like the lightnings. Go to the rich, and the poor, to the down-trodden, and the afflicted. Lift up the hands that hang down, and be thou like the shout of God's ancient people, when compassing the city of Jericho; may every wall that is daubed with untempered mortar fall flat before thee. Go, preach Jesus, the resurrection, and the life. Tell the sinner there is no life out of Christ. Tell the waiting ones to watch and be sober, and wait patiently for Jesus the LIFE-GIVER" That the blessing of the Lord may rest abundantly on the HERALD, the Editor, the writers, the readers, is the prayer of a lover of truth.

From Elder Samuel Walter.

PANA, ILL., January 25, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I am well, and strong in faith that my heavenly Father will not let me lack any good thing. I try, having food and raiment, therewith to be content. I do see increasing glory in the truth of life only in Christ; and wonder that men of learning and sound mind do not see it, when it stands prominent on every page of the inspired word.

I have been trying to get an opportunity to give you some account of the debate at Mode, between Eld. Loving (a Campbellite) and Br. Lewis, on this question: Does the Bible teach that there will be a resurrection from the tombs, to life, of the wicked and righteous? Loving came with six speeches, which he dedelivered at a rattling rate, so that it was impossible to take notes, only some scripture texts which he quoted. Br. Lewis presented unanswerable proof that the wicked could not live again; but will remain under the dominion of death. Loving could not occupy his last 30 mitutes; he had all his tow spun in 16 minutes, and could not be prevailed on to continue longer, though Br. Lewis offered to pay him for his time.

The people, and some of his own, said he did not produce any proof of the resurrection of the wicked dead. One of the prominent men of the place said to me that if what Mr. Loving proved was true, he was all right; but he said, if your doctrine is true "I am gone."

Loving has promised me a revised copy of his argument; so I will say more about the discussion when I get home. Yours in hope of life.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

PANA, Christian Co., ILL, Jan. 26, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I love to report to the dear brethren and sisters, now and then, as we feel happy in the thought that we have some warm-hearted friends that care for us and want to know where we are, and how we are getting on in the glorious cause, so dear to all the little ones that have got the purifying hope of soon seeing our elder Brother, when we will all inherit the land deeded to father Abraham, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever: or, in other words, throughout the succeeding or unending ages. Amen.

Well, in the first place, my poor one hand continues lame, so that we shall have to be very brief, and leave the balance for Br. Walter. But we are gaining ground. The seed that we are constantly sowing is finding a lodgment in some good and honest hearts. The late discussion, between Loving (Campbellite) and ourself, on the resurrection of the wicked dead to life, has resulted in much good, in confirmation of no life out of Christ, and that the wicked dead will eternllay remain in sheol. Our opponent failed, entirely, to prove a single point. We drove him into Universalism, and there we left him, as he had no more to say, and it only remained to say that, if we had the sufficient amount of labor that the cause demands, out here, the life and death doctrine would soon triumph over the traditions of the age. But we must be patient, and trust in God; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. We feel truly thankful to our heavenly Father in putting it into the hearts of the brethren to contribute to our necessities. May they be rewarded in this present evil age, and in the age to come with life unending. We thank Br. Lyon for his kind offer in the last week's HERALD. Hope he will, or has, sent them to Mode, as we expect to return there soon. In conclusion, we would say, that we will circulate all the books and tracts the brethren and friends will send us; and we want to say just here, that our effort in getting subscribers for the dear HERALD OF LIFE is unabated, and we hope all will exert their influence in trying to obtain subscribers, and soon the little angel (messenger) will have four wings. We send two now, with the promise of more soon.

The Promise to the Dying Thief.

BR. STORRS:—I see in a letter from Mrs. L. D. Heath that a young man in her place wishes for light on the language of the Saviour to the thief on the cross and as you do not think it best to go into an explanation in the HERALD, would you allow the following brief note, which we wrote some months ago, as a partial exposition of the text?

Much time and many words have been wasted in explaining this language of the Saviour to the dying penitent thief, and just because men will not learn that there is no intermediate state between one's death and resurrection. But that these events join issues—they are separated by no time, so far as the subject who shall experience both events, is concerned. Then, as the day the Saviour spoke to the thief was his dying day, so too was it his rising day, or would be to him. How proper, then, the language without any changing of the comma; or without laboring to show that it was the day of the Saviour's second coming. Our exposition admits that it was the day of his coming, and that it was also his dying day, which no other exposition, which we have seen, will admit.

"Verily, I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," because this is thy dying day. And if this had been spoken on the hour of his death, then it could with the same propriety have been said, this hour shalt thou be with me in Paradise. Shall we illustrate this exposition? Suppose a child has been long absent from its home and parents, but is now seated in the car to return to its home and friends, and his childish wish is, that he might see his friends and home at once. But is told that it will take some six hours for him to reach the place. The child sinks into a deep sleep at once, and is all unconscious of the passing hours until he is awakened by the caresses of his parents.

Now, was not the hour in which he expressed the wish to see his home and friends, and in which he fell asleep, and the hour he was embraced by his friends, the same to the child?

We think there are many other texts which cannot be explained unless we take this view.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

There has nothing of great importance taken place during the two weeks since our summary was made up. The business of the country still continues languid, and worse times are looked for by many. Congress has made great progress on the several important bills before it. A plan of reconstruction is now likely to be adopted, embraced in several bills just introduced, one of which was adopted. It is in substance to put the Southern States back to the condition when Lee surrendered his power to Gen. Grant, and begin by placing them under military rule until each adopts, under regulations by Congress, a State government in conformity with the views of the Northern people. The president is now disposed to act with Congress in restoring the Southern States to the Union in accordance with its policy. This has been all that was needed since the war ended to attain some satisfactory plan of settlement.

FOREIGN.

In Mexico there are indications that the Republic will be re-established there as soon the last French soldier leaves for France, which will be early in March. The anarchy that has prevailed there since Maximilian set up his Empire will be continued, no doubt, under the various military chiefstians who desire to sieze the power in that ever-distracted country. The people will be little better off—they will be oppressed and destroyed by their own citizens instead of foreigners. Juarez is the most popular ruler and rightful President, and is backed up by the United States government. He is a liberal man, and is determined to subdue the power of the Catholic clergy, who, he believes, have been the greatest impediment to the progress of republican principles there as elsewhere.

There have been continued rumors of trouble in regard to the Eastern question. Turkey is preparing for war against Greece; the latter, sustained by Russia, is already committed to a war. Candia is still in a state of revolt, but active operations cannot be carried on until winter is fully past. Some skirmishing has taken place, with varying results, the Turks undoubtedly gaining ground over the insurgents.

In Spain and Portugal there are troubles brewing between the people and governments—these are now the most despotic of all the governments in Europe.

In Italy great reforms are promulgated. A movement in parliament has been made to dissolve all connection of Church and State. A difference between Parliament and the King's Cabinet touching the disposal of the property of the Catholic church has led to a dissolution of the former and resignation of the latter. The Italians have no love for the Pope or his clergy, and they are evidently to be stripped as robbers of the people.

Fenianism has a new start. All unexpectedly a rising has begun in Ireland and simultaneously in various parts. We give the items as they are telegraphed, which are as yet quite vague. England is in a dangerous state between Fenianism and the reformers. The entire overthrow of her aristocracy would not be a surprising event during the next year—neither would it be a matter of regret.

At the elections held in Prussia for the North German Parliament, Prince Frederic Charles, a nephew of the reigning King, and Count Bismarck were among the successful candidates of the Conservative party. Count Bismarck was returned by no less than ten districts.

The English Government denies the wide-spread stories of the landing of shiploads of Fenians at Valentia and in the Shannon. That there has been a serious revolt at and near Killarney is admitted. The telegraph wires near Valentia were cut and destroyed for a long distance, and in all directions riot and pillage were the order of the day, and several establishments were sacked. A coast-guard policeman was killed.

The entire population of London is set down at three millions, which is considerably larger than the population of all England in the days of Richard the Second.

The Pope has written an autograph letter to the King of Prussia, requesting his good offices in behalf of the Roman Catholic priests and bishops living under Russian rule.

A terrible earthquake has occurred in the Island of Cephalonia, on the western coast of Greece. Every town in the island is in ruins. The loss of human life and property was very great. The King of Greece has gone there.

It is now considered certain that the determined resistance of the Cretans, and the spirit of concession recently shown by the Turkish government, will result in the complete independence of the island of Candia.

The Church Union is a new and fair weekly quarto, issued in Brooklyn, and devoted to a practical fusion of all the Orthodox Protestant sects and denominations into one church. It seems to be judiciously conducted. The following is its

"BOND OF UNION.—We, the undersigned, believers in the doctrine of the Holy Scriptures as set forth in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, do hereby pledge ourselves to secure, under God, an open communion, and the recognition of one evangelical ministry, by the interchange of pulpits, thus to make visible the unity of the church.

"And we furthermore solemnly pledge ourselves to stand by each other in securing these ends."

A WORLD ON FIRE.—The constellation of Corona has a star which, from its peculiar appearance, is called the "Burning Star." It has attracted unusual attention among the astronmers both in Europe and America. The extraordinary outbursts or changes in its apparent size and condition leave but little doubt that it is really a world on fire.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,

Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for post age, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing catalogues are hereby revoked.

a clear understanding of the Advent doctrine. It is just the thing for parents who wish to train up their children in the love of Bible truths and for Sunday Schools. Bro. W. B. Herron is the author, who writes under the cognomen of Uncle Pilgrim.

The Time Movement.

Our readers know how steadfastly the HERALD has opposed all "definite time" movements. Since 1844 there have been annual excitements awakened, but with gradually decreasing interest, until now it is with difficulty that any one can be persuaded that its advocates possess the confidence they assume. Outside of their thinned ranks little is heard of such believers, and as the time of the most active body is now drawing to a close, great moderation is manifested by it. A few who long since shipwrecked all reputation for discreetness, boldly declare their implicit confidence in their calculations, but as they have no adjectives to confirm their positiveness stronger than those they employed half a dozen times in the past, no interest is now awakened.

It is certain, however, that the efforts to fix the definite time are confined almost exclusively to believers in the Advent. Outside they do not elicit a passing notice from the secular journals, which would be the case if their preaching begat converts. We have nothing to say against the christian character of any of these teachers of definite time; they have a zeal without knowledge, and we oppose them because their mistaken efforts are calculated to do the cause of truth great harm. We have not learned that any arguments are used other than those heretofore presented in the HERALD OF LIFE. Elders Stewart and Pyle gave, recently, a series of lectures on the prophecies in Middletown, Conn., and took that occasion to introduce the definite time argument, contrary to the expectation of those who aided them in getting a hearing there. A discussion followed the course in regard to definite time, which attracted a large concourse of hearers. D. H. Chase, LL. D, of Middletown, successfully contended against them, as we learn by a letter from that place. He is eminently fitted to do justice to such a subject, being a ripe scholar, and thoroughly conversant with the Greek and Hebrew, and familiar with any point of the subject, having been a believer in the Advent doctrine and non-immortality of man for ten or fifteen years. He maintained that to investigate the time of the advent required much knowledge both of the orginal languages of the Bible and of history. Only a comparative few have ability to do this, and even after a positive theory is worked out, it requires equal knowledge and ability to criticise it, and is necessarily placed beyond the comprehension of the mass of men. Those who accept these conclusions, therefore, do so because they put faith in the preachers, not the evidence. On other gronnds the doctor was equally sccessful in showing the weakness of the position of his opponents, and many of his points they could not meet.

Of course we cannot do justice to the debate without having it entire, but we have reason to believe that those who advocate definite time will do better further back in the woods than Middletown.

We hope to have something from the doctor's pen shortly. His personal experiences, we doubt not, would be valuable as well as interesting reading, as he has ever stoutly contended for the faith through evil and good report.

Little Things.

Franklin embodied a great deal of worldly wisdom in this maxim of his—"Take care of the pence and the pounds will take care of themselves." It would be profitable for some one to provide as simple a lesson in religious instruction, and one that would make as deep and lasting an impression in laying up heavenly riches. It is a common belief that there is an easy and expeditious road to christian perfection; and that all that is requsite is to be put in a proper frame of feeling, when a divine and peculiar endowment of the spirit will do the work and bring the seeker to the happy goal. The young convert, who joins a church, begins by grasping in his arms of faith its entire system of belief, and thus precludes his adjusting its doctrines to the framework of his mind. After that he dare not question their truth nor examine their merits without feeling condemed as a skeptic. He thenceforth shuts out all doubts as criminal, and does his best to turn all he hears or learns to account for warping it to accommodate his church creed. He often ends in becoming a bigot, or a careless doubter.

We should forget there are grand schemes and theories and begin by gathering together the crumbs of scripture teachings and christian experience, and systems and theories will grow out of them as fast as it is healthy for any one. It is not uncommon to see men expounding the prophecies and the symbolic book of Revelation, who have to make many efforts to read an ordinary sentence. Without gifts or education, they deem it their privilege, as christians, to have all scripture knowledge made plain to them by the Divine Spirit. The idea of plodding through all the necessary branches of education fitting them for such duties, is scouted. "The wise shall understand," is a sufficient reply to all argument, and with that one text they go on proving themselves entitled to anything but to be ranked among the "wise." The family of the gourd grows, as it were, in a day, and perishes in a day The mighty oak and the lofty cedar acquire growth slowly but abide the age of the world. "By patient continuance in well doing we seek for honor, glory and immortality, and gain—eternal life.

Letters and Extracts.

From Maria M. Weaver.

BR. STORRS:—Peace from God, the blessed Father, be to you, and all the true Israel. Amen.

I deem it a privilege to speak through the HERALD now and then; though sensible that I cannot instruct any of its readers, still I love to tell them how lovely the "Chiefest among ten thousand" is. O blessed be the Lord forever. I am becoming more acquainted with my heavenly Father since I better understand his loving nature. Said Christ, "I say not unto you, I will pray the Father for you, for the Father himself loveth you." Blessed assurance, that God love sus from the beginning.

Well, the battle goes well. The "tug of war" has commenced. The truth offends some, and makes them foam and rage and make manifest what is in them. Others there are who calmly yet earnestly are seeking to "know of the doctrine." I bless God that the gospel is so given that the common people can understand it, and the plan of salvation is revealed so plainly that we may have a knowledge of it without understanding the symbols of the Book of Revelation. Thank God, it reads outside of "Revelation—"He that hath the Son hath life: he that hath not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." That isn't obscure, certainly.

Friends, I have watched you like a critic in past days, and if a word bordering on unkindness or uncharitableness escaped your lips or came from your pen, I was not slow to observe it. But now I am experiencing some of the trials that you have passed through before me, and find it necessary to watch my own mouth, and guide my own pen in God's order. O, how much grace we need. But the storehouse is full. My heart is pained often when I see how those that profess to love as God loves feel envious of the poor miserable blots that have gone down into death, whom God has brought into the land of forgetfulness. "O, they must come up to see what they have lost." Then they must see the glory of the city of God, and have a bite of the tree of life, and a taste of the pure river of life. That makes confusion, doesn't it?

God's plan is perfect. Man cannot improve it. It is plain, simple, just, and full of love.

We are yet full of courage, since we "know in whom" we "believe." The frowns of man cannot obliterate the light of truth; and the hate of foes cannot in this day prevent us from speaking the words of truth to those with whom we meet.

"God speed the right." He will, indeed, indeed, though earth and hell combine against it. May we be sanctified, soul, body and spirit, and be kept unspotted from the world till the angels come to call us home. Amen. Your Sister in the Lord.

Westfield, Mass, Jan., 1867,

From Mrs Polly G. Pitts.

FREDERICKBURG, IOWA, Jan. 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Through the mercy of God, who has raised me up from a bed of sickness, I am enabled to inform you that my love of God's eternal truth has not abated; no, and I hope it never will. O, I feel from day to day the blessedness of the one gospel hope, the hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord, and that by a resurrection from the dead. I have been very sick, and thought by some, nigh unto death; but I never felt a tie that bound me to life: I had no choice whether to live or die; but I was often in such distress that the grave looked like a resting place; and I would say,

"If this be death, I soon shall be
From every sin and sorrow free,
And sleep till Jesus calls for me.
All is well, All is well."

But it seems that my work is not yet done; for, I feel for those around me that are dying for lack of knowledge; and I do hope for strength from God to do the work that is my appointed share in His vineyard; so that at last I can say in truth with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith;" yes, the faith of Jesus, and of all the holy patriarchs and prophets which have been since the world began. And again, if I should fall asleep before our Master comes, I hope to know at the close of this mortal life that henceforth (from this time) there is a crown of righteousness laid up for me, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give to me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them that love His appearing. I do not expect a crown of life till Jesus comes and rewards every man according to his works. God grant that we may ever work the work of God; i. e., believe on Him whom He hath sent. While meditating on Corth. xv. my mind was struck with these passages, "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." I then said, Where is the sinner whom sin has stung to death? and sin made strong by the law, and he out of Christ? Now, Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth; but the sinner does not believe. Who shall take away the sting of death? he has no sin offering, no atonement, no Spirit of God dwelling in him that shall raise him up, and and give him the victory over the grave. O, what glorious evidences from the scriptures of truth came into my mind, that the long suffering and mercy of God let him remain in the congregation of the dead; holden by the cords of his sin; perished like his own dung. O, how little of the gospel of the Son of God is preached in the popular churches; what will they do in the end, when God ariseth to shake terribly the earth? I have asked the prominent members of the church in this place to show me one passage of scripture to prove that a christian went to heaven at death; but I never could get an answer. I have told the deacon that I would give him four weeks to find a passage to that effect, but he has never produced one; and the truth is, they have not moral courage enough to confess the truth, if they see it.

I love the HERALD OF LIFE; it is a feast of fat things to me; tho' there are sometimes ideas that I cannot harmonize with the Bible, yet it does not abate my love for the truth; and I do think the readers and writers of the HERALD are advancing daily in the great truths of the One Gospel. I hope God in much mercy will give the Messenger (HERALD) as many wings as it shall need, and may He say unto it, "Fly, thou swift Messenger, take passage on the white winged vessel, whose steam shall speed thee on thy mission of mercy. Find thy place in the chariots who shall seem like torches, and run like the lightnings. Go to the rich, and the poor, to the down-trodden, and the afflicted. Lift up the hands that hang down, and be thou like the shout of God's ancient people, when compassing the city of Jericho; may every wall that is daubed with untempered mortar fall flat before thee. Go, preach Jesus, the resurrection, and the life. Tell the sinner there is no life out of Christ. Tell the waiting ones to watch and be sober, and wait patiently for Jesus the LIFE-GIVER" That the blessing of the Lord may rest abundantly on the HERALD, the Editor, the writers, the readers, is the prayer of a lover of truth.

From Elder Samuel Walter.

PANA, ILL., January 25, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I am well, and strong in faith that my heavenly Father will not let me lack any good thing. I try, having food and raiment, therewith to be content. I do see increasing glory in the truth of life only in Christ; and wonder that men of learning and sound mind do not see it, when it stands prominent on every page of the inspired word.

I have been trying to get an opportunity to give you some account of the debate at Mode, between Eld. Loving (a Campbellite) and Br. Lewis, on this question: Does the Bible teach that there will be a resurrection from the tombs, to life, of the wicked and righteous? Loving came with six speeches, which he dedelivered at a rattling rate, so that it was impossible to take notes, only some scripture texts which he quoted. Br. Lewis presented unanswerable proof that the wicked could not live again; but will remain under the dominion of death. Loving could not occupy his last 30 mitutes; he had all his tow spun in 16 minutes, and could not be prevailed on to continue longer, though Br. Lewis offered to pay him for his time.

The people, and some of his OWN, said he did not produce any proof of the resurrection of the wicked dead. One of the prominent men of the place said to me that if what Mr. Loving proved was true, he was all right; but he said, if your doctrine is true "I am gone."

Loving has promised me a revised copy of his argument; so I will say more about the discussion when I get home. Yours in hope of life.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

PANA, Christian Co., ILL., Jan. 26, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I love to report to the dear brethren and sisters, now and then, as we feel happy in the thought that we have some warm-hearted friends that care for us and want to know where we are, and how we are getting on in the glorious cause, so dear to all the little ones that have got the purifying hope of soon seeing our elder Brother, when we will all inherit the land deeded to father Abraham, and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever: or, in other words, throughout the succeeding or unending ages. Amen.

Well, in the first place, my poor one hand continues lame, so that we shall have to be very brief, and leave the balance for Br. Walter. But we are gaining ground. The seed that we are constantly sowing is finding a lodgment in some good and honest hearts. The late discussion, between Loving (Campbellite) and ourself, on the resurrection of the wicked dead to life, has resulted in much good, in confirmation of no life out of Christ, and that the wicked dead will eternullay remain in sheol. Our opponent failed, entirely, to prove a single point. We drove him into Universalism, and there we left him, as he had no more to say, and it only remained to say that, if we had the saffi ient amount of labor that the cause demands, out here, the life and death doctrine would soon triumph over the traditions of the age. But we must be patient, and trust in God; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not. We feel truly thankful to our heavenly Father in putting it into the hearts of the brethren to contribute to our necessities. May they be rewarded in this present evil age, and in the age to come with life unending. We thank Br. Lyon for his kind offer in the last week's HERALD. Hope he will, or has, sent them to Mode, as we expect to return there soon. In conclusion, we would say, that we will circulate all the books and tracts the brethren and friends will send us; and we want to say just here, that our effort in getting subscribers for the dear HERALD OF LIFE is unabated, and we hope all will exert their influence in trying to obtain subscribers, and soon the little angel (messenger) will have four wings. We send two now, with the promise of more soon.

The Promise to the Dying Thief.

BR. STORRS:—I see in a letter from Mrs. L. D. Heath that a young man in her place wishes for light on the language of the Saviour to the thief on the cross and as you do not think it best to go into an explanation in the HERALD, would you allow the following brief note, which we wrote some months ago, as a partial exposition of the text?

Much time and many words have been wasted in explaining this language of the Saviour to the dying penitent thief, and just because men will not learn that there is no intermediate state between one's death and resurrection. But that these events join issues—they are separated by no time, so far as the subject who shall experience both events, is concerned. Then, as the day the Saviour spoke to the thief was his dying day, so too was it his rising day, or would be to him. How proper, then, the language without any changing of the comma; or without laboring to show that it was the day of the Saviour's second coming. Our exposition admits that it was the day of his coming, and that it was also his dying day, which no other exposition, which we have seen, will admit. "Verily, I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," because this is thy dying day. And if this had been spoken on the hour of his death, then it could with the same propriety have been said, this hour shalt thou be with me in Paradise. Shall we illustrate this exposition? Suppose a child has been long absent from its home and parents, but is now seated in the car to return to its home and friends, and his childish wish is, that he might see his friends and home at once. But is told that it will take some six hours for him to reach the place. The child sinks into a deep sleep at once, and is all unconscious of the passing hours until he is awakened by the caresses of his parents.

Now, was not the hour in which he expressed the wish to see his home and friends, and in which he fell asleep, and the hour he was embraced by his friends, the same to the child?

We think there are many other texts which cannot be explained unless we take this view.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

There has nothing of great importance taken place during the two weeks since our summary was made up. The business of the country still continues languid, and worse times are looked for by many. Congress has made great progress on the several important bills before it. A plan of reconstruction is now likely to be adopted, embraced in several bills just introduced, one of which was adopted. It is in substance to put the Southern States back to the condition when Lee surrendered his power to Gen. Grant, and begin by placing them under military rule until each adopts, under regulations by Congress, a State government in conformity with the views of the Northern people. The president is now disposed to act with Congress in restoring the Southern States to the Union in accordance with its policy. This has been all that was needed since the war ended to attain some satisfactory plan of settlement.

FOREIGN.

In Mexico there are indications that the Republic will be re-established there as soon the last French soldier leaves for France, which will be early in March. The anarchy that has prevailed there since Maximilian set up his Empire will be continued, no doubt, under the various military chieftians who desire to sieze the power in that ever-distracted country. The people will be little better off—they will be oppressed and destroyed by their own citizens instead of foreigners. Juarez is the most popular ruler and rightful President, and is backed up by the United States government. He is a liberal man, and is determined to subdue the power of the Catholic clergy, who, he believes, have been the greatest impediment to the progress of republican principles there as elsewhere.

There have been continued rumors of trouble in regard to the Eastern question. Turkey is preparing for war against Greece; the latter, sustained by Russia, is already committed to a war. Candia is still in a state of revolt, but active operations cannot be carried on until winter is fully past. Some skirmishing has taken place, with varying results, the Turks undoubtedly gaining ground over the insurgents.

In Spain and Portugal there are troubles brewing between the people and governments—these are now the most despotic of all the governments in Europe.

In Italy great reforms are promulgated. A movement in parliament has been made to dissolve all connection of Church and State. A difference between Parliament and the King's Cabinet touching the disposal of the property of the Catholic church has led to a dissolution of the former and resignation of the latter. The Italians have no love for the Pope or his clergy, and they are evidently to be strippod as robbers of the people.

Fenianism has a new start. All unexpectedly a rising has begun in Ireland and simultaneously in various parts. We give the items as they are telegraphed, which are as yet quite vague. England is in a dangerous state between Fenianism and the reformers. The entire overthrow of her aristocracy would not be a surprising event during the next year—neither would it be a matter of regret.

At the elections held in Prussia for the North German Parliament, Prince Frederic Charles, a nephew of the reigning King, and Count Bismarck were among the successful candidates of the Conservative party. Count Bismarck was returned by no less than ten districts.

The English Government denies the widespread stories of the landing of shiploads of Fenians at Valentia and in the Shannon. That there has been a serious revolt at and near Killarney is admitted. The telegraph wires near Valentia were cut and destroyed for a long distance, and in all directions riot and pillage were the order of the day, and several establishments were sacked. A coast-guard policeman was killed.

The entire population of London is set down at three millions, which is considerably larger than the population of all England in the days of Richard the Second.

The Pope has written an autograph letter to the King of Prussia, requesting his good offices in behalf of the Roman Catholic priests and bishops living under Russian rule.

A terrible earthquake has occurred in the Island of Cephalonia, on the western coast of Greece. Every town in the island is in ruins. The loss of human life and property was very great. The King of Greece has gone there.

It is now considered certain that the determined resistance of the Cretans, and the spirit of concession recently shown by the Turkish government, will result in the complete independence of the island of Candia.

The Church Union is a new and fair weekly quarto, issued in Brooklyn, and devoted to a practical fusion of all the Orthodox Protestant sects and denominations into one church. It seems to be judiciously conducted. The following is its

"BOND OF UNION.—We, the undersigned, believers in the doctrine of the Holy Scriptures as set forth in the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds, do hereby pledge ourselves to secure, under God, an open communion, and the recognition of one evangelical ministry, by the interchange of pulpits, thus to make visible the unity of the church.

"And we furthermore solemnly pledge ourselves to stand by each other in securing these ends."

A WORLD ON FIRE.—The constellation of Corona has a star which, from its peculiar appearance, is called the "Burning Star." It has attracted unusual attention among the astronmers both in Europe and America. The extraordinary outbursts or changes in its apparent size and condition leave but little doubt that it is really a world on fire.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE EDITOR can now be had at this office by those who desire them. Price 30 cents; which includes the postage when sent by mail.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

PERFECT PEACE.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." Isa. xxvi, 3.

The rains descended, and the floods
  My soul's foundations tried,
While one by one each cherished hope
  Like waning rush-lights died,
And, lone and desolate, I heard
  The elemental din;
Yet light amid the darkness broke—
  A sunbeam shone within.

Out on the crested surge I rode,
  When mighty seas arose,
And challenged with their thunder cry
  The stormy winds as foes;
Then barks were wrecked, and men went down
  Beneath the billowy brine;
But in that tempest of despair,
  The sunbeam still was mine.

The trust in God—I'll hold it fast,
  In peril and in pain,
Until that glorious Sun arise
  That ne'er shall set again.
And if, by death's grim phantom led,
  I tread the shadowy vale,
Still may that perfect peace be mine,
  Though flesh and heart should fail.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

BY WALTER PATTERSON.

[Concluded.]

Now I will quote a few passages that will show plainly who are the rulers, and who the subjects. "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." See the parable of ten pounds. I do not think it legitimate to quote parables as proof of any doctrine, unless such doctrine is clearly taught elsewhere. I quote this, as I think it is in unison with plainly revealed truth. "Well, thou good servant; because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities." "Be thou also over five cities." Luke xix. 17—19. Paul says, "Do ye not know the saints shall judge the world?" Cor. vi. 2. Speaking of it in such a way as if it was believed, and well understood in those days. Again, see the promise of Jesus to the church of Thyatira. "He that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; even as I received of my Father;" Rev. ii. 26, 27. David looking down through the dark vista of futurity could see so clearly, that he expressed himself with confidence that "the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." Psa. xlix. 14; and in view of this he sung with rapturous delight, "Let the saints be joyful in glory.... let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgements written; this honor have all his saints." Psa. cxlix. 5–9. Truly, "a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgement."

6. The laws of that kingdom will be God's will, according to the Lord's prayer, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Isa. ii. 3. Christ shall reign over a willing people.

"Many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us by his ways, and we will walk in his paths," Isa. ii. 3. "And the isles shall wait for his law." Isa xlii. 4.

Now one word to your question that suggested my writing this article to you, Will there be vines in the kingdom of God? will there be wine there? Although by this time you may say, If this is the kingdom of God, according to the scriptures, there will be no difficulty about the fruit of the vine. The Bible does not pass over such a trivial thing as that without special notice. When the kingdom is established, the earth will be blessed probably more than ever it was. On this the prophets dwell at great length. I will quote two passages. "And it shall come to pass in that day, I will hear, saith the Lord, I will hear the heavens, and they shall hear the earth; and the earth shall hear the corn, and the wine, and the oil: and they shall hear Jezreel." Hosea ii. 21, 22. Jezreel imparts "the seed of the Lord." "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hills shall melt." Amos ix. 13. So there will be no difficulty; there will be plenty of wine there.

Now dear Bro., I might stop here, and submit what I have written to your judgement; but I will take another view of the kingdom of God that is promised to Christ and his saints; to show its literality; to show it will have a where and a when. The kingdom of Israel was God's kingdom: see 1 Chron. xxviii. 5. "And of all my sons, for the Lord hath given me many sons, he hath chosen Solomon my son to sit upon the throne of the kingdom of the LORD over Israel." Also 1 Chron. xxix. 23. "Then Solomon sat up the throne of the LORD as king instead of David his father." I presume you are familiar with the history of the children of Israel, how they rebelled; how God chastised them; and by their persistent rebellion, if I may so speak, compelled God to deliver them into the hands of their enemies for the long punishment predicted by Moses that would be commensurate with the "times of the Gentiles." Now see what emphatic words are used when that throne and kingdom was overturned. "And thou, profane wicked prince of Israel" (Zedekiah, the last of David's descendants that have sat on the throne of Israel) "whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the Diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same; exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezk. xxi. 25–27. It is generally admitted that he and him has reference to Jesus Christ. How then can any person, who pretends to believe the word of God, doubt that God will give to Christ David's throne? Could we divest ourselves of our prejudices and preconceived notions respecting the Kingdom of God, and suppose ourselves among the Jews at our Saviour's first advent, familiar with the Jewish writings, we could have no doubt respecting the Kingdom of God; neither do I believe the Jews had at that time. They were earnestly desiring the Kingdom; they were looking for it, and expecting it. What then was the matter? The manifestation of Jesus did not suit their ideas of the Messiah; so they rejected Jesus the king. Hence God rejected them, and gave the kingdom to another people. So when the gospel of the kingdom was preached, we see with the tenfold emphatic force the meaning of the expression, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." This was their stumbling-block; the rejection of their king. We find one time as Jesus was going to Jerusalem, the people were in great expectation that the kingdom of God was about to be established. Luke xix. 11. Jesus spake a parable, to show them their hopes must yet be deferred. We find after his resurrection that Jesus several times met with his disciples and conversed with them about the "things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Can we suppose these disciples, with such teaching, to be so deplorably ignorant of the nature of the kingdom, as men in our present day would have us think they were, when they asked Jesus, "Lord wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" Jesus does not rebuke them for their carnality, as men in our present day do; he merely informs them that they were not to know the time; the set time was with God, and he had not yet revealed it.

Is not this then confirmatory that Christ's kingdom will be on earth in accordance with the oath of God, that he shall sit on David's throne? Is there then not good reason for believing that, "the set time to favor Zion will come?" God's promises are so certain of fulfilment; they are often written in the present tense, although in the future. See the expression in Isaiah, "To us a son is born;" although spoken 700 years before the literal fulfilment. So we find David rejoicing in the certainty of God's glorious purposes with respect to Zion, yea, even before it had been reduced to rubbish and dust. "Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion; for the time to favor her, yea, the set time, is come.... When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory....this shall be written for the generation to come." Psa. 102.

Hitherto I have considered the kingdom of God in connection with the children of Israel and their history: before I finish I will view it in connection with the kingdoms of earth, or the Gentile nations. It is a glorious thought "that God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets."

When God was about to punish the Jews for their rebellion, in mercy to those who feared his name, he told the prophets what he was about to do, so that they might have light and hope. He gave to Daniel several scenes of the world's history, from the time the Jews were put under Gentile domination until the establishment of the kingdom of God. The first of these we will find in Daniel ii, under the impressive and memorable symbol of the image of a man. That image was composed of gold, silver, brass, and iron. These four metals and the position they occupied symbolized four gentile dynasties that would succeed one another in the world's history, before the establishment of the kingdom of God, which was symbolized by a stone. We are not left to guess and speculate about what powers this image represented. God is his own interpreter, and he has made it plain. It is said of the Babylonian dynasty, "thou art this head of gold." Dan. ii. 38. The Medes and Persians succeeded as symbolized by the silver, "breast and arms." See Dan. v. 28, 31. And that the Grecians, symbolized by the "brass," succeeded the Medes and Persians is evident from Dan. viii. 20, 21. And that the Roman empire succeeded the Grecian is a matter of history, and sustained by Luke ii. 1. This last power was to be divided, as symbolized by the legs and toes of this great image. And when the history of the world had passed until it reached that period indicated by the toes, they were to be mixed with miry clay. You will pardon my assumption when I tell you, I believe the "miry clay" represents our dearly beloved republican governments. While they are soaked with the blood of our brothers, they have a miry, cohesive character; but soon that blood dries; its memory is forgotten; then is displayed the brittle nature of our clay governments. But hark! When the world reached this point of history, what are we justified in expecting? The kingdom of God, as symbolized by the "stone cut out of the mountain without hands." That was to fall upon the feet of this image, and break and bruise all its component parts; so that the kingdom of God would be established and fill the whole earth. Methinks such a glorious consummation is devoutly wished for by every true christian. May God grant that that glorious event may soon come.

IS ELIJAH YET TO COME?

But why agitate this question? I answer, For two reasons. First. If the mission of Elijah is yet in the future, and the work comprehended in that mission is such, both in character and extent, as is held by a majority of those who advocate that theory, then are we mistaken in looking for speedy redemption at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

Another reason, and very important in our opinion, is this: the experience of the past has taught us that the idea that our Elijah is yet to come, has been a fruitful source of fanaticism. We have been acquainted with more than one man who, getting tired in waiting for a development of his peculiar theory, has concluded that he is Elijah; and wretched indeed, and ridiculous withal, have been the sayings and doings of such men. God save us from any such modern Elijahs.

We come then to the question direct. The only text urged as proof positive that John the Baptist was not the Elijah that was to come, is John i. 21., where it is asserted that John declares that he is not the Elijah. But it has been clearly shown by "M. C. H." that John just as much denies being a prophet as he denies being Elijah. I know it is objected that this view of the matter makes a direct contradiction between Christ and John. But this is not true, as we shall endeavor to show. But if it was true, which is the worst position, to make Christ contradict John one or three times, and make John contradict Gabriel also? It is argued that John does not say that he is not a prophet, but that he is not that prophet, meaning Christ. This is not true. Whatever prophet may have been referred to in the language, "Art thou that prophet?" it certainly does not mean Christ. Here is the evidence. The Jews asked John, first, who he was? He answered that he was not the Christ. Then they say to him, What then? Art thou Elias? That is, if you are not the Christ, are you Elias? Then they ask, Art thou that prophet? All who will read carefully John i. 19—21, will readily see that by "that prophet," they did not mean Christ. But it is urged that King James' version of this text is infallibly correct, and that therefore it must read that prophet. This, in our opinion, is an unfounded assumption. We do most solemnly aver that we are not obliged to translate this text that prophet—that it is more properly rendered a prophet. Murdock translates it, Art thou a prophet? agreeing perfectly with the margin of our common version. The margin, in a majority of instances, at least, is the most literal translation of the original text. Thus John does say he is not A prophet. Does this involve a contradiction between Christ and John? We answer, No. John answered the questions of these Jews in precisely the sense in which they were asked. The Jews had a notion that perhaps John was one of the old prophets raised from the dead; or that perhaps he was the very Elijah that ascended up in sight of Elisha. But John declared that neither of these notions was correct. That he was not a (resurrected) prophet. Neither was he that identical Elijah that went up to heaven from near the river Jordan. He then tells them who he is, by plainly declaring that he came to do the very work marked in the "Elijah message," as given by the ancient prophet. Read John i. 23.

That John did fulfil the mission of Elijah, as given in Mal. iv. 5, is positively asserted by the angel of God. What says Malachi? "He [Elijah] shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers," etc. The testimony of Gabriel concerning John is, "He shall go before him [Christ] in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children," etc. It strikes us that any one must be very closely wedded to a darling theory to attempt to nullify such testimony as this.

Again, to assume that John was not the Elijah that was to come, is to deny the positive declaration of Jesus Christ, three times repeated. In Matt. xi. 18, Christ uses the following language: "And if ye will receive it, this is the Elias that was to come." But some are so intent on patching up a ragged theory, that they assume that because the nation of the Jews did not receive John as the Elias that was to come, therefore he was not "Elias." That their rejection of John's message rendered that message entirely void, or at least, wholly changed its character. This is convenient logic (?) if it is not very sound. Apply it to the mission of Christ and you annul his Messiahship. The truth lies here, "to wit," While John might be the Elijah to those who rejected him, he nevertheless did fulfil "the Elijah mission," and to those who did receive him he was the Elias that was to come. They had ears to hear, and they did hear. See verse 15. Our next testimony is Math. xvii. 11, 12. "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things. But I say unto you, THAT ELIAS IS COME ALREADY, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed." Nothing can be more plain or positive than the assertion here made, by the Son of God, that John the Baptist was the Elias that was to come. And no amount of theological sparring can possibly change such declarations of Christ, in the estimation of all such as are disposed to "take God at his word," independent of all preconceived opinions and theories. Once more: Mark ix. 12, 13. "And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first and restoreth all things.... But I say unto you that ELIAS IS INDEED COME, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, AS IT IS WRITTEN OF HIM."

Here Christ not only declares, in the most positive language, that John is the Elias that was to come, but that he also fulfilled just what was written of Elias.

If this is not sufficient to satisfy all who are interested in this matter, more would not be. It is enough to satisfy us, forever, that all this theorizing about a future Elijah to come, in fulfilment of Mal. iv. 5, is sheer speculation, destitute of even a semblance of truth.

PAULO.

ST. LUKE AND HIS GOSPEL.

BY EDWARD IRVING.

Some, but these not so ancient, nor weighty in their authority, have declared that Luke was one of the two whom the Lord overtook on the way to Emmaus; which they think to be the reason that, of the two he only names Cleopas. Nay, they go so far as to say that he was one of the seventy sent, two by two, throughout Judea by the Lord, and that this is the reason why he is so much fuller than the rest of the Evangelists in detailing the instructions they received. So much testimony of scripture, so much endeavor of antiquity to do him honor, concurring with so much intrinsical evidence, show that when Luke retired from Rome into Greece, as is believed, to employ the remnant of a long and laborious life in the noblest office of historiographer to the Lord and the apostolical college, he went about an undertaking, great and momentous no doubt, but one for which by his gifts and graces, by his services in the church, by his early familiarity with the eye-witnesses and companions of the Lord, by his long bosom intimacy with Paul, who received the gospel not of man but by revelation of Christ—by all these he was qualified, if any man can be said to be qualified, for such a work. And while we thus draw together the qualifications of the man, let us not be thought either to overlook or to overshadow the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. If Luke himself, in stating his inducement, do condescend upon the opportunities he had, and the pains he was at, we are not to be blamed for doing the same. But, in truth, God chooseth proper vessels to fill with his inspiration; plain men many of them doubtless were, but honest and creditable men, and men not hardened by prejudice, nor corrupted by sinister motives. Yet when He pitched upon a chosen vessel to carry his name before the gentiles, it was Saul the learned disciple of Gamaliel he chose; and in like manner when he chose an Evangelist to set forth a narrative among the learned and curious Greeks, it was Luke the kinsman of Paul that he chose—Luke worthy to be the bosom friend of the learned and profound Paul—Luke the elegant and enlightened writer of these two treatises, which contain specimens of high eloquence and pure pathos wholly unsurpassed. And the wisdom of the Almighty's choice has been well supported by the universal voice of every period in the church. Within little more than half a century after they were put out, his books began to be extolled by the Fathers, and have continued to be received with universal concurrence and unabated testimony ever since.

There is a modesty and a classical elegance in the style in which Luke sets forth his intention, which is altogether after the model of the finest teachers of that age, and which makes it clear to our mind that he was addressing himself to a classical public, and strove to win favor for his work by studying their predilections. Matthew and Mark, on the other hand, adopt the earlier style of setting out with pomp and dignity, which is also the style of the Old Testament teachers. Matthew thus begins: "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham;" and Mark, "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God;" but Luke differs from both: "Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us, even as they delivered them unto us, who from the beginning were eye-witnesses, and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me, also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus, that thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed."

Of those many undertakings to which Luke refers, it is not probable that any one is now extant. John's account was written after all the rest. Matthew's and Mark's, if then written, cannot have been under the apostle's eye, otherwise he would never have presumed to state the better information of his friend as his motive for writing his—seeing Matthew was, upon the whole, a better authority, and Mark nearly as good. But besides these four gospels no books of the first century purporting to be gospels have come down to our time. There were others written afterwards and rejected by the church, of which more anon. Luke, therefore, had in his eye when he spoke of these many undertakings, none of the other three gospels, but some other writings of that description then current, but now altogether lost. The authors of these were not the apostles themselves, he states, but such as had been instructed by the eye-witnesses and ministers of the word. This is just as we might expect if we translate ourselves into that time and consider the circumstances of the case. Had the apostles lived now, when we have the invention of printing and a public able to read, and a ready-made apparatus for circulating intelligence, and a daily appetite for everything new, their very first step after the resurrection should have been to draw up a narrative of the occurrence, signed by competent witnesses, and, being duly authenticated, to have it printed and circulated with all speed; then to follow in its train, and preach, carrying along with them the written documents for satisfying the demand that might be excited—in short, after the precise manner in which the Society for Converting the Jews, or any modern missionaries, proceed. But how was it with the poor apostles? There was no press to multiply copies as by magic—no speedier way than by painstaking and tedious copying. They were none of them ready writers, and even if they had been so there was neither time nor convenience. They had few readers—none to circulate their writings—the whole world was adverse; they had hardly time to preach and flee. In the absence of our mighty engines, God furnished them with an engine of his own. He put the words of every nation on their lips, the wisdom of the Holy Ghost in their hearts, and the miracles of their Master in their hands. This was enough to furnish them wherever they went; their speech could go through all the earth, their words to the world's end: and if the people wanted evidence, they had reason in abundance, testimony in abundance, both prophetical and present testimony—miracles in abundance when the others failed. This was enough for conviction; and then for the sake of memory, which is now refreshed by a treatise left behind, the Spirit supplied the want by inspiring the brethren in every city with the same gifts of knowledge, and wisdom, and interpretation, and tongues—the same power of healing and prophecy and miracles which the apostles had. And of these gifts and powers he made the apostles the fountains. So that in truth they became the editors, not of paper books and artificial signs, but the editors of inspiration and supernatural knowledge, and immediate signs of the divine presence and power. So gifted, their true wisdom was to follow the last injunction of the Lord, to go "unto all nations, and teach them, baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." 1 Pet. iv. 12, 13.

My mind has been of late drawn to this portion of scripture, and through some meditation has been led to ask a few questions; therefore I send them to you, dear HERALD. What were the sufferings of Christ, through which we might rejoice, knowing that we are partakers? Was Christ's suffering through some bodily infirmity of the flesh, which all are heirs to? Was he laid on a languishing bed of sickness, like many of our brethren, sisters and friends who are afflicted? Did he ignorantly or knowingly violate nature's laws, and therefore suffer their penalty? which is sure to follow. Did he through some accident suffer the bruising of his body or the mangling and amputation of his limbs? Were these the special sufferings of Christ, to which the apostle alludes? I think not. But these sufferings and afflictions, dear brethren and sisters, whoever you are that are called to pass through them, may lift up your hearts in thankfulness that you are accounted worthy to come under the rule of chastisement; "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth; but if ye are without chastisement then are ye bastards and not sons." Our Master wept with those that wept, and mourned with those that mourn. "The Lord pitieth them that fear him; he remembereth that we are dust." But to the point. Jesus came to his own and his own received him not. It is no small trial to have your name cast out as evil by your own near relatives and friends; to be considered by them a heretic, and a deluded fanatic; when you feel sure the truths you entertain (if they would receive them) would prove a great blessing; yea, the truths which we hold are the most glorious that ever blessed the world of mankind. But "He was was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." The world cared not for him, the Jewish church cried "away with him." But this is not all. The apostle said, that he had "perils by sea, and perils by land, and perils among false brethern," Jesus uttered a truth; and what was it? "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." But some of his dear disciples, with whom he had held sweet communion, and had walked to the house of God together, turned their heel against him, saying, "This is a hard saying; who can hear it?" Do any of the salaried ministers, who are lionized by the public, know anything about these trials? Do the church-going people, who are seeking for ease and popularity, who "heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears," who dare not, or do not, think enough on what they hear to say whether it be true gospel, yea, or nay, do they taste any of the dregs of this bitter cup? Yea, I might ask the readers of the HERALD, Do you know what those trials are? If so, happy are ye. If not, remember there are more. He was betrayed with a kiss; and by one of his professed disciples. O, wicked and cruel hypocrisy! Then, at last, "all his disciples forsook him, and fled." He was left to tread the wine-press alone. They spit upon him; they buffetted him; they platted a crown of thorns on his brow, and with a reed they smote him on his head, crying, Crucify him, crucify him! and in his last expiring agonies on the cross he cries out, "My God my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" He was left to die alone: and why? "For the joy that was set before him he endured the cross, despising the shame." O, brethren, we have "not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin." Shall we then sell our birthright for a mess of pottage? Shall we compromise truth for the sake of quietness and peace, which will be but for a moment? Jesus saith "I came not to send peace on the earth, but a sword; for I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; and a man's foes shall be they of his own household." Are there those who are passing through any of these trials? If so, think it not strange; but rejoice, in that ye are accounted worthy, for Jesus saith, Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil for the Son of man's sake; rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy, for behold your reward is great in heaven; for in like manner did their fathers unto the prophets."

THE BIRDS.

Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, gives an account of Mr. Fox, of Tregedna, near Falmouth, England, who, by persevering kindness, has won the affection of a large number of birds—so much so, that they fly to meet him when he calls them, and hop about him eating the crumbs, with which his pockets are well filled. When digging in his garden it is no uncommon sight to see little birds hopping on the handle of the spade or rake used by the gentleman, thus showing their confidence in him. Sometimes they enter his bedroom early in the morning through the window, and, in their way, call out, "It is time to get up."

On Sunday, when Mr. Fox goes to his place of worship, some of the birds are frequently seen to accompany him along the road, chirping and singing all the way!

Mr. Burritt calls Mr. Fox the "Rarey of the Bird world."

Mr. Samuel Gurney, M. P., has given us a very pleasing confirmation of Mr. Burritt's testimony. He states: "When visiting Mr. Fox, I was perfectly astonished, on walking out into the garden, to see, on his sounding a whistle, the birds come fluttering round him. One robin was actually so tame that it picked a piece of bread out of Mr. Fox's mouth!"

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Christ alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a wo-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

"GLORY TO GOD."

BY "KRUPTOS:" alias, GEO. F. STORRS.

Redemption yields the highest glory to God. We say the highest glory, for though His absolute glory, like His eternal being and infinite perfections, admits of no degrees, and is affected by no circumstances whatever, it is otherwise with "His declarative glory," as old theologians called it. This, which we speak of, and which angels sang of, consists in the manifestation of His attributes. Whatever it be, though only the drop of water, which appears a world of wonders to the eye of a man of science, any work is glorious which reflects the divine character in any measure, and still more glorious or glorifying which exhibits it in a greater measure. God's glory expands and unfolds itself as we rise upward in the study of his works—from inanimate to living objects; from plants to animals; from animals to man; from man to angels, upward and still upward, to the Being who, bathed in the full blaze of divine effulgence, tops the pyramid, and stands on the highest pinnacle of creation. That Being is God manifest in the flesh. Our Lord Jesus Christ—the redemption which he wrought for us, through blood and suffering, and death, being the work that reveals God most fully to our eyes, and forming a looking glass, so to speak, to reflect the whole measure of divinity. This will appear if we look at—

THE REDEEMER.—One of His many titles is the Wonderful. Anticipating the royal birth at Bethlehem, and speaking of Christ in terms which no other key can open but the doctrine of his divinity, Isaiah says, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." With pencils of sunlight, God paints the rose; by arts of divine chemistry He turns foul decay into the snow-white purity and fragrant odors of a lily; He fashions the infant in the darkness of the mother's womb; He inspires dead matter with the active principle of life; in man he breaths the breath of life into a lump of clay—wonders these which have perplexed the wisest men and remain as incomprehensible to philosophers as to fools. Yet, as if there were no mystery but that our understanding could fathom—as if there was nothing in these to teach proud man humility and rouse his admiration—as if there was indeed no wonder but Christ himself in all this great and glorious universe, He is called, by way of eminence, the Wonderful. And why? Because, as the stars cease to shine in presence of the sun, quenched by the effulgence, and drowned in the flood of his brighter beams, these lose all their wonders beside this little child. To a meditative man it is curious to stand over any cradle where an infant sleeps, and as we look on the face so calm, and the little arms gently folded on the placid breast, to think of the mighty powers and passions which are slumbering there; to think that this feeble nursling has capacities for an endless existence; that its mortal form may at last become allied to angels. Much more wonderful the spectacle the manger offers, where shepherds bend their knees, and angels bend their eyes! What deep secrets of divine wisdom, power, and love, lie here; wrapped up in these poor swaddling clothes! Mary holds in her arms, in this manger, with its straw, what draws the wondering eyes, and inspires the loftiest songs of angels. If that be not God's greatest, and therefore most glorifying work, where are we to seek it? in what else is it found? "The depth saith, It is not in me; and the sea saith It is not in me!" Were we to range the vast universe to find its rival, we should return, like the dove to its ark, to the stable-door, and the swaddled babe, there to mingle human voices with the heavenly choir—singing, "Glory to God in the highest!"

The fact that redemption yields God the highest glory will appear, also, if we look at—

THE REDEEMED.—It is in them, in sinners saved, not in the holy and happy angels, that God stands out fully revealed as in a mirror; long and broad enough if we may say so, to show forth all his attributes. To vary the figure: the cross of Christ is the focus in which all the beams of divinity, all the attributes of the Godhead, are gathered into one bright, burning spot, with power to warm the coldest and melt the stoniest heart. No man hath seen God at any time, otherwise than in his works, and though created things are immeasurably inferior to their Creator, they may still help us to form some conception of his character. A drop of water is an ocean; a spark of fire is a sun; every grain of sand on the sea-shore is a world in miniature; and as those who have never seen ocean, or sun, or world, may form some idea of their appearance by magnifying these their miniatures millions of millions of times, so, by immensely magnifying the age, the power, the wisdom, the holiness of an angel, we could form some dim conception of God. Not that we would not have still to ask, "Who can by searching find out God? who can find out the Almighty to perfection?"—not that when we had exclaimed, in the sublime words of Job, "Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering. He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth on nothing. He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds. He holdeth back the face of his throne. The pillars of heaven tremble and are astonished at his reproof. He divideth the sea with his power. By his Spirit he hath garnished the heavens;" not that we would not have to add with the patriarch, "These are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand?"

Study him, for example, in the angels who sung his birth song. They are holy; and we may conclude that their Maker is infinitely holy; they are wise, and he who made them must possess infinite wisdom; they are powerful, and he must be omnipotent; the God of good angels must be infinitely good, as the avenger of sin and evil ones, and must be infinitely just. This is sound reasoning—for, as David says, "He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? He that formed the eye, shall he not see? He that chastiseth the heathen, shall he not correct?" He that teacheth man knowledge, shall he not know? Still, however lofty and worthy were the conceptions which we thus formed of God, he had never been discovered in the full glory of his gracious character by this or any corresponding process. Unspeakable honor to man and unspeakable grace in God, the fulness of his character is revealed, not by seraphs but by saints—in redeemed and ransomed sinners. And so all who have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb, are trophies of free saving mercy; monuments of that love which—when stern justice had dragged us to the mouth of the pit, and angels, who had seen their fellows punished by one awful act of justice, stood in dread and silent expectation of another—graciously interposed, saying, "Deliver from going down to the pit, I have found a ransom." Then, blessed Son of God, thou didst step forward to say, And I am that ransom! From that day heaven was happier. It found a new joy. Angels tuned their harps to higher strains; and now, these blessed spirits above the mean jealousies of earth's elder brothers, whenever they see Christ born anew in a soul—a sinner born again, called, converted, apparelled in Jesus' righteousness, rejoicing in his arms, or even weeping at his feet, make up the old, grand birthsong, singing, "Glory to God in the highest." "There is joy," said Jesus, "in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth—joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance."

MY DEBATES WITH ELD. PREBLE.

NUMBER ONE.

Bro. James S. Brooks, of Portland, under date of the 11th ultimo, wrote me as follows:—

"Dear Bro. Wendell:—I have just seen in the Crisis a report of your discussion with Eld. Preble, in which he says you by silence admit his position to be true. Is it so? I some time ago became a firm believer that the penalty of the Adamic transgression was eternal death in and of itself. But there is a proviso, and that is Christ; and, as all are not in Christ, they must still be under the penalty, and that forever. So you see I was some inrerested in the Discussion. I could not be there. Now I wish you to write me a few lines about it. Your brother, in hope of Life through Christ."

Bro. John C. Day, of South Ashburnham, Mass., under date of 2d inst., wrote:—

"My Dear Bro. Rufus:—I thought I would disturb your quiet by writing a few lines to you, as it has been a long time since we heard anything from you. And I have been thinking that perhaps the reason might be that Eld. Preble's carefully written article in the Crisis, said to be his closing speech in the late discussion in Salem, had brought you over to believe in a temporary purgatory, at least for the wicked, and that you might be stopping to recover yourself a little, and take breath, before you made it known. But if this is not the case I hope we shall hear from you in some way before long. We always look for your name the first thing on opening the paper, but not a scratch do we find from you. O, how glad we should be to have you come up and spend a few days with us. I will agree that your expenses shall be paid, and I think the Life views would be well received here if they could be wisely set before the people. What say, brother R.? Will you come and spend one Sunday and a few evenings with me? I think it might be the means of great good. We have had no preaching here for a long time. All want to see you. Phebe and the boys join in much love to yourself, Sister W., and the children. Do let us hear from you in some way. In haste and much love, from thy brother in Christ."

Bro. Timothy Wheeler, of Waterbury Centre, Vt., wrote me under date of the 3d inst:—

"Dear Bro. Wendell:—Your name, together with CURRY and STORRS, seems very precious to me on account of our common faith in the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. This is a precious and lovely truth with me; one which I discovered some ten years ago, long before I knew anything about you three men. O, how clearly the light shines on this heavenly truth! Nature is full of analogies illustrating this truth. Revelation is very clear upon the point. One or two texts seem to teach the reverse.

"I see by the Crisis that Preble has used you nearly up? How is it? I have been watching the HERALD OF LIFE to see if there was not another side to it, but, as yet, see nothing from you. Is the discussion published? If so, I want it. I have seen nothing in relation to it.

"H. L. Hastings—what does it mean? In all his late publicatians there is nothing to show that he disbelieves in the immortality of the soul, conscious state of the dead, and eternal misery. Indeed, I should think he believed it all, had I never read anything of him but his late writings. His former works on this subject he does not advertise. Has he changed his mind? If not, what is his policy? I never will compromise Truth. Yours for the Truth."

RESPONSIVE REMARKS.

1. My long silence in the paper, in relation to the debate and also various other matters about which I have greatly desired to write, has been owing entirely to the circumstance, that my time, for several months past, has been devoted to business responsibilities, which were undertaken for the purpose of enabling me to "make ends meet" in the pecuniary line. During this time my Sunday labors have not been intermitted, but it has seemed impossible to get the rest and leisure necessary for the purpose of preparing matter suitable for the paper. I have toiled hard and had many weary hours. But God has blessed me with excellent health, and there are a thousand things which should awaken my gratitude for his mercy to me and mine. I think, however, that in the future I shall (if life and health are continued) be able to send an article to our beloved Editor quite as often at least as he will send a paper to the reader: and if I shall be able to furnish acceptable contributions, I cherish a hope that my future sins of omission will relate, if at all, in very small measure to the matterof writing for the HERALD OF LIFE. Its mission was never dearer to my heart than now; and I may add that the Editorial management, in its general features, has my warmest approval. We have the right man in the right place, and it will be a shame to us younger men if we do not hold up his hands and give him constant proofs of our loyalty to the great truth of Life only in Jesus Christ. I am not tinctured with the doctrine of justification by works, but I confess that no act brings me a speedier or sweeter recompense in the way of an approving conscience than when I am in some way laboring to help this paper in its work of scatttering light on the Life theme. But this must suffice on this point.

2. I have engaged Bro. Boutell to preach for me here in Salem next Sunday, but when I did so I did not know where I should labor on that day. But in transcribing Br. Day's letter for this article it flashes across my mind that I ought next Sunday to proclaim Life only in Christ in South Asburnham. And this I will do if the Lord permit. I have many times been invited to visit that place, and now I rejoice to find the way so unexpectedly opened for me to go. I shall send Br. Day word by this mail.

3. I rejoice to find my dear brother Brooks, of Portland, standing firmly on our Life view, and I thank him for writing me. I honor him for the noble liberality of feeling which he displayed years ago when he did not hold the view. He is a leading man—a "pillar"—in the Portland Advent church, but he never used his position to impose trammels upon any man who wanted to present his honest convictions in their pulpit. Never shall I forget the Sunday which I devoted (several years ago) to the presentation of the Life doctrine in Portland. Then Br. B. believed me in error, but he was willing that I should be heard. In this connection I will say, that, if Br. B. will arrange with Eld. Preble to debate with me on the wicked-dead question in P., I will gladly give the church there a chance to see for themselves what sort of argumentation I was met with in Alton and this city.

4. In reply to the brethren whose letters are given above, I have to say that I am now in a situation to devote a little attention to Eld. Preble's Crisis version of the Debate, and to sundry other matters about which he found it convenient to be silent. I shall come to my work directly in my next article. Eld. P. is a subscriber to our paper, and I shall miss my guessif he doesnot see cause to wish that his "modest" account of the debate had remained in his portfolio. And yet I ought not to be too sanguine on this point, for Eld. P. must have known what kind of an exposure he was inviting by his publication in the Crisis. He probably counted on the fact that his medium of reaching the public was one from which any correction from me would, as a matter of course, be excluded.

5. I can give Br. Wheeler no special information respecting the "policy" of Eld. Hastings. I have been upbraided by Prof. C. F. H. for characterizing his (H. L. H's) course as "deplorable retrogression;" and upon the Professor's authority I stated in this paper, last summer, that The Christian would give utterance to the "heresy of Destruction" so soon as its Editor should think he could "do so to the best effect." My own opinion is that it will never be done, and I remain steadfast in the conviction his whole procedure is an eminent instance of "deplorable retrogression."

R. W.

WHAT LAW?

BY JACOB GRIM.

In our last we spoke of the two covenants; the one made with Abraham being the first in point of time, but the second in its confirmation. The Mosaic covenant being confirmed in the days in which it was made.

The second covenant required the obedience of Jesus Christ in order to its confirmation. For although Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the faithful had fallen asleep, the apostle declared, "And if Christ be not raised (from the dead) your faith is vain: ye are yet in your sins. Then they also (as well as Christ) which have fallen asleep in him are perished." 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18. Here is a fact demonstrated to my mind that the new covenant needs, for its confirmation, the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

We will now look for the reason, or the need of Jesus being made under the first covenant for the truth of God. We have shown that God by an everlasting covenant deeded the landto Abraham, and his seed for an everlasting inheritance.

We also find that under the covenant God made with Moses, He promised the children of Israel a possession and a kingdom in this same land, and promised them that by obedience they should dwell in the land as the lot of their inheritance.

To my mind, in reading the scriptures, there has always been a difficulty in fulfilling these two classes of promises; the one made to Abraham for an everlasting possession, as an individual, and the other to Israel as a nation to dwell in the land which the Lord giveth thee. Deut. xxviii.

While Israel as a nation is occupying the land, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as individuals in their resurrection state, are kept out of it.

We read in Matt. iii. 2, that John came preaching, "And saying, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Likewise Jesus, in Mark i. 15, came preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, "And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe the gospel."

Now we believe in time; and we further believe that John and Jesus knew exactly what they were preaching about. And they both declare the kingdom of God is at hand; and the one Jesus, said the time was fulfilled. We are asked, "What time was fulfilled?" We answer, the time for the duration of the first covenant, or as the apostle to the Heb. ix: 26, the end of the world, or age, or dispensation. And the time for the establishment of the kingdom of God. The time Daniel spoke of, when he said, seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, (as the Lord once said to Noah, My Spirit shall not always strive with man: yet his days shall be 120 years); so in this case God declares his purpose to "finish transgression, and to make an end of sins (under the first covenant), and to make reconciliation for niquity." The apostle says, for this reason, Jesus took upon him the seed of Abraham, "that through death he might destroy him (or it) that had the power of death; that is, the adversary, (the Mosaic covenant); and deliver them who through fear of death, were all their life time subject to bondage." Heb. ii. 14, 15. Paul, in Gal, calls this a yoke of bondage. In Gal, we read that Jesus was made under the law, to deliver those under the law. In Rom. xv. 8, we read that Jesus was "made a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to the fathers." And in Heb. ix. 15, And for this cause he is the Mediator of the New Covenant, that by means of death for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant, (that) they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance." Here we have positive testimony that it was the first, or Mosaic covenant, under which Jesus was made in order to redeem Israel from under that covenant; and the time allotted to that covenant was that spoken of by Daniel the prophet. And when John and Jesus came preaching, The kingdom of heaven is at hand, it was the kingdom promised under the first covenant. It is remarked that the promises under this covenant belong to literal Israel; and as they have received the curses threatened under the covenant they should also receive the blessings. We answer; our business is with the law, and the conditions connected with the law. We know, as Paul says, that God promised Abraham this land 400 years before the law, and the law cannot affect the promise of God and make it of none effect; and we also know that God cannot give the land by promise for an everlasting possession to Abraham and his seed, and at the same time give it to the nation of Israel in the flesh for a perpetual inheritance; for Israel could only occupy it as all other nations do; one generation pass away and another take their place. Paul, in discussing this question in Gal. iii. 15, says, "When a covenant is confirmed, no man disannuleth or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He sayeth not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one; and to thy seed, which is Christ." Now, evidently, Paul is speaking of the inheritance, one and the same, under the two covenants. For if the inheritance be of the law it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise; evidently one and the same. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under a curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." Gal. iii. Now under this curse Christ found every child of Israel. And to redeem them from under this curse, Christ came. And the apostle says, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."

Now, here are two covenants involving the same people and the same inheritance. The last covenant is so made that it involves the national life of Israel. And as God had predetermined, as announced by the mouth of his servant Daniel, that in a given time he would wind up this covenant, and make an end of sin, and transgression under this covenant, unless some plan was adopted for the redemption of the nation, its national life would be forfeited, and God's promises to Abraham and David fail. Here we find God's plan revealed; and it is, that Jesus shall take upon himself the fulfilment of the law, complete the covenant, and redeem the nation from under the curse of the covenant. And in the language of Caiaphas, "Ye know nothing at all, nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." John xi. 50. In the language of the prophet—"But he was wounded for transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities." Isa. liii. We read that John came preaching repentance and baptism for the remission of sins; and Jesus came to John requesting to be baptized of him. Now Jesus was not a sinner, that he needed to be baptized for their remission; and so John informed him: but, says Jesus, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness; and he suffered him." In the performance of this act, we learn one thing, that Jesus had placed himself in the national capacity, and had accepted of the conditions of the covenant; and as he became the curse for the nation the blow fell upon him. Hence he paid the national penalty, and died in place of the nation He has redeemed the national life, and it is invested in himself; and thereby everlasting righteousness was brought in, and God confirmed the truth of the promise made to Abraham, that all nations should be blessed in him. Rom. xv. 8–13. And also the language of the apostle, If ye be in Christ, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. And the language of Jesus, The kingdom shall be taken from you (Jews) and given to a poeple bringing forth the fruits thereof. It is the same promised King, the heir of Abraham, the heir of David, made doubly sure; first, by promise; second, by redemption; and third, it will be sure to all the heirs, for an everlasting possession, through the everlasting covenant, for our King is risen from the dead, to die no more forever. And it doth not yet appear what we shall be, yet we know, when our King shall come, we shall be like him. This then is what we understand the mission of Jesus to be, to fill up the law; take it out of the way; redeem the nationality of Israel, and bring in everlasting righteousness under the new covenant; so that we should no longer be strangers of the covenants and alienated from the nationality of Israel; but that we might be fellow heirs and members of the commonwealth and of the nationality. Christ our King, God's only Son, and we the adopted heirs into the family, to be sons of God, being children of the resurrection. The old and temporal covenant was done away; Jesus was put to death under it, but he rises under the new and everlasting covenant, our High Priest after the order of an everlasting life; and may it be all our prayers that we may attain that kingdom, even a resurrection of the dead.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

It was once true that science was altogether employed against the Bible; but that is no longer the case. It now corroborates it. But it does conflict with church dogmas and systems. Galileo was the first notable scholar who attacked church superstition successfully. Spurzein and Gall did as important a work in showing that the mind—believed in their day, as now, to be the soul or spirit—was merely the action of the brain nerves, and not something independent of matter. Combe elaborated on this idea, and died the best read man in Scotland; and better than our phrenologists in this country, who sold out to popular prejudice, he died honored by men of learning, and esteemed by all good men. The study of man, his powers, and their derivation, of which this last branch was the foundation, has widened rapidly within the last score of years, until now we see eminent men, in different fields of investigation, and living wide apart, coming to the same conclusion, identically, as have Geo. Storrs and his unpretending followers, guided alone by the light of divine revelation. We have already called attention to the subject of the correlation of force, the embodiment of investigation of modern philosophers in regard to "motion," in which it is demonstrated that action is necessarily identified with matter. Also Prof. Youmas's lecture proving the folly of the prevalent superstititious notion that man has some mysterious quality that acts independent of organism. We last week added to the list of aids to truth, the name of ex-Chancellor Halsted. We have heard Prof. Agassiz, claimed as a rationalist, declare that this world has gone through six periods of sudden and remarkable change, each bringing a higher order of existence upon the earth, until man appeared, and that he has every reason to believe that there would be another like change that would introduce on the earth an order of beings higher than man's present state. This gentleman is the most eminent investigator of nature since Humboldt. He is now engaged in delivering lectures, and while he cites many beautiful ideas and innumerable facts to sustain the truth of Scripture, we have never noticed aught in conflict therewith. We give an extract from one of his lectures as bearing somewhat on our view of man's organism. He is to treat this subject in a special lecture, when we shall learn more particulars in this interesting branch of science, in which we have much interest:

W. M.

We have animals of an aquatic, or terrestrial, or aerial mode of life, all showing one and the same structure. I like to insist upon these facts, which are the most brilliant results of modern progress or science, because you see at once what bearing they have upon the question of the origin of these things. If we have identical structures under the most diversified conditions of existence, these external things which act upon living beings cannot have been the cause which has produced such unity in plan. The unity of plan—that ideal common basis of animals—must be derived from something higher than the conditions in which these animals live, when we find that notwithstanding these diversified conditions, the animals present one and the same plan and structure. [Applause.] The next type is that of vertebra. It is one which has a special interest for us, for we belong there [laughter], and with us all the animals which have a backbone, all the animals which have an internal solid axis so arranged as to surround two distinct cavities in which the various organs of the body are inclosed, one cavity below that axis in which all these parts or all those systems of the organs are contained by which life is maintained in its normal condition. These are the organs of digestion through which food is assimilated and transformed for the subsistence of the body, the organs of breathing in which this assimilation is fostered, the organs of circulation through which the result of these operations, is circulated through the system, and also the organs of reproduction. All these organs by which animal life is simply maintained are contained in the lower cavity of the body while an upper cavity contains organs which establish the relations between the animals and the surrounding world. In that upper cavity is contained, in the anterior part of the body, the brain, and in the middle and posterior parts of the body the prolongation of the brain which we call the spinal marrow. From it arises the nerves, which are scattered through all parts of the body and send sensibility and also receive impressions from the outside.

To this centre are attached the organs of the senses, and which communicate directly with the central mass of the nervous system. All

"GLORY TO GOD."

BY "KRUPTOS:" alias, GEO. F. STORRS.

Redemption yields the highest glory to God. We say the highest glory, for though His absolute glory, like His eternal being and infinite perfections, admits of no degrees, and is affected by no circumstances whatever, it is otherwise with "His declarative glory," as old theologians called it. This, which we speak of, and which angels sang of, consists in the manifestation of His attributes. Whatever it be, though only the drop of water, which appears a world of wonders to the eye of a man of science, any work is glorious which reflects the divine character in any measure, and still more glorious or glorifying which exhibits it in a greater measure. God's glory expands and unfolds itself as we rise upward in the study of his works—from inanimate to living objects; from plants to animals; from animals to man; from man to angels, upward and still upward, to the Being who, bathed in the full blaze of divine effulgence, tops the pyramid, and stands on the highest pinnacle of creation. That Being is God manifest in the flesh. Our Lord Jesus Christ—the redemption which he wrought for us, through blood and suffering, and death, being the work that reveals God most fully to our eyes, and forming a looking glass, so to speak, to reflect the whole measure of divinity. This will appear if we look at—

THE REDEEMER.—One of His many titles is the Wonderful. Anticipating the royal birth at Bethlehem, and speaking of Christ in terms which no other key can open but the doctrine of his divinity, Isaiah says, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." With pencils of sunlight, God paints the rose; by arts of divine chemistry He turns foul decay into the snow-white purity and fragrant odors of a lily; He fashions the infant in the darkness of the mother's womb; He inspires dead matter with the active principle of life; in man he breaths the breath of life into a lump of clay—wonders these which have perplexed the wisest men and remain as incomprehensible to philosophers as to fools. Yet, as if there were no mystery but that our understanding could fathom—as if there was nothing in these to teach proud man humility and rouse his admiration—as if there was indeed no wonder but Christ himself in all this great and glorious universe, He is called, by way of eminence, the Wonderful. And why? Because, as the stars cease to shine in presence of the sun, quenched by the effulgence, and drowned in the flood of his brighter beams, these lose all their wonders beside this little child. To a meditative man it is curious to stand over any cradle where an infant sleeps, and as we look on the face so calm, and the little arms gently folded on the placid breast, to think of the mighty powers and passions which are slumbering there; to think that this feeble nursling has capacities for an endless existence; that its mortal form may at last become allied to angels. Much more wonderful the spectacle the manger offers, where shepherds bend their knees, and angels bend their eyes! What deep secrets of divine wisdom, power, and love, lie here; wrapped up in these poor swaddling clothes! Mary holds in her arms, in this manger, with its straw, what draws the wondering eyes, and inspires the loftiest songs of angels. If that be not God's greatest, and therefore most glorifying work, where are we to seek it? in what else is it found? "The depth saith, It is not in me; and the sea saith It is not in me!" Were we to range the vast universe to find its rival, we should return, like the dove to its ark, to the stable-door, and the swaddled babe, there to mingle human voices with the heavenly choir—singing, "Glory to God in the highest!"

The fact that redemption yields God the highest glory will appear, also, if we look at—

THE REDEEMED.—It is in them, in sinners saved, not in the holy and happy angels, that God stands out fully revealed as in a mirror; long and broad enough if we may say so, to show forth all his attributes. To vary the figure: the cross of Christ is the focus in which all the beams of divinity, all the attributes of the Godhead, are gathered into one bright, burning spot, with power to warm the coldest and melt the stoniest heart. No man hath seen God at any time, otherwise than in his works, and though created things are immeasurably inferior to their Creator, they may still help us to form some conception of his character. A drop of water is an ocean; a spark of fire is a sun; every grain of sand on the sea-shore is a world in miniature; and as those who have never seen ocean, or sun, or world, may form some idea of their appearance by magnifying these their miniatures millions of millions of times, so, by immensely magnifying the age, the power, the wisdom, the holiness of an angel, we could form some dim conception of God. Not that we would not have still to ask, "Who can by searching find out God? who can find out the Almighty to perfection?"—not that when we had exclaimed, in the sublime words of Job, "Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering. He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth on nothing. He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds. He holdeth back the face of his throne. The pillars of heaven tremble and are astonished at his reproof. He divideth the sea with his power. By his Spirit he hath garnished the heavens;" not that we would not have to add with the patriarch, "These are parts of his ways; but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand?"

Study him, for example, in the angels who sung his birth song. They are holy; and we may conclude that their Maker is infinitely holy; they are wise, and he who made them must possess infinite wisdom; they are powerful, and he must be omnipotent; the God of good angels must be infinitely good, as the avenger of sin and evil ones, and must be infinitely just. This is sound reasoning—for, as David says, "He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? He that formed the eye, shall he not see? He that chastiseth the heathen, shall he not correct?" He that teacheth man knowledge, shall he not know? Still, however lofty and worthy were the conceptions which we thus formed of God, he had never been discovered in the full glory of his gracious character by this or any corresponding process. Unspeakable honor to man and unspeakable grace in God, the fulness of his character is revealed, not by seraphs but by saints—in redeemed and ransomed sinners. And so all who have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb, are trophies of free saving mercy; monuments of that love which—when stern justice had dragged us to the mouth of the pit, and angels, who had seen their fellows punished by one awful act of justice, stood in dread and silent expectation of another—graciously interposed, saying, "Deliver from going down to the pit, I have found a ransom." Then, blessed Son of God, thou didst step forward to say, And I am that ransom! From that day heaven was happier. It found a new joy. Angels tuned their harps to higher strains; and now, these blessed spirits above the mean jealousies of earth's elder brothers, whenever they see Christ born anew in a soul—a sinner born again, called, converted, apparelled in Jesus' righteousness, rejoicing in his arms, or even weeping at his feet, make up the old, grand birthsong, singing, "Glory to God in the highest." "There is joy," said Jesus, "in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth—joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance."

MY DEBATES WITH ELD. PREBLE.

NUMBER ONE.

Bro. James S. Brooks, of Portland, under date of the 11th ultimo, wrote me as follows:—

"Dear Bro. Wendell:—I have just seen in the Crisis a report of your discussion with Eld. Preble, in which he says you by silence admit his position to be true. Is it so? I some time ago became a firm believer that the penalty of the Adamic transgression was eternal death in and of itself. But there is a proviso, and that is Christ; and, as all are not in Christ, they must still be under the penalty, and that forever. So you see I was some inrerested in the Discussion. I could not be there. Now I wish you to write me a few lines about it. Your brother, in hope of Life through Christ."

Bro. John C. Day, of South Ashburnham, Mass., under date of 2d inst., wrote:—

"My Dear Bro. Rufus:—I thought I would disturb your quiet by writing a few lines to you, as it has been a long time since we heard anything from you. And I have been thinking that perhaps the reason might be that Eld. Preble's carefully written article in the Crisis, said to be his closing speech in the late discussion in Salem, had brought you over to believe in a temporary purgatory, at least for the wicked, and that you might be stopping to recover yourself a little, and take breath, before you made it known. But if this is not the case I hope we shall hear from you in some way before long. We always look for your name the first thing on opening the paper, but not a scratch do we find from you. O, how glad we should be to have you come up and spend a few days with us. I will agree that your expenses shall be paid, and I think the Life views would be well received here if they could be wisely set before the people. What say, brother R.? Will you come and spend one Sunday and a few evenings with us? I think it might be the means of great good. We have had no preaching here for a long time. All want to see you. Phebe and the boys join in much love to yourself, Sister W., and the children. Do let us hear from you in some way. In haste and much love, from thy brother in Christ."

Bro. Timothy Wheeler, of Waterbury Centre, Vt., wrote me under date of the 3d inst:—

"Dear Bro. Wendell:—Your name, together with CURRY and STORRS, seems very precious to me on account of our common faith in the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. This is a precious and lovely truth with me; one which I discovered some ten years ago, long before I knew anything about you three men. O, how clearly the light shines on this heavenly truth! Nature is full of analogies illustrating this truth. Revelation is very clear upon the point. One or two texts seem to teach the reverse.

"I see by the Crisis that Preble has used you nearly up? How is it? I have been watching the HERALD OF LIFE to see if there was not another side to it, but, as yet, see nothing from you. Is the discussion published? If so, I want it. I have seen nothing in relation to it.

"H. L. Hastings—what does it mean? In all his late publicatians there is nothing to show that he disbelieves in the immortality of the soul, conscious state of the dead, and eternal misery. Indeed, I should think he believed it all, had I never read anything of him but his late writings. His former works on this subject he does not advertise. Has he changed his mind? If not, what is his policy? I never will compromise Truth. Yours for the Truth."

RESPONSIVE REMARKS.

1. My long silence in the paper, in relation to the debate and also various other matters about which I have greatly desired to write, has been owing entirely to the circumstance, that my time, for several months past, has been devoted to business responsibilities, which were undertaken for the purpose of enabling me to "make ends meet" in the pecuniary line. During this time my Sunday labors have not been intermitted, but it has seemed impossible to get the rest and leisure necessary for the purpose of preparing matter suitable for the paper. I have toiled hard and had many weary hours. But God has blessed me with excellent health, and there are a thousand things which should awaken my gratitude for his mercy to me and mine. I think, however, that in the future I shall (if life and health are continued) be able to send an article to our beloved Editor quite as often at least as he will send a paper to the reader: and if I shall be able to furnish acceptable contributions, I cherish a hope that my future sins of omission will relate, if at all, in very small measure to the matterof writing for the HERALD OF LIFE. Its mission was never dearer to my heart than now; and I may add that the Editorial management, in its general features, has my warmest approval. We have the right man in the right place, and it will be a shame to us younger men if we do not hold up his hands and give him constant proofs of our loyalty to the great truth of Life only in Jesus Christ. I am not tinctured with the doctrine of justification by works, but I confess that no act brings me a speedier or sweeter recompense in the way of an approving conscience than when I am in some way laboring to help this paper in its work of scatttering light on the Life theme. But this must suffice on this point.

2. I have engaged Bro. Boutell to preach for me here in Salem next Sunday, but when I did so I did not know where I should labor on that day. But in transcribing Br. Day's letter for this article it flashes across my mind that I ought next Sunday to proclaim Life only in Christ in South Asburnham. And this I will do if the Lord permit. I have many times been invited to visit that place, and now I rejoice to find the way so unexpectedly opened for me to go. I shall send Br. Day word by this mail.

3. I rejoice to find my dear brother Brooks, of Portland, standing firmly on our Life view, and I thank him for writing me. I honor him for the noble liberality of feeling which he displayed years ago when he did not hold the view. He is a leading man—a "pillar"—in the Portland Advent church, but he never used his position to impose trammels upon any man who wanted to present his honest convictions in their pulpit. Never shall I forget the Sunday which I devoted (several years ago) to the presentation of the Life doctrine in Portland. Then Br. B. believed me in error, but he was willing that I should be heard. In this connection I will say, that, if Br. B. will arrange with Eld. Preble to debate with me on the wicked-dead question in P., I will gladly give the church there a chance to see for themselves what sort of argumentation I was met with in Alton and this city.

4. In reply to the brethren whose letters are given above, I have to say that I am now in a situation to devote a little attention to Eld. Preble's Crisis version of the Debate, and to sundry other matters about which he found it convenient to be silent. I shall come to my work directly in my next article. Eld. P. is a subscriber to our paper, and I shall miss my guess if he doesnot see cause to wish that his "modest" account of the debate had remained in his portfolio. And yet I ought not to be too sanguine on this point, for Eld. P. must have known what kind of an exposure he was inviting by his publication in the Crisis. He probably counted on the fact that his medium of reaching the public was one from which any correction from me would, as a matter of course, be excluded.

5. I can give Br. Wheeler no special information respecting the "policy" of Eld. Hastings. I have been upbraided by Prof. C. F. H. for characterizing his (H. L. H's) course as "deplorable retrogression;" and upon the Professor's authority I stated in this paper, last summer, that The Christian would give utterance to the "heresy of Destruction" so soon as its Editor should think he could "do so to the best effect." My own opinion is that it will never be done, and I remain steadfast in the conviction his whole procedure is an eminent instance of "deplorable retrogression."

R. W.

WHAT LAW?

BY JACOB GRIM.

In our last we spoke of the two covenants; the one made with Abraham being the first in point of time, but the second in its confirmation. The Mosaic covenant being confirmed in the days in which it was made.

The second covenant required the obedience of Jesus Christ in order to its confirmation. For although Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the faithful had fallen asleep, the apostle declared, "And if Christ be not raised (from the dead) your faith is vain: ye are yet in your sins. Then they also (as well as Christ) which have fallen asleep in him are perished." 1 Cor. xv. 17, 18. Here is a fact demonstrated to my mind that the new covenant needs, for its confirmation, the resurrection of Jesus Christ.

We will now look for the reason, or the need of Jesus being made under the first covenant for the truth of God. We have shown that God by an everlasting covenant deeded the landto Abraham, and his seed for an everlasting inheritance.

We also find that under the covenant God made with Moses, He promised the children of Israel a possession and a kingdom in this same land, and promised them that by obedience they should dwell in the land as the lot of their inheritance.

To my mind, in reading the scriptures, there has always been a difficulty in fulfilling these two classes of promises; the one made to Abraham for an everlasting possession, as an individual, and the other to Israel as a nation to dwell in the land which the Lord giveth thee. Deut. xxviii.

While Israel as a nation is occupying the land, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as individuals in their resurrection state, are kept out of it.

We read in Matt. iii. 2, that John came preaching, "And saying, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Likewise Jesus, in Mark i. 15, came preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, "And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe the gospel."

Now we believe in time; and we further believe that John and Jesus knew exactly what they were preaching about. And they both declare the kingdom of God is at hand; and the one Jesus, said the time was fulfilled. We are asked, "What time was fulfilled?" We answer, the time for the duration of the first covenant, or as the apostle to the Heb. ix: 26, the end of the world, or age, or dispensation. And the time for the establishment of the kingdom of God. The time Daniel spoke of, when he said, seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, (as the Lord once said to Noah, My Spirit shall not always strive with man: yet his days shall be 120 years); so in this case God declares his purpose to "finish transgression, and to make an end of sins (under the first covenant), and to make reconciliation for niquity." The apostle says, for this reason, Jesus took upon him the seed of Abraham, "that through death he might destroy him (or it) that had the power of death; that is, the adversary, (the Mosaic covenant); and deliver them who through fear of death, were all their life time subject to bondage." Heb. ii. 14, 15. Paul, in Gal., calls this a yoke of bondage. In Gal., we read that Jesus was made under the law, to deliver those under the law. In Rom. xv. 8, we read that Jesus was "made a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God to the fathers." And in Heb. ix. 15, And for this cause he is the Mediator of the New Covenant, that by means of death for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant, (that) they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance." Here we have positive testimony that it was the first, or Mosaic covenant, under which Jesus was made in order to redeem Israel from under that covenant; and the time allotted to that covenant was that spoken of by Daniel the prophet. And when John and Jesus came preaching, The kingdom of heaven is at hand, it was the kingdom promised under the first covenant. It is remarked that the promises under this covenant belong to literal Israel; and as they have received the curses threatened under the covenant they should also receive the blessings. We answer; our business is with the law, and the conditions connected with the law. We know, as Paul says, that God promised Abraham this land 400 years before the law, and the law cannot affect the promise of God and make it of none effect; and we also know that God cannot give the land by promise for an everlasting possession to Abraham and his seed, and at the same time give it to the nation of Israel in the flesh for a perpetual inheritance; for Israel could only occupy it as all other nations do; one generation pass away and another take their place. Paul, in discussing this question in Gal. iii. 15, says, "When a covenant is confirmed, no man disannuleth or addeth thereto. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He sayeth not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one; and to thy seed, which is Christ." Now, evidently, Paul is speaking of the inheritance, one and the same, under the two covenants. For if the inheritance be of the law it is no more of promise; but God gave it to Abraham by promise; evidently one and the same. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under a curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them." Gal. iii. Now under this curse Christ found every child of Israel. And to redeem them from under this curse, Christ came. And the apostle says, "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us."

Now, here are two covenants involving the same people and the same inheritance. The last covenant is so made that it involves the national life of Israel. And as God had predetermined, as announced by the mouth of his servant Daniel, that in a given time he would wind up this covenant, and make an end of sin, and transgression under this covenant, unless some plan was adopted for the redemption of the nation, its national life would be forfeited, and God's promises to Abraham and David fail. Here we find God's plan revealed; and it is, that Jesus shall take upon himself the fulfilment of the law, complete the covenant, and redeem the nation from under the curse of the covenant. And in the language of Caiaphas, "Ye know nothing at all, nor consider that it is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." John xi. 50. In the language of the prophet—"But he was wounded for transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities." Isa. liii. We read that John came preaching repentance and baptism for the remission of sins; and Jesus came to John requesting to be baptized of him. Now Jesus was not a sinner, that he needed to be baptized for their remission; and so John informed him: but, says Jesus, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness; and he suffered him." In the performance of this act, we learn one thing, that Jesus had placed himself in the national capacity, and had accepted of the conditions of the covenant; and as he became the curse for the nation the blow fell upon him. Hence he paid the national penalty, and died in place of the nation He has redeemed the national life, and it is invested in himself; and thereby everlasting righteousness was brought in, and God confirmed the truth of the promise made to Abraham, that all nations should be blessed in him. Rom. xv. 8–13. And also the language of the apostle, If ye be in Christ, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. And the language of Jesus, The kingdom shall be taken from you (Jews) and given to a poeple bringing forth the fruits thereof. It is the same promised King, the heir of Abraham, the heir of David, made doubly sure; first, by promise; second, by redemption; and third, it will be sure to all the heirs, for an everlasting possession, through the everlasting covenant, for our King is risen from the dead, to die no more forever. And it doth not yet appear what we shall be, yet we know, when our King shall come, we shall be like him. This then is what we understand the mission of Jesus to be, to fill up the law; take it out of the way; redeem the nationality of Israel, and bring in everlasting righteousness under the new covenant; so that we should no longer be strangers of the covenants and alienated from the nationality of Israel; but that we might be fellow heirs and members of the commonwealth and of the nationality. Christ our King, God's only Son, and we the adopted heirs into the family, to be sons of God, being children of the resurrection. The old and temporal covenant was done away; Jesus was put to death under it, but he rises under the new and everlasting covenant, our High Priest after the order of an everlasting life; and may it be all our prayers that we may attain that kingdom, even a resurrection of the dead.

Many are complaining of their weakness who ought to be complaining of their worldliness.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

It was once true that science was altogether employed against the Bible; but that is no longer the case. It now corroborates it. But it does conflict with church dogmas and systems. Galileo was the first notable scholar who attacked church superstition successfully. Spurzein and Gall did as important a work in showing that the mind—believed in their day, as now, to be the soul or spirit—was merely the action of the brain nerves, and not something independent of matter. Combe elaborated on this idea, and died the best read man in Scotland; and better than our phrenologists in this country, who sold out to popular prejudice, he died honored by men of learning, and esteemed by all good men. The study of man, his powers, and their derivation, of which this last branch was the foundation, has widened rapidly within the last score of years, until now we see eminent men, in different fields of investigation, and living wide apart, coming to the same conclusion, identically, as have Geo. Storrs and his unpretending followers, guided alone by the light of divine revelation. We have already called attention to the subject of the correlation of force, the embodiment of investigation of modern philosophers in regard to "motion," in which it is demonstrated that action is necessarily identified with matter. Also Prof. Youmas's lecture proving the folly of the prevalent supersititious notion that man has some mysterious quality that acts independent of organism. We last week added to the list of aids to truth, the name of ex-Chancellor Halsted. We have heard Prof. Agassiz, claimed as a rationalist, declare that this world has gone through six periods of sudden and remarkable change, each bringing a higher order of existence upon the earth, until man appeared, and that he has every reason to believe that there would be another like change that would introduce on the earth an order of beings higher than man's present state. This gentleman is the most eminent investigator of nature since Humboldt. He is now engaged in delivering lectures, and while he cites many beautiful ideas and innumerable facts to sustain the truth of Scripture, we have never noticed aught in conflict therewith. We give an extract from one of his lectures as bearing somewhat on our view of man's organism. He is to treat this subject in a special lecture, when we shall learn more particulars in this interesting branch of science, in which we have much interest:

W. M.

We have animals of an aquatic, or terrestrial, or aerial mode of life, all showing one and the same structure. I like to insist upon these facts, which are the most brilliant results of modern progress or science, because you see at once what bearing they have upon the question of the origin of these things. If we have identical structures under the most diversified conditions of existence, these external things which act upon living beings cannot have been the cause which has produced such unity in plan. The unity of plan—that ideal common basis of animals—must be derived from something higher than the conditions in which these animals live, when we find that notwithstanding these diversified conditions, the animals present one and the same plan and structure. [Applause.] The next type is that of vertebra. It is one which has a special interest for us, for we belong there [laughter], and with us all the animals which have a backbone, all the animals which have an internal solid axis so arranged as to surround two distinct cavities in which the various organs of the body are inclosed, one cavity below that axis in which all these parts or all those systems of the organs are contained by which life is maintained in its normal condition. These are the organs of digestion through which food is assimilated and transformed for the subsistence of the body, the organs of breathing in which this assimilation is fostered, the organs of circulation through which the result of these operations, is circulated through the system, and also the organs of reproduction. All these organs by which animal life is simply maintained are contained in the lower cavity of the body while an upper cavity contains organs which establish the relations between the animals and the surrounding world. In that upper cavity is contained, in the anterior part of the body, the brain, and in the middle and posterior parts of the body the prolongation of the brain which we call the spinal marrow. From it arises the nerves, which are scattered through all parts of the body and send sensibility and also receive impressions from the outside.

To this centre are attached the organs of the senses, and which communicate directly with the central mass of the nervous system. All these parts are contained in the upper cavity of the body, and the whole is surrounded by flesh and inclosed in a skin, and whatever be the type of vertebra which we take for examination, whether man or quadruped, bird, reptile, snake, turtle, or fish, all have the same identical structure, and these structures differ only in the form and complication of the execution, but in no way does the plan differ in the slightest degree. A shark, or a perch, a man, or a bird, have the same identical plan of structure, and we could make a cut across their body, through the neck, the head, the chest, or the tail, and compare one with the other, and we would find that the sections had the same organs which had the same relations to one another; and if we compared one section in the same body with the other, a cut made through the head, or through the middle, or through the hind part of the part again, we would find the same relations, so wonderful is the idea which is manifested in this innumerable variety. This is not a fanciful assumption.

The brain is only an enlarged portion of the spinal marrow, or, to reverse it, the spinal marrow is a modification of the brain extending through the body. So that you see that my assertion is true, that in whatever region we may make a section to examine the relative positions of the organs of the vertebra, we find the organs identical, bearing the same relation to one another. And it is in consequence of this great similarity that the idea has been started that all these animals may be derived one from the other; that all these animals may be the result of successive modifications of the few. You see on the one hand we have these uniform conditions which sustain the most diversified forms; then again we have this unity of plan, which seems to be in contradiction to the variety of influences under which these animals exist. Then again we have an extraordinary diversity of forms which seems to indicate the most diversified organs; and yet such is the similarity among these various things that they seem to be only a modification one of the other. No wonder, therefore, that investigators should make it their special object to study these things, and that they should differ in their opinions so much that there should be those who cannot conceive the cause of this diversity, unless it be the immediate manifestation of a special creative act on the part of a being capable of producing at once perfect beings; while others, more inclined, perhaps, to follow development and progress than to look at first cause of all things, would rather have everything derived from a few primary forms which have undergone extraordinary changes in the course of time. I only point at present to the bearing which these investigations of structural relations have upon the question of origin, upon the question of diversity, and upon the question of unity in diversity. For all things that exist in some point of view are alike chiefly by the unity which prevails throughout nature; while from another point of view everything seems different; and when we come to consider what may be the origin of all things, we are at once led, on the one hand, to the evidence of the workings of one mind, and, on the other hand, to the ever-changing conditions under which everything lives; and in consequence of that these various opinions—some assuming that all things have grown out of the change of a few things, and others assuming that everything must have been made as it is by a Supreme Power.

DR. CUMMING'S PREDICTIONS.—Rev. Dr. Cumming, of London, writes to the Times to complain that the report which was published of his recent sermon was inaccurate. The report asserts that Dr. Cumming fixed the consummation of all things and the end of the world in the past year—1866. But he says he neither said nor meant it. He merely took the opportunity of stating that twenty years ago Elliott and the greatest writers on prophecy, starting from A. D 532 or from A. D. 606, have taught that we may expect this very year the final judgment on the Papacy, "so far as providential." But all of us expect, he continues, that it is not to be utterly destroyed till He comes whose right it is to reign. The earth, he believes, is to be transformed, not annihilated. Dr. Cumming goes on to say that he has stated in a work published in 1865, called "The Last Warning Cry," and illustrated by historical proofs in a work which Nisbet will publish in a few days, entitled "The Sounding of the Last Trumpet," that the great prophetic epochs, on the fairest and most reliable data, expire in 1867. In one of these he has written —"I adhere to the solution I have given of the exhaustion of the great chronological epochs of prophecy as alike most probable and most justified by induction from events. How soon after 1867 the Redeemer will return and take the kingdom and reign over all the earth I cannot say."

"The Gospel of God, or The Love of God as Revealed in the Plan of Redemption." By Elder R. V. Lyon, Suspension Bridge, N. Y. This is a tract of 20 pages, being the substance of a lecture delivered by the author in the Methodist Church, Niagara Falls. It goes over the whole ground of God's plan in creating man; the conditions under which he placed him, the nature of those conditions, who are to get life in the future, and the doom of unbelievers in Jesus. Elder Lyon is the author of 17 other tracts; in all of which he most clearly and soundly treats the great and vital questions of christian religion, as well as in the present one.

"The Theology of the Bible."

We gave our readers a notice of this learned and invaluable work last week, and now refer to it again to say, the more we study it, the more we see its value. We give below an extract from the closing part of the work. The author, "OLIVER SPENCER HALSTED, Ex-Chancellor of the state of N. J.," after stating there is "conclusive proof that" the early christians held that "christianity was" the doctrine that, "The just by Faith, shall live AGAIN," says:

The reader now has the result of more than twelve years faithful study. I believe that no work of the kind has ever been given to the public. It seems to me that the mode adopted is the natural and only sure mode of obtaining the true system taught in the Bible. Books of so-called Theology, and of men's arguments and inventions, have become so multiplied that a life time is not sufficient to read and compare the thousand and one different and contradictory views of men, on various points supposed to be involved in the Theos logos—God-word—Theo-logy—of the Bible, but which have really no foundation in God's word. The result has been, and is to-day, what Draper well calls an "anarchy of sects.' And this result, now upon us, after so many centuries and such unnumbered volumes of controversy, proves that, unless some such mode be resorted to as has been adopted in this work, such books and writings will become so numerous that, to use the hyperbole of John, the world cannot contain them.

The more one reads of such books and writings, if he reads all sides, the less he is able to come to any conclusion; and he either abandons in despair the whole subject of Theology, or he confines his reading to books which argue for the tenets of the sect in connection with which he has been brought up. The past, then, which is a teacher in reference to the future, instructs us that men's arguments, though they should be continued through all time, will lead to no beneficial result; and proves, that there is but one way to reach the truth: and that way is, to discard all the different theories which different sects would impose upon us, and set ourselves to an examination of the original Scriptures, just as if no other Scriptures than those in which the God-word was originally given were ever written. They were written for all time; and should, therefore be studied with all the care and interest with which they would be if now first given for the very purpose of putting an end to sect and controversy and giving unity to the Church.

Have we any prospect that all or any of the sects will discard their theories and resort to the original Scriptures in any proper manner? I see none. Within a short time past I asked a bookseller in New York if he had a translation of the Old Testament from the Hebrew. He answered, yes. And what does the reader suppose he handed to me? It was a book in which the Hebrew was printed in one column, in verses, and the English version, in corresponding verses, in a parallel column. I told him I had the Hebrew, and had the English version, and therefore did not want the book. I have since seen, in the same bookstore, another and more costly edition of the same book: price $11. It is published by Samuel Bagster and Sons, London. Now this book bears on its face the affirmation that the English version of the Old Testament is a correct translation from the Hebrew; and so, the affirmation that it is altogether useless to study the Hebrew. Who but an English Version Orthodoxist could ever have thought of causing the publication of such a book? And who that believes the affirmation it makes on its face to be true will undertake the labor of studying the Hebrew?

After seeing the book above described, a relative at whose house I frequently visit showed me a book which he thought I would like to see. I looked into it, and found that it contained the Greek of the New Testament in one column and the English version of it in a parallel column; a similar publication to that above described in reference to the Hebrew of the Old Testament. I told him what it was. His wife, a remarkably intelligent lady, immediately said: It is a cheat. And the book was laid aside as worthless. Both husband and wife are members, in full communion, of a Presbyterian church. I have since seen this same book for sale in the same bookstore in New York, price, $3 50. It is published in London by the same Saml. Bagster and Sons.

The author, after having thoroughly examined the Book of Job on the subject of "resurrection," page 513, says:

"Having now got from this earliest sacred record the glorious truth, that they who have died and shall die in Christ will be raised to life again; and the sad truth, that all who have died and shall die in their sins will never again see the light of life; we shall find, (as would necessarily be the case; for Scripture could not, and does not, contradict itself,) that these are the truths taught throughout all Scripture on the subject of Resurretion."

His refutation of the notion that the wicked dead will live again, is most perfect and complete. Life from the dead is only to "The just:" such as are so "By Faith:" they "shall live AGAIN;" and they only.

P. S.—Since the foregoing was in type we have received the following communication from Judge HALSTED; for which he will receive our thanks:

NEWARK, N. J., Feb. 22, 1867.

MR. GEORGE STORRS: Dear Sir:—I received yesterday, through the mail, from I know not whom, a copy of your paper, THE HERALD OF LIFE: and to my surprise and gratification found in it a very favorable, I might say flattering, notice—I presume from your pen—of a book very lately published by me, entitled, "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE: Itself the Teacher, and its own Interpreter." I am very thankful for the zeal in the cause of truth which prompted such a notice of the book.

I write for the purpose of making a remark or two in reference to that part of your article which says: "Judge Halsted's work employs so many words from the Hebrew without the vowels that it cannot be read by the unlearned, with so much interest, perhaps not with so much profit, as it would have been if he had supplied them (the vowels). And, then, his translation of the original, leaving the words in the same order as they stand in the original, will make it less interesting to the common people than if he had transposed the words, as is usual in translations"

I remark, first, in reference to the Hebrew words without vowels. The Hebrew has the long vowels, a, e, i, o, u; and whenever they occur in Hebrew words given in the book (always given in our own letters), they are used. But in countless instances Hebrew words are found in which no one of these vowels is used. The Hebrews used no letters—characters—for the short vowel sounds contained in consonants. They relied, for pronunciation, on the short vowel sounds contained in the consonants, when the word has no long vowel. See page 71 of the book. The Hebrew letter—character—is not used at all in the book; but our own letters. The sound of the words is not material: the reader can sound them as he pleases, or not sound them at all.

The plan of the book is very simple. It first makes the reader familiar with the Hebrew word, and its meaning. For example, the word enphsh—breath (English version, about half the time, soul); and follows the word enphsh all through the Old Testament, and gives the various words used for it in the different versions. And the word psuche, the word generally used in the Greek version of the Old Testament for the Hebrew enphsh, is followed through all the New Testament, and the various words used for it in the different versions are given.

The reader soon becomes so familiar with the Hebrew word that it is not necessary to repeat the meaning of it often. In other instances where a Hebrew word is introduced the meaning of it immediately follows, and the English may be read as if the Hebrew word was not introduced. It was necessary to give the original words for which the English words given in the preface to the book are used.

With the above explanation, I should be sorry to think that any one who has received a common school education could not read the book with ease. Indeed, several who received no other education (and no explanation) have told me that they read it with entire satisfaction: one of them saying: "It is the best book ever written;" he was formerly a class leader in a Methodist church: another, "that it has rammed out of him all the theological pith, as a boy rams the pith out of a piece of elder, and that now he can look through the tube (thus made) and see the light:" another, that "the book will be read by thousands upon thousands, and that edition after edition will be required." A physician who has long been a full member of a Methodist church said to me, that the book utterly demolishes the dogma inherent immortality, and that it is the first successful battery ever leveled against it. And a judge of one of our high courts has told me, that the view given by the book is the true view, or universalism is true. Another has told me that the book "furnishes a stopping place short of the infidelity to which the age is rushing;" impelled (I add) by the repulsiveness and incredulity of the so-called orthodox system of theology. You could have had the book but a very short time (you must have received it from one who had bought it), and yet you have already come to a correct knowledge of the view it establishes.

As to your second remark, that the author's "translation of the original, leaving the words in the same order as they stand in the original, will make it less interesting to the common people than if he had transposed the words, as is usual in translations," I refer you to Acts iv. 2, page 599 of the book; and Acts xiii. 48, page 328 of the book: and 2 Tim. i. 10, page 327 of the book reading first what is said in the two preceding pages), to show the effect of allowing translators to transpose the words used in the original; and how they do actually transpose them to suit a theory.

Please add my name to the list of your subscribers. I am happy to learn that I have so able a fellow-laborer in the cause in which I have been so long engaged.

The price is $3. I published it myself that it might be put low. It will be forwarded without charge on the receipt of that sum in a letter addressed to Hon. O. S. Halsted, or O. S. Halsted, Senior, 417 Broad Street, Newark, New Jersey. I am, sir, very respectfully,

Your obedient Servant,

O. S. HALSTED

A Word of Remonstrance.

The signature "Paulo," in No. 19, conceals the personality of a writer whose two articles, bating a single item in one of them, which we shall presently mention, we cordially endorse. The one upon which we propose to offer a remark is the first of the two—"Was Paul Inspired?" The utterances therein attributed to "a highly esteemed brother" have not, at least for substance, been entirely restricted to sermons from the pulpit. Once at least—only once, we believe—has the sentiment objected to found its way into these columns. But we are happy to know of not one person, besides its author, in the ranks of Life believers, with whom it has found acceptance. It has in no degree the savor of an heavenly origin, and can gain favor with none who have unperverted apprehensions respecting the foundations of our Christian faith. How much influence it has had in moulding the views of the "highly esteemed brother" who, apparently without any misgivings, has espoused it, and who seems little to appreciate how its promulgation must shock the most sacred convictions of the Christian community, we do not know. But we do most unhesitatingly assert that no man can be a safe public teacher who stands committed to a position so blighting in its character. And we further declare our solemn belief that, as a people, we owe it to God and his Truth to set our faces like flint against every encroachment of errors so pernicious. Neither the attainments, the sincerity, nor the boldness of any man professing to be a preacher of Christ's Gospel should insure him our Godspeed in his work as a religious instructor, if he dares, in whatever exigency of doctrine or argument, to affirm that "Paul in writing a letter to a church was just as liable to be mistaken as anybody else." We have no harsh word for a man who holds this, but we do say that his unsoundness is so radical that he should desist from instructing others in the Gospel message until such time as he shall himself acknowledge the divine authority of the record wherein that message is contained.

Earnestness and plainness on a matter of this kind need no apology. We cannot, as a people who have been highly favored in the attainment of most precious and important truth, innocently make any compromise here. The denial of the Inspiration of the Epistles found in the New Testament we must never think of tolerating, until such time as we are prepared to plunge headlong into the gulf of a soul-destroying Rationalism. When that day comes, however—if it should ever come—the work of spreading light on the grand theme of Life only in Jesus Christ will have passed into other hands. But we would awaken no feeling of needless alarm. We at present see in this direction no special danger as respects the large and growing body of those holding the faith which it is the special mission of this paper to spread among the perishing. And yet, in matters so vital we should not reserve our words of warning until the peril is fully upon us. If the deprecated evil threatens us at all, let us hide ourselves at once. And we shall do this by presenting an unbroken front against every attempt to identify the Life doctrine with a view of inspiration which, as a matter of fact, though with no purpose so revolutionary, yields the ground to the abetters of open infidelity. Most vigilantly and unflinchingly should we enter our protest when we are told—as once the undersigned was told through this paper—that the assumption, that whatever was justified by Paul therefore had the divince sanction, looks like "The spider's most attenuated web." Sufficient unto such a teacher should be the rebuke of Paul himself: "If any man think himsef to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord. But if any man be ignorant let him be ignorant.' 1 Cor. xiv. 37, 38.

Now our word of remonstrance. "Paulo" says: "Will the brother give us the evidences that go to prove that the writings of Paul are uninspired? We have all been in the habit of quoting Paul as authority on points of doctrine. If we have made a mistake, and can be convinced of it, we will do so no more." This seems to be an invitation from "Paulo" for some "brother" to make the HERALD OF LIFE a medium through which to exhibit evidences against Paul's inspiration. Now, with due respect, we beg leave to suggest to Br. "Paulo," that such a presentation should never be made in this paper. The HERALD OF LIFE was originated, and is maintained, for the purpose of disseminating the teachings of the Bible—mainly on the great question of Life only in Christ. But it was never contemplated that any of our own brethren would use these columns to unsettle faith in the divine authority of Paul's writings, and we should exceedingly deplore to see our chosen periodical diverted to such an unholy purpose. There clearly is no demand for a controversy among us on the subject of inspiration; but, if the "evidences" invoked by "Paulo" were given in the paper, it would be imperatively required that the Editor, or some one else, should meet them with a rejoinder, and, we repeat, there is no necessity justifying such a discussion in our paper. Rather than have it introduced, we would say, in inspired language already quoted: "If any man be ignorant, let him be ignorant." And in this view we are confident that we entirely accord with ninety-nine out of every hundred of those holding the Life doctrine and having at heart the interests of the HERALD OF LIFE.

Our best mode of approaching the direct illustration of our selected context is first to notice some of those other texts where imagery of the same kind is more lightly touched by St. Paul, and so to rise by successive steps to the passage in which the christian warrior is set before us in the full panoply of God. Then it will not be irrelevant, if we turn in conclusion to some other passages, where similes from the same source are employed by the apostle less obviously, but not less forcibly.

The first of these passages is in Romans xiii. That epistle was written at Corinth, which, both as the seat of local government, and because of its critical position on a strait between two seas, must have been garrisoned by a strong military force. The image which always rises before my mind when I read the passage, is this. I fancy St. Paul—after a day spent in hard work, partly in tent-making and partly in preaching and in visitation among his converts—writing far through the night to the christians at Rome, and just at daybreak, when the sentinels are changing guard, and the morning light glances on their armor—while at the same time the last sounds of debauched revellers in the street fall upon his ears—expressing himself in the now familiar words: "The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light; let us walk honestly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness."

As to the phrase, "armor of light," it is evidently equivalent to the phrase "armor of righteousness," which he uses elsewhere, i. e., spiritual armor for the contest against spiritual foes. But in the passage where this last expression occurs, the idea is more fully developed than in the former case. Here it is "The armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left." We have not simply armor in the abstract, as in the other instance, but armor specifically described as of two kinds—"on the right hand and on the left," i. e., offensive and defensive, represented generally by the sword and the shield. St. Paul is here describing himself, and his own attitude in reference to the resistance he had met with at Corinth in the progress of his apostolic work. This is not the only occasion in this severe epistle (as we shall see afterwards) where he uses military language in describing his own position in reference to the enemies of the truth.

We reach something still more definite and specific, when we come to the fifth chapter of the first letter to the Thessalonians. "We are not of the night . . . . therefore let us not sleep. . . . They that be drunken, are drunken in the night . . . . Let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet the hope of salvation." The chief remarks to be made here, I think, are that this Epistle was written from Corinth, like that to the Romans, but on a previous visit; that the whole context is very similar to that which has been quoted from the Romans, and that while this passage contains many more details than that just adduced from the second Corinthian Epistle, yet it is entirely limited to defensive armor. As to any observations on two pieces of armor that are specified—"The breastplate of faith and love," and the "helmet of salvation,"—these belong more properly to our discussion of the allegory in the sixth of Ephesians, which claims from us now a more direct consideration.

Enough has been quoted already to prove that the use of military metaphor is a familiar thing to St. Paul. And in the passages hitherto adduced these metaphors have one general type, which is quite in harmony with the longer extract before us. In examining its different parts, I should wish to be guided by the reverent belief that each word has a meaning,—that each word is the best that could be used,—and, at the same time, I should wish to be on my guard against that pedantry of interpretation which tortures the Bible into meanings which it was never intended to bear, and which in this case, would deprive the apostle's imagery of all its freshness and elasticity.

I have called the passage an allegory. But it cannot strictly be described by that term. It is an allegory with a running explanation. In a strict allegory, the key of interpretation is to be derived from the context, or from the circumstances, or from analogy. But here the image and the interpretation are given side by side. We "wrestle" or engage in close conflict, but "not with flesh and blood," i. e. (as we see from a passage where the same phrase is used in Galatians), not with man, but with spiritual foes. We wear "armor," but it is the armor of light, the armor of righteousness, the panoply of God. We carry a "shield," but it is the shield of faith. We wield a "sword," but it is the sword of the Spirit. This is St. Paul's manner. He explains his metaphors as he proceeds. We have, therefore, no need to waste our time in discussing the principles of the interpretation of allegory. We may begin at once to go in order through the clauses of which the passage is composed.

One of the first thoughts which occur to us in looking at the introductory words in this—that the armor is of no use to us unless we put it on. We are not to be passive in the matter. The opening words give a positive injunction: and the only way to obey the injunction is to put on the armor, and to wear it and use it. Another obvious thought relates to the perilous condition of those who are destitute of this armor. Without it we are utterly defenceless. And it is no light matter to be defenceless in the presence of a foe, who is not only hostile, but accomplished in stratagem, and who commands an army such as that which is described in the verses before us. There is a story of a Spartan soldier, who went into battle without his armor, and who was fined by the Senate, though he had been victorious. This anecdote supplies a very useful admonition to the christian soldier.

One word in this introductory portion is unfortunately translated in the Authorized Version. The phrase, "having done all," is by no means, in my opinion, an adequate rendering of the Greek. The marginal translation "having overcome," is more correct. The orignal denotes that we are to beat down all opposition, and having done this, to "stand," to hold our ground. And this word "stand," which occurs once and again, sets before us the true nature of the christian's conflict. We have a defensive military position to hold for God, and we must hold it. It is no light skirmish, which might be half an amusement to those who enjoy a fray: but it is a serious and momentous struggle to hold the field where we are posted, like the struggle of those who fought at Inkermann.

I find in two of Chrysostom's sermons on this chapter some remarks on these introductory verses, so good and forcible that I think they deserve to be quoted. With reference to the wiles of the devil, he expresses himself as follows: "The apostle saith not against the fighting, nor against the hostilities, but against wiles. This enemy is at war with us, not simply, not openly, but by wiles: i. e., he tries to deceive us and take us by artifice. He never proposes to us sins in their proper colors. Thus he does not speak of idolatry, but he sets it off in another dress, making his discourse plausible and employing disguises." In reference to the expression just alluded to, "having subdued all," he adds: "That is, having subdued our passions and vile lusts, and all things else that trouble us. The apostle speaks not merely of doing the deed, but of completing it, so as not only to slay, but to stand after we have slain; for many who have gained this victory have failed again. Having subdued all, saith he, not, having subdued one and not another; for even after the victory we must stand. An enemy may be struck, but things that are struck revive again." And once more, in reference to the word "stand," Chrysostom says: "The very first feature in tactics is to know how to stand well; and many things will depend upon that. In the case of mere athletic exercises, the word of command which the trainer gives before anything else, is this, to stand firm. Much more will it be the first thing in military matters. The man who, in a true sense, stands, is upright; he stands not in a lazy attitude, not leaning upon anything. The luxurious man does not stand upright but stoops, so does the lewd man, so does the lover of money." This is enough concerning the attitude and posture of the christian warrior.

The Law and the Gospel.

There is Death proper and Life proper, as brought to view in the scriptures. We get death in the law of development; Adam being our representative.

First death, carnal mind. "For to be carnally minded is death." Rom. viii. 6.

The second death is what destroys, or dissolves, that which is subject to its power, to their original elements; so that there is no repreive for the wicked after death; "and they shall be as though they had not been." Obd. xvi. "For as much, then, as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same, that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil." Heb. ii. 14, or the law of carnal development; not a personal devil, as some believe. There was one personal Adam and one personal Christ, but this does not prove anything to establish a belief in a personal devil, as some try to prove, as the devil is not brought to view as a representative.

So, in the gospel we get life; Christ being our representative in the life principle, as Adam was in the death principle; Christ representing the life proper and the resurrection, so that "he that hath a part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power;" which should be realized by every true life believer. Now, if Christ be the first resurrection, as well as the resurrection, then all true believers have a part in the first resurrection, Christ being their representative, the same as all under the law, developing carnality of mind, which is death, Adam being their representative. All in Christ having eternal life at his second coming, as brought to view in Paul's first letter to the Corinthians xv. 22. We see, then, that the law of development of evil was not spiritual, but carnal. "What shall we say then, Is the law (or commandment) sin? God forbid; for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet," Rom. vii. 7, showing that Adam had a right to every tree of the garden except the tree of knowledge of good and evil, and although he was permitted, in the faculties of his nature, to develop good, he had no lawful right to develop evil, even if connected with good. "Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good." Rom. vii. 12. Adam having the freedom to be a law unto himself, or a law in himself, harmonizing with his Creator, who cannot lie or sin; and thus he might have retained life, the same as we have the liberty in the gospel to harmonize with Christ, who would not sin, but came to destroy the carnal development in the flesh, and give life; so we see, "to be carnal minded, is death; but to be spiritual minded, is life and peace."

"The Time of the End."

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

From the thirty-sixth to the thirty-ninth verse inclusive of Dan. xi, I think we have the character, progress, and establishment of the Turkish power which has held Jerusalem under its control for several hundred years. In the fortieth verse are introduced two other powers which are to come against the former. One is to push at him, the other to come against him like a whirlwind. This king of the north is to plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain. This place can be no other than the land on which Jerusalem was built. This land is called the holy mountain some fifteen times in the Old Testament. Daniel calls it so twice in his prayer in the ninth chapter.

Jerusalem is directly between two seas. Those two kings were to commence their work at the time of the end. As no power has taken possession of this place except the Mohammedan within the last three hundred years, it follows that, either the time of the end was before that, or it has not yet come. This king of the north is to come to his end, and none to help him.

At this time Michael shall stand up. This phrase, stand up, is used ten times in this book of Daniel, and means to reign. Then comes the time of trouble, and the resurrection of the dead. Here we have definite time. At that time—at the time the king of the north comes to an end, Jesus stands up to reign, and the saints are raised. Mr. Miller saw the connection between Michael standing up, and the northern king coming to his end, and as he had it that Bonaparte was the king of the north, who came to his end in 1815 when taken prisoner, he made the standing of Michael to be the revivals of religion which took place about that time in New England. Thus he spiritualized this standing up, and so departed from the meaning of the phrase used elsewhere in this book. He saw that the connection was so close, and so positively defined, that he must either take this view, or else say that the king of the north had not yet done this, and that the time of the end had not come.

If the 1st verse of Daniel xii. can be spiritualized, or can be figurative, I do not see what in prophecy cannot be so disposed of. As sure as this is to take place literally, so sure is it that the king of the north has not come to his end. He is to commence his work at the time of the end, and when he ends, the Lord will come to raise the dead and set up his kingdom. No such power has done the work as is here described; therefore the time of the end has not come. When it comes, and in that time, the wise will understand. If it can be so, may the Lord hasten the time.

Another Popish Miracle.

Romish priests understand the art of adapting themselves and their religion to all climates. They know very well what will take with the people in any particular locality, and they produce it. They do not attempt to work miracles in all parts, but when they find the people ready and anxious to be gulled they are ready to gull them. The Paris correspondent of the London Globe gives the following account of a pretended miracle wrought by a piece of the Pope's old clothes. One would imagine that if "a bit of cloth cut from a cassock which the Pope had worn" had such miraculous power, he might do something with one of his new and whole garments to deliver himself from his present straits. Why does he not try it, and confound his enemies and astound the world.—N. Y. Observer.

"Extraordinary as the fact may appear, it is solemnly vouched by the Abbe Dumax, of the Church of Our Lady of Victories, who, I believe, is one of the most distinguished of the clergy of Paris. From a very long narrative, published under his authority, in a religious periodical entitled the Echo de Notre Dame des Victoires, it appears that one Juliette D———, of No.11, Rue Villedo, in this city, a lady's maid by calling, was, on the 8th of October last, after long being dangerously ill, on the brink of death. The doctor had abandoned her, priests had confessed her, she had received the last sacraments, she was in a state of lethargy and heard not a word that was said. Then her confessor produced a bit of cloth cut from a cassock which the Pope had worn, and, after exhorting her to have faith, declared that the Vicar of Jesus Christ would cure her. Notwithstanding her previous inability to hear, she made signs that she understood what was said. The priest then rubbed the closed eyes of the patient with the piece of cloth, and cried, 'Have faith—living faith! Open your eyes!' and, with a voice of authority, he repeated, "Open your eyes!' She slowly raised her eyelids, and fixed a look upon the statue of the Virgin. Then the priest placed the cloth on her lips and said, 'Say with me—Lord, glorify thy church—glorify thy Pontiff!' She kissed the cloth and cried, 'The Sovereign Pontiff has cured me!' and sat up. She wept with joy, but complained that she had a great pain in the heart. 'My child,' said the confessor, 'our Lord does not do things by halves—he will cure you completely! Say, O God, thou couldst not do things by halves. Cure me completely. By signs she indicated that she made the prayer. The confessor next told her to place the cloth on her breast—and he, not to shock her modesty, turned aside as she did so. 'Immediately after,' says the narrator, 'she felt a strange pain, as if some one had plunged a knife into her heart. It seemed to her that the heart made a bound and put itself into its right place. She was cured.' A photograph of the Pope was presented to her; she kissed it several times and exclaimed, 'I was between heaven and earth, and the Holy Father sent me back here!' Then she took some soup; and then she and the people surrounding her bed—there were half a dozen of them—recited the Magnificat. She was decidedly healed. In the morning of the 11th she went on foot to church and received the sacrament. She has since been in better health than she was before she fell ill."

Letters and Extracts.

The Freedmen's Mission.

FROM HELEN ROBERTSON.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., Feb. 19, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I sometimes think perhaps some of the readers are tired of my school and mission reports, begging letters, &c., &c.; but if they had been along with me to-day, all day they would have been patient, I know.

After a long, hardworking day in the school (for it is hard work in such a large school), I took two of my destitute girls to my room and gave them a dress each. Before they had left three women came to my door, very poorly clad, yet clean and respectable looking. I heard their tale of destitution, then told them to come back in about half an hour. I must eat my dinner, as I had not had anything since about seven in the morning. In half an hour they returned, and I went with them to see their homes. Found them just as they represented. One has six little children. Her husband could get almost no work all the winter; and some time ago, he went off to try and get work, and there they were, almost naked, and really suffering. The other two had families, also, not so large, but suffering. I told their girls to come to-morrow and I would do what I could for them. From there I went on to quite a number of other families, and found them in just about the same condition. One woman came to her door and said her Harry, who was sick, wanted to see me. There he lay stretched on his bed. He had been a soldier, and had come home sick, and had been sick ever since. He had hemorrhage of the lungs, and did not expect to live long. The hospital doctor had been to see him and wanted that he should go into the hospital. He had been gone a long time in the war, did not expect to live long, and wanted to stay with his mother. I could not blame him for choosing to suffer deep poverty at home, and have a mother's care, rather than go to the hospital, although he should have things much better there. I left a little money, and a line for rations.

The others are to come to-morrow, out of school hours, and I shall supply them the best I can out of two well-packed barrels Sr. Wendell and the Salem church sent to me a short time since. A great many have already been supplied out of them, and I have often thought these dear friends would be well rewarded for their trouble, if they could only see the clothing distributed

I came home feeling somewhat sad because my money and clothing were both pretty much gone; but a letter from Br. G. W. Denny, New Haven, Conn., was waiting me, saying he had some things to send. Thus the supplies come. Thank the Lord. We need them. We are doing all we can to send them off to work, and many are willing to go. The Government pays their transportation, and we clothe them the best we can.

The spring will soon be here, and with it we hope the suffering will somewhat disappear. It is hard to live and see so much poverty and degradation.

The whole creation groans; yes, and we also which have the first fruits of the Spirit, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our bodies.

The coming of our precious LIFE-GIVER never seemed so near; never so real; and never more longed for. My heart cries out, Come Lord Jesus, come quickly. What think ye, Will He come to the feast? Oh, it fills my heart with joy to know we are almost home. Yes, truly, my heart is joyful in the Lord.

From Daniel L. Osborn.

FINDLEY'S LAKE, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—The days of this, to some, very eventful year have commenced, and are passing away. After a while it will be numbered with those which have gone before it. But will the events which, to some, are interesting, be realized, viz.: the coming of the Just One; the King in his beauty, to be seen and admired by all those who love his appearing? Who could object to having a King who will reign in righteousness? Such will He be who is to reign over the house of Jacob forever; and it's he of whom it is said, of the increase of his government and peace there shall be NO end. He said before he went away, "If I go and prepare a place for you (my disciples) I WILL COME AGAIN, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also." This is the word of him in whose lips guile never was found. He says again, "I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his works shall be." A man's promise might fail, but the word of the Lord abideth forever. All christians would be exceedingly rejoiced to have him come in 1867. Why, he is the LIFE-GIVER. Life is the christian's reward. He comes to give a future or eternal life. Paul, addressing christians says, "Ye are dead (doomed to lose your Adamic, or blood life) but your life, (or the spirit principle, by the second Adam, Christ), is hid (secured, kept) with Christ in God; and when he who is our life (our LIFE-GIVER) shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory." Then, brethren, take courage. Fear not: our God will come and save us. Let us be prepared to say at his coming, "This is our God; we have waited for him; we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." He comes to raise up the believer: to build him a house, if unbuilt and in the dust; or, if alive, to change them from mortality, a state in which we have pains, aches, troubles, disappointments, to an incorruptible, painless one. Who would not long to make the change? The time will come when it will take place; and then life given to all on the new principle, spirit principle; and it is said of such, "Neither can they DIE ANY MORE; and are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God," on account of having a resurrection. So we say with Paul, "Thanks be to God who giveth us [christians] the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ." So, brethren, let us try to "be of one mind [thought]; live in peace, and the God of love and peace will be with you." Let me say to those who may read these lines, to whom the evidences of the coming of Christ this year seem to be very strong, and you are almost convinced, or quite, and the stronger the faith the greater the disappointment, permit me to repeat the words of Christ, "What I say unto you I say unto all, watch." And if you should be disappointed, as I expect you will, do not let it drive you from the literal principle, and say, as has been the case, "He did come spiritually." But let your faith be strong. "This same Jesus will so come, in like manner as ye have seen him go unto heaven;" personally, really.

Yes, let us rejoice: this same Jesus will come (not spiritually; his spirit has never left the world) as the angels saw him go. He comes to redeem the earth from the curse and make it blossom like the rose, and so bring back from the grave all our loved ones. Then who would not like to have him come? The sooner the better.

Let us, then, patiently wait for the Lord, having our lamps trimmed and burning, and ready to meet him at his appearing.

Western Mission.

FROM ELD. S. L. WALTER.

HORNSBY, ILL., Feb. 4, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—After an absence of over six weeks, I am home again, in good health. My wife and all friends here are well. We had meetings here yesterday, and had the best turnout we have had in a long time; and the most profound attention. The traveling is very bad; for we have one day a thaw, the next snow or rain. So we have to wade through mud and water on these prairies at this season of the year.

After we were through at Modo, we went to Union school house, and preached on the 3d and 4th Jan., and left Br. Lewis to preach on the 5th and 6th. The attendance was good, and the people are in search after the truth. I returned to Mode and preached twice on the 6th, to good congregations, many of whom are earnest in their inquiries, "What is truth?" The 7th we returned to Black Log school house; and on the 8th Br. Lewis preached on the kingdom, not yet set up, but to be when the Lord comes. He remarked that we could not give up the Old Testament, as some had. When I was about closing the meeting, the christian minister rose and asked Br. Lewis if "he thought that he rejected the Old Testament?" Br. Lewis said, Yes. He then asked me if that was my "opinion"? I answered, Yes; and said I did not see how a man, believing in it, could speak of it as he did; and that I thought what he had said about David, Solomon and Job, and their writings, was calculated to make infidels of the youth, and bring religion into disrepute. Others bore testimony, as to what he had said; so that he saw it was not only our opinion, but that of his neighbors, also. He lost all control of himself, and showed his temper, so that all said he was angry. He said he would not come to meeting again. On the 9th I tried to preach to the people, who were more anxious to hear about the glorious "More abundant life," which the LIFE GIVER said, "I am come that they (my sheep) may have." Our christian brother was there again; and asked if he might speak. I asked him if he had any more anecdotes to tell? for if he had we did not want to hear them; for we had heard too many. He said he "wanted to make confession." He acknowledged he was "out of temper, the evening before, for which he was sorry, &c.;" and then gave notice that on the "20th, at 11 A. M., he would prove, with or without the scriptures, that the kingdom was set up in the days of the Cæsars; and that man in death was conscious," (though he does not believe in natural immortality, but that it is put on at the resurrection), "and that the wicked will be resurrected."

On the 10th we left for Mode; so that we should be in time for the discussion which was to commence on the evening of the 11th, at 7 o'clock, on the following Resolutions, viz.,

"Resolved—That the Bible teaches that there will be a resurrection from the tombs to life, of the wicked, and righteous." Both believed in the ressurrection of the just; but the affirmative put it both to please himself; or that he might have some ground to argue from.

Br. Lovings (a christian minister), affirmative; Br. Lewis, negative.

The house could not hold the people, and there would have been many more, from ten or twelve miles distant, had the place been larger. Everything was orderly on both sides. Br. Lovings spoke entirely too fast for any one to remember what he said, or take notes of his remarks. Br. Lewis followed him, as well as could be expected; as he had no chance to take notes, and had only one hand, and no table to write on, nor room for one; but he did show, conclusively, that there was no life out of Christ, and that the wicked would not live again. It was generally admitted that Br. Lewis had the argument.

On the 13th, Br. Lovings preached at 10 1-2 A. M., I preached at night. The people turn out well at Mode. I believe good was done, and the cause of truth advanced. On the 16th we started for Eld. H. Shellingburger's; got caught in a snow storm and had to put up; and found good quarters with Br. Richardson, of the Baptist church. Next day went to B. S., preached on the 17th and 18th, and a good turnout for the stormy weather. On the 19th started for Black Log; and about 12 A. M., it commenced to snow and continued for 60 hours, and fell to the depth of eighteen inches on the level; the greatest storm ever known here. On the 20th, at 11 A. M., we went to hear the christian minister prove what he had promised. There were 15 out to hear, it was so stormy. So he adjourned the meeting for two weeks, at the same hour. 21st, the roads were broken, and going good for sleighs; so we were able to fill our appointments in the evening; also on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. There is quite an interest here. 24th, I started for Pana, whither Br. Lewis had gone the day before. I got through in good time. Br. Lewis had made an appointment for the evening in the school house; but the house was shut against us; they are so afraid of error that they will not come to hear, and do all they can to prevent others from hearing, who wish to hear. 25th and 26th, I preached three times at another school house, about two miles from town; on the 27th I started for home, to get ready to go to Lebanon and other places. Left Br. Lewis in possession of the field, with those that were willing to hear, and good homes, with Brn. Keys and Pope: they were very kind to us: may the Lord bless them, and all the friends that opened their houses to us; they will not lose their reward.

Br. Lewis intended going back to Black Log to hear the christian minister, and review his proof of the kingdom set up, &c., in the evening of the same day. He will then go to Mode. He expects to have another discussion with Br. Clark, a christian minister, or a minister of the United Brethren. They about ten live miles from Mode. The subject, "Will the wicked dead be raised to life?"

I tell you the people are waking up: and are desirous to know what is this new doctrine, which gives light wherever it enters. Praise the Lord; men begin to see that if they get life from the dead, they must get it by being in the LIFE-GIVER; that he that believeth in Christ, and eateth his flesh, and drinketh his blood, hath eternal life; "him will the Son raise up in the last day." O, glorious truth. It does away with sinners, sin and suffering, and shows when the Son shall destroy the works of the devil, then "every creature which is in heaven and on earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing and honor, and glory and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." I pray that the glorious day may come quickly. Amen; even so come, glorious LIFE-GIVER. Yours, expecting life when he comes.

From G. E. Putney.

HOWELLS, N. Y., Feb. 4, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—For I hesitate not to recognize the character of a brother in Christ in one who savors so much of His spirit as I find manifest in your writings. I have read your "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST" with much satisfaction, and comparing it with the scriptures, believe it to be the best exposition of Bible truth that I have had the pleasure to peruse. I find my faith to be strengthened and my love to Christ increased, more and more, as I behold the clearness of the truths of the gospel of life and peace. Truly, the wages of sin is death; but thanks be to God, his gift, through our Lord Jesus Christ, is eternal life.

Some years ago my attention was arrested by the declaration made in Romans viii. 11, that "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." After much reflection upon this clearly declared fact, that it is by virtue of the Spirit of Christ dwelling in us that our resurrection is to be effected, I referred the subject to Rev. W. H. Wilder, then my pastor, asking him, if the resurrection of the believer is to be effected by the Spirit of Christ dwelling in him, by what power is the unbeliever to be raised, who has not that Spirit? No satisfactory answer was obtained. I was told that God would raise the wicked by an exercise of his sovereignty, for the purposes of retributive justice. But, I inquired, how then is it true that "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive?" Here was a declaration that Christ was the life-giving power; and as death was the consequence of a mere Adamic nature, to retain the even so, I thought it necessary for a man to have a Christ nature in order to be made alive, which he could only secure through the renewing of the Holy Spirit. Such was my conclusion at that time, and from a careful study of the scriptures, I have not since found reason to change it. I do most firmly believe that Jesus Christ is the only resurrection and life; and that he that believeth not in Christ, the only LIFE-GIVER, shall, in accordance with scripture testimony, "not see life."

A little over a year ago I attended, as a delegate from the Congregational church of Howells, a Council in Paterson, N. J., held to instal Rev. Geo. B. Day, as pastor of the Congregational church in that place. During his examination, that brother most faithfully set forth his views relative to the doctrine of the resurrection, and also of the non-immortality of the human soul, claiming that immortality, as taught in the scriptures, is distinctly the gift of God through Jesus Christ. The views expressed by him relative to these subjects met a hearty response in my breast; and although as a delegate from a church that held a very different doctrine, I felt it my duty, in my representative capacity, to vote against his installation, which I did, yet as an individual, I felt that he spoke a truth that was irresistible when examined in the light of Bible testimony. I understand that he has already suffered ecclesiastical decapitation for his adherence to what he claimed, and then successfully maintained to be the truth; and what surprises me is, that it has been done by the same parties that one year ago voted him their pastor, and that after hearing his views clearly and publicly declared. If they were orthodox in their former act, were they orthodox in their latter?

From Eld. J. Lewis.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL., Feb. 6, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—The blessed cause is fast gaining ground; for many of the best minds are embracing the all-absorbing truth of no life out of Christ; no resurrection of the wicked; no immortality without a resurrection; no kingdom until the King comes; no inheritance of the saints this side the new earth, &c. The above points, with many others in the great chain of truth, we feel ourself abundantly able to substantiate. We have more work before us than can be done without more help; but as our hand is very weak, so much so that we have to rest it often in writing a short letter; therefore we hope the brethren Campbell, Baker, and others, will not think hard of me in not writing to them; but write to me often. Pray for the old one-armed preacher.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by DR. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each: MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

GEO. STORRS,

Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny," being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper covers to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Children's Department.

THE FORTY-TWO WICKED CHILDREN.

SINFUL LANGUAGE DISPLEASING TO GOD.

"And he went up from thence unto Bethel; and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, Go up, thou bald head! Go up, thou bald head! And he turned back, and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of the Lord. And there came forth two she-bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two children of them."—2 Kings, ii. 23, 24.

Who would not sleep on Jacob's stone,
Might Jacob's dream to him be given?*
The Lord stood on his burning throne,
And angels thronged the way to heaven.

With trembling awe he rose and stood,
An altar rais'd, and worshipp'd there;
And call'd it Bethel—House of God,
The gate of heaven—the house of prayer.

In later times, a city spread
Its shade around that hallow'd stone;
But there no heavenly vision led
The spirit upward to the throne.

An idol god—old Egypt's sin—
Usurps the altar, claims the vow;
Insulting scoffers raise their din,
And Bethel † is Beth-Aven ‡ now.

See, on his lonely way afar,
Elisha comes, belov'd of God!
His thoughts are with the fiery car,
Where his translated master rode.

Canst thou not see him as he went Heaven-mov'd—his reverend head laid bare?
Now upward turned; with look intent,
Now downward, as if bow'd in prayer?

Where is the city's sacred band,
That should this heavenly veteran greet?
The guardians of a grateful land,
Why come they not his steps to meet?

Do they not know his mission seal'd
By gifts and powers deriv'd from God?
That he the unwholesome waters healed, §
And dry through Jordan's channel trod?

Alas! his just reproof they dread,
And fain would bar him from their gate,
The children of the place are bred
The prophet and his God to hate.

And see, a rude and boisterous throng,
The offspring of a godless race,
Pour forth with insults loud and long,
And mock the good man to his face.

Fiercely they come, and loud they cry;
With shouts and taunts around him crowd:
"Up! up! (they say) ascend on high!
"Come, bald head! mount the fiery cloud!"

So boldly did this impious crew
Jehovah's honor'd priest assail:
"Elijah gone! (they cry) Go too!
"And we will then believe the tale."

Awhile the patient prophet heard
Their mockeries, and despis'd the shame:
But quick the fire within him stirr'd,
When scorn was heap'd on God's great name.

He turn'd, he look'd, by heaven inspir'd,
Fierce judgments on their heads denounc'd;
And with prophetic knowledge fir'd,
Sternly th' approaching wo announc'd.

Onward he goes;—the judgment comes!
E'en while he spake, a mighty roar
Breathes outward from the forest glooms—
Near, nearer—louder than before.

And 'mid the throng, with mighty force,
Two savage beasts leap forth to war;
Blood, rage and havoc mark their course,
They bruise, rend, wound and scatter far.

Oh then, what terrible alarm!
What pain those bleeding bosoms fill!
The God they mock'd but lifts his arm,
And savage beasts perform his will.

Thus was this impious throng chastis'd;
Through them their guilty parents warn'd:
God will not have his word despis'd,
His prophets or his wonders scorn'd!

Tremble, ye children, when ye read
How God o'erthrew these scoffers bold;
Be pure in word, be kind in deed,
Revere the good, respect the old.

For know, that, e'en in childhood, sin
Meets with an awful frown from heaven.
Strive, children! strive, the race to win;
Repent, believe, and be forgiven.

TO MRS. B. MATHEWSON.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

Dear Sister:—I noticed an article in the World's Crisis, over your signature, entitled, What are First Fruits? The conclusion to which you correctly arrive is, that Christ in his resurrection was the "first fruits" of all who will be made alive in a future resurrection. If therefore we can settle the question as to the nature of Christ's resurrection, he being the sample, or pattern, we can with certainty decide what sort of a resurrection all those will have who are made alive in, through, or by Christ. It is claimed by some, yea, many of those who are associated with the Crisis, that Christ by his resurrection was only restored to that condition of animal, natural life in which he existed before he died. That the life in which he was raised from the dead, was simply the Adamic life restored. It will follow of course, that if this be true, then all who have a part in a future resurrection, be they good or bad, will only be raised to a mortal life. On the other hand, Christ being the sample of the great harvest, and that harvest being the resurrection from the dead, it legitimately follows that if Christ was raised im-mortal, then all who are raised in him will also be raised immortal. The question is therefore fairly before us; and may be stated in these words: What did God give us in the first fruits, mortal, or immortal life? In settling this question my appeal shall be only to the word of the Lord.

The first text to which I will cite you, is Rom. i. 4. In this text the inspired Paul distinctly asserts that Christ was declared (made known, exhibited, avowed, manifested—Webster), to be the Law of God with power....by the resurrection of the dead. Mark well, it was Christ's resurrection from the dead that "manifested," or declared him to be the Son of God. If Christ had only a mortal resurrection, the above statement of Paul cannot possibly be true. For if Christ was raised mortal, it no more "appeared" after his resurrection that he was the son of God than before he died. It will amount to nothing to say that the mere act of power that raised him from death declared him to be the Son of God. For, you claim that the same act of God's power will make all men live again. If the bare fact that Christ was raised from the dead proved that he was the Son of God, then every body else who are raised from the dead will be the sons of God as truly as was Christ. But again; if Christ was barely raised to a mortal life, then was his condition of life absolutely unchanged from what it was before he died; and consequently he was the son of God in no higher sense after his resurrection than before his death. I therefore repeat, if Christ was raised to a mortal life, Paul was mistaken in supposing that his resurrection demonstrated, or proved him to be the Son of God. We next call your attention to Rom. vi. 9. "Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more: death hath no more dominion over him." In this text. Paul urges as a logical sequence that from the fact Christ was raised from the dead, therefore, he cannot again die. This most absolutely nullifies the assertion that Christ was raised mortal, and made im mortal by a subsequent change; for with that view his deathlessness, so far from being the result of his resurrection, is made to depend wholly upon that after change. For you claim that wicked men get a resurrection just as virtually, or as really as did Christ; and if Christ was raised mortal, your resurrection of the wicked portion of mankind is precisely in character like the resurrection of Christ. And you say that wicked men are raised to die again. Now if wicked men are raised at all, their resurrection must be a special act of redemption wrought through Christ. And as Christ is the "first fruits," sample, or pattern of the resurrection, therefore if all mankind are raised through him, they must be raised in the same condition of life in which he arose; and as he was made deathless, immortal, by being raised from the dead, therefore if all men are raised through him, all men must live forever. That Christ was made deathless by the bare fact of a resurrection from the dead, is plainly asserted by Paul. Was Paul mistaken? I trow not. When we entertain correct views of the mission of Christ into this world all is plain, and easy to be understood. Christ came into this world for the express purpose, being sent by the Father, to introduce to a race wholly mortal, animal, earthly, and consequently death-stricken, a principle of spiritual life, which, when fully developed, is immortality. Christ, in his innate nature, possessed this principle of spirituality, with the power to impart it unto others on certain conditions. But this principle, even in Christ, was not fully developed until, in the language of Paul, Rom. viii. 11, and of Peter, 2 Pet. iii. 18, he, by the power of the Holy Spirit, was quickened into immortality by being raised from the dead. Christ was the Son of God just so far as he possessed the nature of God; no farther. What of Adam he possessed was not of the nature of God, but opposed to it—out of harmony with it, even as the fleshly agreeth not with spirituality. Before his death, the life principle, by virtue of which Christ held a conscious existence, was wholly Adamic. But when he died, he laid down all of this Adamic life, never to take it again He gave it to the law, for to the law it most justly belonged. When, therefore, he lived again from the dead, through the mighty power of God's only resurrection agent, the eternal Spirit, he lived wholly by a fully developed principle of spiritual life; consequently in his resurrection life he is wholly spiritual as respects his essential nature, and therefore the son of God in the highest sense of that term. He is the son of God in the sense that his only nature is the nature of God, transmitted to him, conferred upon him, through the "Holy Ghost," the "power of the highest." First, in a begotten state in the womb of the virgin; second, in a fully developed condition of spiritual divine life by a resurrection from the dead.

Now Christ is, in his resurrection, the first fruits of all who are raised from the dead; and as Christ was raised to a deathless, immortal life, it necessarily follows that all who come out of the dominion of death will be raised to the same condition of immortal life as was Christ. Mark; the harvest must be just like the "first fruits." It will never answer to have the first fruits all wheat, and nine tenths, or any portion even, of the harvest tares. This leads us to inquire, what do the scriptures say shall be the condition of life to which those who are raised from the dead shall attain?

In Cor. xv. is contained the only argument ever adduced by the inspired Paul, fully demonstrating the fact that there shall be a resurrection from death. In this argument he just as plainly tells what shall be the character of the resurrection, as that there shall be a resurrection. Hear him, v. 42–44. "So also is the resurrection of the dead." How? Answer. "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. ....It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Mark: Paul is telling us how the dead are raised. He is not speaking of a change to take place after the resurrection: but is answering the question proposed in verse 35, viz. With what body do they (the dead) come?" And in his answer, he in the plainest manner declares that the dead are raised with incorruptible, spiritual bodies. In harmony with his language just quoted, he as clearly asserts, in verse 52. that "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, the dead shall be raised incorruptible." Who, let me ask, dare assume to deny so plain a declaration of the inspired Paul? Surely none, unless pressed to do it for want of argument in sustaining a darling theory. Thus, dear sister, we find in that very argument from which you get your doctrine of "first fruits," the truth abundantly and clearly set forth that all who share in a future resurrection, will by that resurrection get a deathles, immortal, imperishable life.

This testimony of Paul is most fully corroborated by the son of God. He declares, Luke xx. 34–36, that all who are accounted worthy to obtain the resurrection of the dead.... cannot die any more, "for they are equal to the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Here, again, the harvest is declared to be just like the "first fruits," a resurrection to a deathless existence. We have seen, in the teachings of Paul, that Christ in his resurrection became the Son of God in a fully developed spiritual nature. So Christ declares that all who share in the resurrection, like angels, are deathless in their nature; and because they are the children of the resurrection, therefore are they the children of God in the future age, or world. That he refers to all who are raised, is made certain by consulting the parables of Luke xx. 34–36 In mark xii. 25, we read, "For when they shall rise from the dead they, (that is, those who rise from the dead) ....are as the angels which are in heaven." Again, Math. xxii. 30, "For in the resurrection they....are as the angels of God in heaven." In these texts all is made plain. None need be mistaken. All who are raised to life again, from the dead, are raised to live forever, as the children of God in the world to come. So says Paul, and so Jesus teaches. To suppose that in answering the sophistry of these Sadducees, and establishing the truth, by them denied, that the dead will be raised, he, Christ, gave them any other than a full, clear, and truthful idea of the resurrection of the dead, is to impeach the integrity of the Son of the Highest. This I dare not do. To assume that Christ, in proving a resurrection from the dead to a class of men, who, if all mankind are to be raised, must come out of death only to suffer anguish, misery, torment and woe, for a time, and then die again; and that so far from even hinting to them that such shall be the consequence to them of a relieving of dead men, he declares, in the plainest language, that all who share in that resurrection will live endlessly, as the children of God, in the world to come, is simply preposterous. If the reasoning of Christ had convinced any one, or all, of those Sadducees that there will be a revival into life of dead men, they could have arrived at no other conclusion than this, that all who are thus raised would die no more. On your idea of the resurrection, i. e., that all men are raised, did Christ deal fairly with the Sadducees? I answer, emphatically, No. If you are right, my sister, justice demands that Christ should have told them, plainly, that they would come up from the dead to be condemned to a second dying in the seething, boiling, rolling waves of a sea of fire. Christ is just. He told them nothing of this kind; consequently, nothing of this kind is true. But he did assure them that all who were found worthy of a future life, will have that life as an unending blessing, in the glorious kingdom of Jesus Christ. To be accounted worthy of that future life, Paul declares, Phil. iii 8–10, we must count all things loss for Christ—we must be found in him—we must know him, and the power of his resurrection—and that if those conditions are complied with, then shall we "attain unto the resurrection from the dead."

In the light of all these scriptures—all these inevitably drawn conclusions, Sr. M, I am compelled to believe that your application of 1 Thess. iv. 16, and Heb. xii. 35, must be incorrect. And if you have no other "texts" than these with which to prove a raising to life of wicked dead men, you will come very far short of accomplishing the task Suffer me, then, with all due deference, to inform you that Paul does not intend to say in 1 Thess. iv. 16, that "the dead in Christ shall rise first," before some other dead rise; not a bit of it. He simply says they are to rise first before "we which are alive and remain" are changed. That we which live till Christ comes will not go before, or anticipate those who sleep; but when "the Lord himself descends from heaven," the dead in Christ will rise first, i. e., before we go to meet the Lord. Then (next after they rise) we shall be caught up to meet him, etc. Thus there is no resurrection of wicked dead men in this text.

I come next to Heb. xi. 35, and here let me state that I do most heartily believe, as you say, that "a better resurrection" implies that there is another not as good. But is that less to be desired resurrection in the future? Certainly not. The "not so good" resurrection is the one spoken of in the first part of the verse. It reads "Women received their dead raised to life again." This is the resurrection "not so good." But those who were tortured and would not accept deliverance, looked for a better resurrection than those dead obtained that were raised by faith, to the comfort of their female relatives; they were raised to die again; but these by holding fast their integrity expected that resurrection which is through Christ, the great pattern, example, first fruits—a resurrection to an incorruptible, glorious life. To that resurrection may we all attain in that day when the "Lord himself shall descend from heaven," is the earnest prayer of your unworthy brother, looking for a future life to be given to the good alone.

ST. LUKE AND HIS GOSPEL.

BY EDWARD IRVING.

For twenty years after the death of Christ there is no reason to believe that any one apostle penned any formal treatise upon the things he preached by word of mouth. Afterwards, when they had leisure, or rather were forced into exile and concealment, or when divisions in the church arose, or heresies, or any other cogent reason, they penned the treatises and letters which compose our New Testament, and which have proved the seed and nourishment of the church of Christ. Now in the interval the apostles, each working in his proper sphere—according to the schedule of Jerome, Peter in Judea, Paul among the gentiles generally, Luke in Achaia, Andrew in Epirus, John in Asia, Thomas in India, Mark in Italy—were too active and busy to sit down and write or transcribe treatises. During these twenty years, in which, to use the language of the Jews, the whole world was turned upside down—or to use the language of Pliny in writing to the emperor a short while after, not only the cities, but the towns and the country villages were infected so that there were no purchasers for the heathen sacrifices—during this interval, I say, when the apostles did nothing but preach and baptize with water and the Holy Ghost, there must have been a prodigious demand for intelligence about Christ, the great Head and Pattern of the community. Every place where an apostle had taught, and left tokens of his presence in the conversion and edification of a church, must have been a resort from the country round. Every presbyter who had derived his knowledge and his gifts direct from an apostle must have been restorted to as a sacred fountain of knowledge. He would be induced to write out his knowledge for the sake of those who came, or they would write it down from his lips; and thus there would come into circulation many such endeavors as Luke speaks of, undertaken for the best of motives, though perhaps imperfect in their execution, according to the imperfect knowledge and recollection of the writer.

Of this kind, I take it, were the writings Luke had in his eye, and in this way they came into existence. Indeed it could not fail to be so, for you mightily mistake if you think the early christians were all in the lower ranks, and not able by education for such a work. There was Nicodemus, and Joseph of Arimathea, who was brought up with Herod; there was the treasurer of Candace, queen of Ethiopia; there was Barnabas of Cyprus, a man of property, and the other proprietors of houses and lands, who sold them and bestowed the price to support the church; there was Cornelius, the centurion of the Italian band; there was Demetrius, a judge in the highest court of Athens; there was Erastus, the chamberlain of the city of Corinth; they of Cæsar's household, and the many of the Sanhedrim, who dared not profess the faith openly for fear of the authorities: these instances, from the few whose designations are mentioned in the New Testament, show sufficiently that there were men both of station and wealth and literature among the converts, who were qualified, as they would be disposed, to set forth accounts to the best of their knowledge, which, being transcribed from hand to hand, would get into circulation, and fall under the eye of Luke in his many travels.

However, this may be, certain it is they did exist, and had been seen by our Evangelist, which set him upon the resolution of making something of the same kind, more exact and more authentic. To this resolution we are indebted for the treatise before us. Nearly about the same time, as is supposed by the best authorities, Matthew and Mark set forth their accounts—Matthew for the use particularly of the Jews in Judea, among whom he labored; Mark, for the use particularly of the Italians, among whom his lot was cast; and Luke for the Greeks, to whom he retired after Paul was loosed from Rome. These three gospels, says Eusebius, who wrote an ecclesiastical history about the year 300, were brought to St. John, then bishop of Ephesus, who approved them as exact accounts of the Incarnation, but not full enough upon the eternal generation of Christ. Being pressed by his elders, he wrote his gospel to supply the deficiency, and to record some of Christ's discourses omitted by them. These four, therefore, were in existence about seventy years after the the birth of Christ. Within one hundred years after, their superior worth had pressed all others out of circulation, for about the year 170 a harmony was made of them by Tatian, a learned heathen converted to christianity, and the book was entitled "Diatessaron," which means "by the four." This book excited a good deal of attention in the church, and is spoken of for several centuries after—on this account, that, to cover some of his peculiar opinions, he kept the genealogies out, I mention it here, not for that reason, but to show that, in so short a space as one hundred years, our four gospels had destroyed the reputation and abolished the use of all those accounts which Luke knew of, as well as those which were written after Luke. But before this time, in the writings of Ignatius, who received the crown of martyrdom in A. D. 107—that is, not forty years after their publication—distinct allusion is made to two codes of recived books, gospels and epistles. But not till this harmony of Tatian, one hundred years after their publication, have we any evidence of their having annihilated all the other accounts, except the narrative of the early historian, that no more than the three were submitted to St. John before he undertook to make a fourth. From this time forth, through the whole line of ages, there never was presented to the church any other account, and the authenticity of them was never disputed.

Now, first, it is not wonderful there should be so many accounts set forth of these events—the greatest, the strangest, the most influential the world has beheld since its creation. The wonder would have been if there had been few. I suppose there have been a hundred accounts drawn up of the battle of Waterloo; perhaps a hundred were sent from the field the following day, and a hundred others compiled from the conversation of the eye-witnesses and actors. Again, it is not wonderful that these many accounts should disagree in the arrangement of the events of our Saviour's life, perhaps, also, in the detail, according to the remembrance of those who wrote, and the accuracy of those who informed them; if they agreed in the main particulars, in the places, in the spirit of the speeches, in the tendency of the actions, and in the results of the whole, it is almost all that can reasonably be expected, the accounts being drawn up from memory, and at second-hand. Also, if they should be interspersed with the occasional comment of the writer, and have the color of his mind, it is more than human not to look for it. An exact coincidence would be the sure sign of collusion and fraud; the common sense and observation of every fair and unprejudiced mind will bear me out in what I have said. Now four of these narratives of our Saviour's life, though circulated only by the copying of the pen, come in the course of one hundred years to silence all the rest, over a space almost equal to all Europe, and to engross the public favor ever after, without a word having been lifted up on behalf of the others they discarded. What a testimony, I ask, is this to their superiority over all the rest, that they should have circulated over such a space in so short a time, though the ground was preoccupied with many other accounts! And that so many hands should have been at pains to transcribe them, is very clear proof of the high estimation in which they were held. That the authors of other accounts, or even the possessors if the authors were no more, should allow those to which they had been accustomed to fall into disuse and oblivion, is a still higher testimony to their claims; that the church should not divide about the four, but harmoniously accept them all, is a testimony both to them and to the church; and that these four books, written so remote, and with so little mutual understanding, should have such distinct characters, such complexional differences, and yet concur so well in the main, and even in the particulars, proves that they were altogether worthy of the high place they so soon reached, and which they have ever since maintained in the church.

To make the whole argument plain by a familiar instance. Suppose there were no newspapers, magazines, reviews, annual registers, or intelligencers of any kind in this age and country, and that one of our fellow-citizens should send home a written accout of some great campaign to his friends, who, to inform their townsmen, suffer it to be read and copied, and generally circulated in the neighborhood. The same thing takes place in another town, and another, until in every county, say, there is circulating a distinct narrative of its own. After an interval, one more full and particular than any of the rest, comes forth; and by the silent influence of its own superiority takes precedence of the rest, in the end puts them out of circulation, and quietly takes its place in the libraries of our posterity; would our posterity be borne out in concluding that the other narratives must have been against this one which had outlived them all? So far from this being the just inference, we will take it upon us to assert that the circumstance of records bearing against each other, instead of bringing about the extinction of any, would be likely to perpetuate both. Controversy would ensue, parties be formed, interests excited, advocates start up; if the subject were of sufficient importance, antiquity would cast its mist over the whole matter, till erudition should labor in vain to draw us into light. The clashing of two accounts, equally ancient and both circulated, may or may not cause one of them to perish; the superiority of the one over the other will do it infallibly. But if, moreover, the narrative which survived should give us to wit, as does this of Luke's, that its author was aware of the rest, and if the author, in his modesty or esteem, should give them a place with his own, as does our Evangelist, and in all his treatise should never hint at a different way in which the matters had been set forth, then whosoever should infer that there was any variance, and that in the absence of the others we have only a chance for truth—nay, whosoever should deny that we have not, from all these circumstances, new arguments for its truth does no less than reason against all experience, judge all antiquity to have been fools, and prefer his own judgment, without facts, without documents to enlighten it, above their judgment who had the facts and documents before them, and their deepest interests at stake.

What are You Living for?—A pastor walking out recently met a little girl belonging to his flock. As they walked on together, he spoke to her of her studies, and was pleased to find her manifest an interest amounting almost to enthusiasm in the cultivation of her mind. "But why, Ellie," asked the pastor, "are you so anxious to succeed in your studies? What do you mean to do with your education after it is finished?" "O, sir," said the girl, "I want to learn that I may do some good in the world. I don't want to die without ever having been of use in the world, by living in it."

Noble purposes! who of our young friends are studying and living to so good an end? Who of us are making an every-day impress for good on the hearts and lives of those among whom we move?—Evangelical Messenger.

Wesley's Calmness.—The celebrated Robert Hall said, "The most extraordinary thing about Wesley was that, while he set all in motion, he was himself perfectly calm and phlegmatic; he was the quiessence of turbulence." Wesley was not "phlegmatic." He had a warm heart, an active spirit. He said, "I am always in haste, though never in a hurry." He one day remarked to Clarke, "As I was passing through St. Paul's churchyard I observed two women standing opposite to each other, the one speaking and gesticulating violently, while the other stood perfectly still and in silence. Just as I came up, and was about to pass them, the virago, clenching her fist and stamping her foot at her imperturable neighbor, exclaimed, 'Speak, wretch, that I may have something to say.' Adam, that was a lesson to me; silence is often the best answer to abuse."

A Siamese Colossus.—The Bangkok Recorder describes a visit to one of the wats or Bhuddist cloisters of the city, which covers ten acres of land, contains two temples, and has an image which far exceeds the Colossus of Rhodes in size. He is reclining on the right side, with his head resting on the right hand. He is one hundred and thirty-five feet long, about twenty-eight feet around the belt, and the length of the little toe on the right foot is three feet four inches. The natives say his bowels are full of large water jars. The labor of constructing and gilding this image must have been immense, and have taken years to accomplish.

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy for their services.

The Postage on the Herald of Life, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All Letters relating to the Herald of Life, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
New York."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

All names of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

PRAYER, AND FORMS.

It seems to me best to pray when we want anything, and to pray for what we want, without regard either to time, or place, or form. This is my course at present. If I want help, I ask for it; if I want relief from difficulty, I ask for that; and so of all things else. I do not wait to go to any particular place, nor do I always change my posture, nor do I always lift up my voice; I simply ask for what I want, and there leave it, assured that God will give me what I ask so long as I love Him and do those things which are pleasing in his sight.

I found that when I used to go and kneel down with the intention of praying five or ten minutes, my thoughts were generally busy with my trade, my friends, my books, my journies or other matters, the principal part of the time. I should just ask God for what I wanted, as soon as I kneeled down, and then off my mind would fly, and do what I would, I could never make it fix itself again for more than a minute or two at a time. My praying was over perhaps in a second or two, and nearly all the rest of the time which I spent on my knees, would be spent in wandering thoughts, and in fruitless struggling against those wandering thoughts. For a long time I used to blame myself for such things; I thought myself worse than almost anybody else. For I fancied that other people, when they prayed, were wholly engaged with their Maker all the time they were on their knees, praying without distraction, without thought or consciousness of anything but the work in which they were engaged. For I was generally, for many years, disposed to give other people credit for greater perfection in religion than I had ever attained myself. But as I had found myself no worse than other people in other things, I gradually gained confidence in myself in this also, and began to think that others might be no freer from such wandering thoughts than myself. I began to think that formal praying was perhaps no duty, that it was not natural, that wandering thoughts were unavoidable in set and formal praying, and that to struggle against such thoughts was to no purpose, so long as we continued the usual kind of formal praying. At length my convictions on this subject became so strong, that I resolved, and ventured, to leave off. And I am glad I did do so. I feel persuaded that I have prayed to more advantage since. I feel persuaded that my prayers have been both more profitable to myself and more pleasing to God, since I began to present them in the artless, natural and unformal way that I have just described. It seems foolish to me now to pray in the usual way. It seems especially foolish to go into chapels, or churches, or public meetings to pray. It seems utterly unatural. I feel persuaded that nothing but custom and fashion could make such a practice tolerable to people. I feel persuaded, that if nature, or reason, or men's better and more christian feelings were consulted, men could not long feel at ease in such prayers.

I have spoken to several christian friends on this subject, since I began to act on my present view, and I have found that all of them had been tried in a similar way to myself. All of them had been troubled with the same kind of wandering thoughts; all had struggled against such wanderings; all had fa led in their struggles, all had written hard things against themselves on account of their failures, and all had concluded, that surely no one was so bad as themselves. When I have told them that I was as bad, that I had had the same experience as themselves, they have been comforted. And when I have told them, that I had come to the conclusion that formal praying was not a duty, that it was not natural, and that the proper way of praying was to pray always, with perfect symplicity, for just such things as they needed, without regard either to time, or place, or form, they have been quite relieved: they have generally seen the reasonableness of the thing at once.

And, in truth, it seems strange to me now, that ever one should have been so foolish as to imagine that there could be any virtue or worth in the mere formalities and circumstances of prayer. It seems strange that truth, reason and scripture did not teach us better long ago. Did not Jesus tell us, that men were not heard for their much speaking? Why then did we think that we must lengthen out our prayers to five, or ten, or fifteen minutes each? Did he not teach us when we prayed, to enter into our closet and shut our door? How, then could we go into the public street, or into the large and open assemblies to pray? Did he not tell us, that the Father sought such to worship him as would worship him in spirit and in truth? Then why did we attribute such importance to forms?

Besides, when we pray to each other, when we have a request to make of our parents or friends, we use no such formalities. We simply ask them for the favors we want, and wait for their reply. We do not visit them regularly, two or three times a day, whether we are wanting anything or not, and each time present them with a five, or ten, or fifteen minutes' speech. We do not think it necessary to put ourselves in particular postures, or to work ourselves up to a certain pitch of feeling or excitement. We tell them simply what we want, and request them, in the simplest and most natural forms of speech, to give us what we want, if they are able. And there the matter rests. And our parents and friends are better pleased with such simplicity a thousand times over, than they could be with forced and formal speeches, spun out to the length of ten or fifteen minutes each. They would think that we were out of our minds, if we were to use the same formalities in asking favors of them, that people use in asking favors of God. And the truth is, we have been beside ourselves in religious matters for many generations past. We have acted with reason and common sense in farming, and trading, and the like; but in religion we have been fools and babes. In religion, the matter in which we ought to have been most rational, we have hardly been rational at all. That which was designed by God to perfect our nature, has been used to pervert, distort, and destroy it. It is mournful to think of these things.

It deserves to be noticed, that almost all the instances of prayer on record in the scriptures are of that short, and simple, and natural kind, for which we are pleading. Most of them are simple requests for such favors as were wanted on the occasions when they were offered up. Take the prayers of Abraham, of Moses, and of Elijah as instances. The Psalms are of a somewhat different class, but they were written compositions, pieces of poetry, and were designed for the instruction of the people.

And the prayers of Jesus and Paul ap ear to have been generally of a similar description. There is only one prayer of Christ's on record, which is of any length, and even that is barely three minutes long. Both scripture and reason, therefore, agree to reccommend an artless, unstudied, unformal way of praying. And I cannot but think, that in proportion as men think, and use their reason, they will be led to lay aside those forms and ways of praying that are now so common, and adopt another mode, more agreeable to their nature, and more suitable to that affectionate relationship existing between themselves and their heavenly Father.

I feel persuaded that if custom and fashion did not reconcile men to it, the truly thoughtful, and wise and good, would be ashamed of the forms which they use in prayer. Company keeps people in countenance, and custom prevents people even from thinking on things, and this is the way in which I account for the present prevailing formalities by which prayer is so grievously encumbered, and by which its usefulness is so frequently impaired.

I was recently reading an article in a periodical, on "Reluctance to Pray." Now it strikes me, that what many call a reluctance to pray, is not a reluctance to pray; but only a reluctance to pray in a certain way, a reluctance to conform to certain customs that have been unhappily joined with prayer. Prayer appears to me to be so natural, so needful, so helpful, and so comfortable besides, that I can scarcely believe it possible for christians to feel a reluctance to pray. I can hardly imagine how a christian, or any other good man who believes in God, can help praying. Prayer seems to me to be as natural to a thoughtful, pious mind, as breathing to a living, healthful body. But to get into a pulpit or on a platform, or to go out into the street, or to go to a public meeting to pray, is not natural. Nor is it natural to go into one's closet to pray at fixed times, when your wants or your trials do not urge you thither. Retirement for meditation, for recollection, for self-examination, may be profitable; and few, I should think, could reflect or ponder long without being led to pray, but still, fixed times or fixed forms, or fixed places do not appear to be best either for prayer or meditation. But it is not natural to put yourself always in one posture, or to tie yourself always to prayers of a certain length. Prayer is natural, but its appendages are not natural. Prayer is natural, but its formalities are unnatural. It is the simple and artless expression of our desires to God, that is prayer; and there are few good people, I imagine, that feel much reluctance to this.

We ought to distinguish, therefore, between reluctance to pray and reluctance to drudge through unnatural and useless forms. And we ought, if we would cure people of their reluctance to pray, to present prayer to their minds in its proper character, apart from its forbidding and repulsive forms. As we try to reconcile unbelievers to christianity, by teaching them to distinguish between christianity as taught and exhibited in the doctrine and character of Christ, and christianity as taught and exhibited in the doctrines and practices of corrupt sectarians, so must we try to reconcile misguided christians to prayer, by teaching them to distinguish between prayer itself, and those unmeaning and unnatural forms with which prayer has been so generally mixed up and disfigured. We shall never reconcile christians generally, to slavish or superstitious ways of praying. Unbelievers may, if they are thoughtful and honest, be reconciled to christianity in its purity; and erring christians may, if they are true and faithful christians, be led to delight in prayer.

I have heard of some professors of christianity who have given up prayer altogether; who profess to believe that prayer is useless. These I believe to be wrong, very wrong. At the same time, it is probable that their error is partly owing to the opposite errors that have been mixed up with the subject of prayer. One extreme begets another. Superstition prepares the way for infidelity; and formality for abstract quietism. Calvinism, which teaches that man is answerable for what he cannot help, prepares the way for socialism, which teaches that man is not answerable at all. This tendency of men to run from one extreme to another, is incurable. Our business, therefore, should be, to draw men, or to keep men from extremes altogether. We should try to separate truth from error, and duty from formality, and good from evil, in all things. If we will retain formality, we must sacrifice true piety at length. If we will have superstition, we must expect ere long to have hypocrisy and infidelity. If we will have a sectarian theology, we must expect people in the end to give up christianity. Sooner or later, they will throw off all yokes, but the yoke of truth, and free themselves from all authority, but the authority of truth, of righteousness, and of God. If men are not helped to lay down unnatural burdens quietly, they will throw them down at length with violence. If they are not seasonably helped to simple truth, they will cast away both truth and ancient errors in the end, and will run into most frightful and ruinous excesses. I trust, therefore, that the friends of truth and christian reformation, will be careful, both on the subject of prayer and on all other subjects, to lay stress on nothing but what is truly useful and divine. I hope and trust that they will neither violently contend for any relic of error or superstition to-day, nor foolishly exchange their errors or superstitions for infidelity or profligacy to-morrow.

I have written thus for the relief, the guidance and the comfort of our friends, and for the benefit of all. I feel persuaded that man-made creeds and forms, and all irrational, unnatural and slavish practices and notions will pass away; and I am desirous that, in passing away, they should not take along with them any portion of truth or of righteousness, or any particle of what is holy or divine. I wish to have the winnowing done, but I wish, while we are driving away the chaff, to lose no useful grain. We must have a reform; we shall have one; and we shall have it quickly, too; and I wish to have it without ruin. Neither ministers, nor governments, nor mobs, nor sects can prevent a reform: and it behooves us, therefore, to prepare for it, and to try to render it as safe, as orderly, as harmless, and yet as thorough as possible. And the way to do this, is to be always open to instruction, and to be always ready to reduce to practice every principle that commends itself to our judgments as true. The way to secure a reform, a thorough and safe one, is to fight for nothing, to struggle for nothing, to plead for nothing, but what is an essential part of truth and righteousness. If we fight for error, we shall lose the truth; if we plead for useless forms, we will lose the useful substance; if we will not help forward and direct aright a needful reformation, we must have a wild, a turbulent, and ruinous revolution. Let each one do his part to secure a peaceful reformation.

HOMO.

INFIDELITY.

The history of infidelity, were it written, would present a succession of ignominious defeats; defeats due not to any want of ability in those who have assailed the truth, but to this, that its defenders have driven them out of all their positions. The history, the morality, the theology, the consistency, the authenticity, and genuineness of the Bible, the truth of its prophecies and the very possibility of its miracles, have been all attacked—each in its turn, and with the same result. We have seen the soldier return from the fields of war with scars as well as medals on his breast; but our religion has come out of a thousand fights unscarred, from a thousand fires unscathed. She bears no more evidence of the assaults she has sustained than the air of the swords that have cloven it, or the sea of the keels which have plouged its foaming waves; than some bold rocky headland of the billows that, dashing against it in proud but impotent fury, have shivered themselves on its sides. With few exceptions the writings of infidels have sunk into entire oblivion. Their names, and those of their authors, are alike forgotten. Not so the name of Jesus, of Him Voltaire boasted he would crush; not so the word of God—the blessed book which is the world's most precious treasure, and often man's only solace, as well in palaces as in cabins. While the works of once famous sceptics are left to rot on bookshelves where the moth devours their memory and the spider wraps them in her web, every year sees the Bible, translated into some new tongue, acquire a greater influence, and receive a wider circulation. Fulfilling its own glorious predictions, it is bringing nearer the appointed time when, rising over all opposition like a flowing and resistless tide, the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters the channel of the deep.

One wonders how the men who now assail our faith can hope for success where Bolingbroke, Voltaire and Rousseau, David Hume and Gibbon, giants in genius and in intellect, totally failed. Christians, possessing their souls in patience and peace, may calmly contemplate the puny assaults of modern infidelity. There is little in these to fill our camp with alarm, or make its Elis tremble for the ark of God. Assailing the faith from new ground, infidelity undertakes to prove the Bible false from its alleged discrepancy with the phenomena of Nature and the discoveries of science. But a few years, we doubt not, will show that though she has changed her ground, she has not changed her doom. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh, the Lord shall have them in derision. Science may, as science has already done, guide us to a sounder understanding of some things in the word of God. While she corrects any mistake into which the interpreters of Scripture have fallen, there is nothing to dread. Why do the heathen rage? The only result of using the facts of science to undermine the foundations of religion, will resemble that wrought by some angry torrent when, sweeping away soil and sand and rubbish, it lays bare, and thereby makes more plain, the solid rock on which the house stands, unmoved and unmoveable.

The man who attempts to build a pyramid on its apex would not act more absurdly than some modern philosophers—so-called. They base the most extravagant theories on grounds utterly inadequate to support the ponderous superstructure. Propounding doctrines concerning our origin opposed to the Bible and destructive of our dearest hopes, they ask us to embrace them on grounds such as no judge and jury would attach the least weight to in a court of law. On grounds so feeble and puerile, and in plain opposition to the facts related in the opening pages of the Scriptures, they assert that our origin was in a monkey, or rather in a monad. Believe them, and man reached his present condition by a process of development which required millions of years ere it carried him up through the stages of insect, fish, reptile, bird and beast, to the supremacy he enjoys, the height he now stands on. Others, not prepared to commit themselves to such extravagant vagaries, but animated with a spirit of equal hostility to the christian faith, assert on grounds equally weak, if not equally ludicrous, that though our first appearance was not in the form of a monad, an oyster, or a monkey, it was in the form of a savage. Believe them, and man's primeval state was not one from which he fell, but from which he rose—one, in fact, of lowest savagedom. And, however widely these opinions differ, if either of them be true, farewell to our fondest hopes, and our faith in Scripture as the word of God.

In regard to the latter of these views—for the first we may pass by as the ravings of philosophy run mad—it is opposed to the oldest and universal traditions of the world. These afford abundant evidence that the history of man does not present a being rising from a lower to a higher condition; but the reverse. Examine the legends of the rudest tribes; and they will be found to contain memories, though misty, of a past but higher and nobler state of being—of arts, of accomplishments, of a refinement of manners, and of, in many instances, a purity of morals which only exist among them now in tales and songs. Not tradition only, but all history besides, proves that man, left to his own resources, has not risen but invariably sunk in the scale. The bias to this, which we explain by the Fall, may have been corrected in certain instances by providential and preternatural causes. But who examines the records of nations will find that the tendency of morals has always been to become more corrupt, and the tendency of religions to become more idolatrous and impure. They exhibit a constantly increasing departure from the truth. In proof of this I appeal to the history, among extinct nations, of Greece and Rome; and, among existing ones, of India and China. Trace their morals and religion upwards, and as we advance nearer to their source, we find the one becoming less impure, and the other less untrue, until a period is reached when the resemblance between these and the morals and religious belief of the patriarchs is striking, is indeed quite remarkable. It is like ascending a river whose waters are polluted by the towns and manufactures that have sprung up on its banks—the nearer we approach the green hills where it springs from its fountains, the purer runs the stream. Man, unaided and left to his own resources, has never risen from a lower to a higher state. On the contrary, we find the vices which early ages discountenanced and forbade, becoming not only universally practised, but even shamefully defied; and the one God of man's first pure faith multiplied into hundreds, in some cases into thousands, and in a few even into millions of inferior and usually immoral divinities.

These remarks, which are not inapplicable to the present times, and which may help to reassure the hearts of some seized with unnecessary alarm, have been suggested by the fact that Abraham's immediate ancestors were idolaters. What a rapid declension this! and what a remarkable illustration of man's tendency to sink rather than to rise in the scale of moral and intellectual being! Almost ere the gray fathers of the flood were dead, ere perhaps the marks of its awful ravages had vanished from the face of the earth, mankind had forgotten its lesson, and begun to worship the creature in place of the Creator. Abraham certainly was the son of an idolater: and, if old Jewish and Mahometan traditions are to be believed, of one who was a maker as well as a worshipper of idols. "Your fathers," said Joshua to the people of Israel, "dwelt on the other side of the flood, even Terah, the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor; and they served other gods." Ur of the Chaldees was the home of the patriarch's race; and the religion they professed was the Sabian—a faith of Eastern birth, and one which presents idolatry in its oldest and least offensive form.—Selected.

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

In addition to what I have before said on this subject, I wish to call attention to a few points.

Daniel viii. 13, 14. "When I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long is the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."

If at the end of this time the Lord is to come, it is evident that this desolating power is to continue to that time. The time and desolation end together. It is further evident that the daily would be in operation at the time these days would commence. If then the days commenced about the time it is supposed, the daily was something connected with the Jews. The Jews did have a daily, or continual sacrifice. Numb. xxviii. 3. Two lambs of the first year, without spot, daily for a continual burnt offering. See Exodus xxix. 41, 42. This Daniel knew all about. After Daniel had seen this vision, he says, "I sought for the meaning. And I heard a man's voice, which called and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision." Now, if Gabriel did do as he was told, he did make Daniel understand this vision. It therefore follows that when Daniel said, as it is in chap. xii. "I heard, but I did not understand," he had no reference to this vision. See Daniel ix. 21–27. Here, when Gabriel came to him the second time, he tells him, "I have come to give thee skill and understanding. Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." He had before explained the symbols, but had said nothing about the daily sacrifice, nor the desolating power, nor anything about the time. He now introduces and explains these three things. He speaks of seventy weeks, marks their beginning and end. "The people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." That is, Jerusalem and the temple, where the Jews worshipped; which was their sanctuary. "And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and ablution to cease; and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it (the city) desolate, even until the consummation." Here we see the daily and continual sacrifice was taken away. The Romans took it away so that they could not offer it, at all. Here, too, we see the setting up the abomination which was to make the city desolate until the consummation. Jesus said, Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. Abominations have been on that city for nearly eighteen hundred years, and will be on it until Gentile powers end. Thus Daniel was told how long the sanctuary was to be trodden under foot; as long as the abominations would continue, which would be to the consummation. Just what Christ said, Until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Therefore, the 1290 days in chap. xii. have nothing to do with the length of the abomination. This time marks the time between taking away the daily and the setting of the Gentile rule over Jerusalem. This rule is to be continued till the Lord comes to set up his Kingdom. Daniel could now understand this vision, and he no more intimated that he did not understand it. Gabriel came for the express purpose to make him understand it. We believe he did so. This, therefore, is not the vision he was told was closed and sealed till the time of the end. This is confirmed by our Saviour, when he said, "When ye, therefore, see the abomination spoken of by Daniel the prophet, whoso readeth let him understand." His disciples were to understand what Daniel had said about the abomination when they saw it. Why? Because it was all explained, open, and made plain. We may be told that in Dan. ix. it says, abominations; the plural, but Christ says, abomination, the singular. This is true; but the plural always includes the singular. Besides, it was in the singular when it was set up. The Romans set it up and held possession of Jerusalem for a long time; then the Saracens, and Egypt; and last, the Turks, who have held Jereusalem for the last several hundred years. Hence, to explain it fully, it should be just as Daniel and our Lord have stated it. The abominations have been Gentile powers. All this is so clearly explained by the angels, that the Saviour could say, "When ye see the abomination spoken of by Daniel," all you have to do to understand it, is to read it. So his disciples were to understand it when they saw it. This they did, and fled to the mountains, as Jesus told them, when they saw Jerusalem compassed with armies. The abomination was there to be set up, on, or in, that city, which had always been called the holy city. See chap. ix. 24.

In chap. xii. Daniel had another vision, which contained something that he did not understand.

> Then I Daniel looked, and behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river. And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished. And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? And he said, Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end. Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand. And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days.

In this vision Daniel saw three persons, one of whom asked another, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders? He had just been told of the resurrection of the dead. The end of the wonders, therefore, would not come till the time came for the dead to be raised. The question is plain, How long to the end? It is a question of time, and the answer is in time. The one on the river said, It shall be for a time, times, and a half. This time will reach to the end of the wonders. Daniel could understand what was meant by the end of these wonders, because, the wonders had been named. The scattering of the power of the holy people has been going on since the first good man lived, and will end when the wonders end. He says, I heard, but I understood not. What about this that he did not understand? He could see when this time would end, for he was told that it would end when the wonders end. This is all plainly stated. So, be this time longer or shorter, it will not end till these wonders end. But he was not told when this time would commence. The angel gave him no light whatever on the beginning of this time. This is what Daniel did not, and could not understand. Then he says, O my Lord, what shall be the end of these things? Go thy way, Daniel, for the words are closed, and sealed, till the time of the end. This was as much as to say, I cannot give you any more light on the ending of these wonders than I have given. Now to say, that the angel went right on and gave him something more definite on the time when the end would come, is to make the angel contradict himself. What therefore, is said of the 1290 and 1335 days, was not said to give him any more light on his question than he had before. Our belief is, that the time of the end has not yet come; when it comes, God will give power to his two witnesses, and they will make the wise understand, all of them, and all about what is revealed on this subject, and when the time, times, and a half, commence.

From the time the daily is taken away and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be 1290 days. Daniel had been told what the daily, and the abomination, were; for Gabriel was told to make him understand, as we have noticed. The daily was the Jewish continual sacrifice offered at Jerusalem, and the abomination was that power that would take it away. It was to be taken away, not simply curtailed, or interrupted. This the Romans did when they took Jerusalem.

They took away the whole thing. True religious worship never was taken away, neither can it be, in any sense whatever. Said Jesus, The time will come when ye shall not worship in Jerusalem, nor in this mountain, but he that worshipeth God shall do it in spirit and truth. This daily worship, if you call it so, cannot be taken away. No, the daily sacrafice was what Daniel as a Jew, knew all about. He and his brethren were in captivity when he wrote this book. But they were to be restored to their city, and again offer their daily sacrifice, which would continue till the people of the prince should come and take it away forever, and set up the abomination that would make the city desolate, by different Gentile powers until the consummation.

There Daniel is told how long it will be from the time the daily is taken away to the setting up, as it is in the margin, of the pagan worship in the place of the Jewish worship, in Jerusalem, 1290 days. Then the angel says, Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days. The word the, shows that this time is a period by itself; that it is no part of another period, and that no other time named is a part of that. Daniel could underall about this time, as he could the 1290 days, and he did not intimate to the contrary Blessed is he that cometh to this time. Coming to it is not coming to the end of it. He could see that he would be raised from the dead when he came to it, and so be blessed, with all the saints, by receiving everlasting life. He is plainly told what would be when these days would end. He would stand in his lot, in his inheritance, in the kingdom of God. Therefore the 1335 days begin when Jesus comes, and end when his Kingdom is set up on the earth. It is objected that this view of the subject makes the time in Daniel xii. literal. Nearly all expositors of the Bible, that I have seen, have adopted the following rule for understanding time in prophecy: If the events named are symbols, the time connected with them is symbolic, that is, a day stands for a year. Our Advent brethern have adopted this rule. We will now apply the rule in this prophecy. Every event in this chapter, is admitted to be literal; why then, if the rule is good, should not the time in this chapter be literal? The 1290 commenced when the Romans took away the daily or continual sacrifice, which the Jews had offered at Jerusalem from the time they returned from Babylon up to A. D 70, when their city and sanctuary were destroyed, as Gabriel had said. These days ended when the Romans had ended their work and had established their pagan sacrifices in the place of the Jewish. Since the ending of the 1290 days, abominations, one or more, have been in that city, and will be, just as Gabriel and our Saviour have said, until the consummation; until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. The 1335 days begin when Daniel and others are raised from the dead, and will end when they stand in their lot, in the Kingdom of God, set upon the earth. The time, times, and a half, will end when the wonders end. When they will begin we know not, for Daniel was not told. This remains to be revealed by the two witnesses, to whom God will give power to prophesy 1260 days.

The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient working for Christ.

Good News for All!

Man's destiny is made known by God's word. We know only that which we learn.

"Know thyself." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning (or, principal part, mar.) of knowledge, but fools despise wisdom and instruction." Prov. i. 7. "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have Eternal Life." John v. 39. "But, be not deceived," by any, for, "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble; he cometh forth as a flower and is cut down." Job. xiv. 1, 2. Man—all that constitutes him such, is going fast down to death. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 19. Death and the grave eternally hold the natural man fast in their cold embrace. "They shall never see light." Psalm. xlix. 19. "In Adam all die" As man has no conscious existence before birth, so he has none in a state of death. "The wages of (and only penalty for) sin, is death." Rom. vi. 23. Nothing more; nothing less; simply, really TO BE DEAD. Here, O man, is thy destiny! But Jesus, God's Son, came into our world to give you Life Hear him. "He that believeth on me, hath everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 47, 54. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, (by the work of his Spirit become a partaker of his nature) ye have no life in you." But as Paul says, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell" in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by (or, because of, mar.) his Spirit which dwelleth in you." Rom. viii. 11. This class being "accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead," can die no more; "for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx. 35, 36. "Behold, I have set before you the way of Life and the way of Death." Jer. xxxi. 8. In which way are you walking? Consider these things. Are you safe? Yours affectionately

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"The Theology of the Bible."

JUDGE HALSTED, in his letter last week, called our attention to "the effect of allowing translators to transpose the words used in the original." He referred us to Acts iv. 2; xiii. 48; and 2 Tim. i. 10, as presented in his book, on this point. We have examined those places, and present them to our readers in the order named. Gr., stands for the Greek: Lat, for the Latin: Rh., for Rheims; Ital., for Italian; E. V, for English version. With this explanation we give his translation and remarks on the texts:

Acts iv. 2; Gr., Being exercised by reason of their teaching the people and katangellin, angelling, announcing, en, through, Jesus that standing up again which ek nekron: Lat, ... in Jesus (a) resurrection ex, out of, dead: Ital, and foretold, or, declared, in Jesus the resurrection of the dead [i. e., of dead: we have had numberless instances where the E V. does not render the Ital., article]: Rh, and preached in Jesus the resurrection from the dead [i. e., they preached, that in Jesus was the resurrection from the dead]: E. V, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead [i. e, they preached, that through Jesus was (i. e., would be) the resurrection from the dead: that through him only, i. e., through belief in him would any one be raised to life from the dead. Read again the Gr. of the verse. Orthodoxy reads this verse thus: that through Jesus they preached the resurrection of all the dead! Whately, p. 229, uses correct language "to embrace by faith the offer of salvation through Christ"].

Judge Halsted presents us a sample of the transposing of words by translators on page 328, as follows:

To show what can be done by collocating, placing together, words in a sentence in a way to suit a theory, I give the Gr. of Acts xiii. 48; episteusan hosoi, Believed as many as (i. e., As many as believed; the Heb, and the Gr., generally put the verb first,) were set in order for a life eternal; in perfect accord with every other passage in reference to faith and the promise made to it: The E. V. is "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed?" Wholly at variance with every other passage relating to the promise made to faith. And so in Heb. ii. 4; Rom. i. 17; Gal. iii. 11; Heb. x. 38, the Heb. and Gr. are, "the just by, or on account of, faith shall live again," in perfect harmony with all Scripture. And James Murdock, D D, and very likely of the Orthodox school, in his translation of the Syriac New Testament, renders Rom. i. 17. "The righteous by faith, shall live." And Gal. iii. 11, "The just by faith, shall live:" in the margin he puts, or, "be saved," (equivalent to, shall live again) instead of live. And Heb. x. 38. "Now the just by faith, will live," (i. e, by faith of, in, me.) He puts a comma after faith in each of these verses. The E V. in each of these verses is, "the just shall live by faith." The E. V. both of Acts xiii. 48, and of the four last cited verses, is due to the Calvinism of James's Ecclesiastics; which would read: they who are ordained (i. e., as it would have us understand that word, elected, to be just, shall live by faith. The English clergy that came after them, and not very long after, discarded Calvinism.

We now come to a very important disclosure of the violence done to the truth by the practice of transposing words to suit a theory. "Mr. B." spoken of in the following, is ALBERT BARNES, of Philadelphia. Judge Halsted proceeds:

We return to 2 Tim. i. 10. Mr. B's collocation of words in that v. is, "life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel:" and, as before said, makes the verse to mean, that, through the gospel life and immortality of all is brought to light: The E. V. collocation is,..hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. Would James's Ecclesiastics have us understand by this what Mr. B. understands by his collocation? The Gr. is, having brought to light (using the E. V. words) a life and incorruptibility through the gospel. What is it that the Gr. says is brought to light? It is, a life and immortality through the gospel; i. e., a life, &c., through belief in the gospel; and, of course, to those only who believe in the gospel, good tidings, of a, or, the, Christ come. The E. V., by dividing the verb brought to light into two parts, and putting brought before life and immortality, and to light after those words, make the sentence capable of being understood, hath brought life and immortality of all to light through the gospel; i. e., that the gospel has brought life and immortality in all to light. Whether the E. V. collocation was intended to be so understood we can't say: but Mr. B. tells us he so understands the verse. Is is not amazing that any man, after saying that he finds the tenet, the immortal soul, no where else in Scripture, and from no reasoning whatever, should be so wedded to the enormous dogma, (the consequences of which Saurin pictures as so appalling,) as to be determined to find it some where in Scripture; and to determine to find it in this verse, 2 Tim. i. 10! I have never been able to see what there is in the tenet to be so in love with that men should persist in wresting Scripture in attempts to find it in God's word. All such efforts are just so many proofs furnished by Orthodoxy itself that its theory, the immortal soul, is not in the Bible. Of Orthodoxy's scheme that tenet is the foundation corner stone. And if it were a part of God's system it would occupy the same position: It would not have been left to men's guessings.

Our readers, from these samples of transposing words, may learn the value of a work where words are left in the order in which they occur in the original. The transposition saves study, but the sense may be entirely perverted by it. We thank Judge Halsted for bringing out his timely work; and we hope every one of our readers will get a copy, and study it well. It sweeps away the doctrine of inherent immortality, and the resurrection of the ungodly, making a clear breach over all the man-made dykes to defend those shocking notions which have so long dishonored God and hardened men in sin and infidelity. But the days of those horrid errors are fast coming to an end. We may not live to see them "die the death" they so richly merit; yet, it will come; and we praise the LIFE-GIVER that He has counted us worthy, through grace, to have a part in the blessed work.

Before closing these remarks we give another extract from Judge Halsted's work on the resurrection question, embracing John v. 28, 29. It is taken from pages 591 and 592, as follows:

John iii. 36; Gr., Who believing in the son hath [for will have, present for future, very common] (a) life eternal; but who wanting faith, disbelieving, in the son, not shall see life [i. e., from the dead], but the anger of God remaineth fixed, or, abideth, upon him [i. e., death, the effect of the anger of God against sin, abideth on him]. John iv 36; Gr., But he who...gathereth fruit eis, to, or, for, (a) life eternal. John v. 24; Gr.,... that who the word of me hearing, and believing him that sent me, hath [for, will have] (a) life eternal: and to, or, into krisis, final issue, condemnation, not cometh [not shall come], but is gone away [i. e., shall go away] out of death [the grave] into the life [i. e., shall be raised to life again]: E. V.,...hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation. John v. 25; Gr.,...that cometh a time, even now is, when the dead [dead, without the article, because before an abstract noun, and we have had numberless instances where the Douay, Rheims, and E. V., do not render the Gr. article] will hear the phone, sound, or voice, of the son of God; and those having heard, or, who hear, will live again. Ver. 26; Gr, For even as the Father hath life in himself, so edoke [first aorist], he gave kai, also, to the son life to have in himself: [i. e., to bestow life from the dead through belief in him.] Ver. 27; Gr., And exousia, privilege, [see margin to John i. 12, before given,] gave to him also krisis, condemnation [see v. 24], to do, because (a) son of man he is [i. e., was, and will be]. Ver. 28; Gr., Do not wonder at this: that cometh a time en, at, which all those in the mnemeiois, secure places where precious things are stored up and preserved, will hear the sound, or voice, of him, v. 29; Gr., And ekporeusontai, shall have exit, or, go out, those the good having done, in (a) resurrection of life: but those the bad having done, [are] in (a) resurrection of krisis, condemnation, [i. e., they shall not rise; but the condemnation of them rises, namely, by their not rising: and till then it will not be known by any but God, to how many, and whom, death is the krisis, condemnation, final issue. See Rom. v. 16. 18; Heb. vi. 2; given in their ordder. Observe, reader, that there is no stop, not even a comma, in the Greek after "And ekporeusontai."

P. S. Since the foregoing was in type we have received the following from the author of "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE."—EDITOR.

NEWARK. N. J., Feb. 4. 1867.

REV. GEORGE STORRS:—Dear Sir:—Please accept my warmest thanks for your work "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," which you sent me day before yesterday. I have already read the larger portion of it, and with great delight. Had your writings on this subject come to my possession before I commenced preparing "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," it is highly probable I should have thought that no labor of mine could make the truth more apparent. But perhaps it is as well that I was ignorant that the dogma inherent immortality, which, as you well say, is the error that lies at the root of all other corruptions of the scriptures and the truth of God, had been so completely overthrown by you. Every additional concurent witness, testifying without concert with any other, adds to the conclusiveness of the proof, even though the credit of preceding witnesses is unquestionable.

That such a dogma, and its consequence—endless conscious suffering, of which, as you say, "Paganism is the father cause, and Papacy the mother cause," has lived, and has ruled Christendom to this day, is an astounding fact. What vitality it yet has in the so-called church (it has little outside of that) we agree is due to the systematic training of the infant mind pursued both in the Roman Catholic and the Protestant denominations. But the day is breaking in which, before the sun of it shall reach the meridian, the fact that such notions were ever believed will be as wonderful, as the belief of the so-called Fathers in theology that the earth was a plain, and was the stationary centre of the universe.

I have prepared and given to the printer somewhat of an Index to "The Theology of the Bible," of which some gentleman sent you a copy. When I get the printed copies of the Index, I will prefix one to a copy of the book, and will have the pleasure of asking your acceptance of it. The Index will be sent to every one to whom a book has been sent.

I observe that in my letter published in your last week's paper the type-setter made a mistake in printing incredality instead of incredibility—the word used by me.

I am sir, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
O. S. HALSTED.

A Straw in the Wind.

The proverb says, "Straws show which way the wind blows." So it often happens in theology. The time was when the Methodists gloried that they had no "Doctors of Divinity among" them. The reason assigned was, "Our divinity is not sick." So many "straws" have indicated the reverse, in later years, that we cannot help thinking they have become sensible their divinity needs a good deal of doctoring. "Doctors of Divinty" have become numerous, of late, in their ranks; and we understand one of the graduates in that line is Prof. H Mattison, now "D D." Probably his book on the "Immortality of the Soul" gave him that insignia. Be that as it may, he seems to tremble for the fate of his favorite doctrine of eternal misery. This is made evident by a report of "The Preacher's Meeting" in this city, a short time since, in which we find the following:

"Rev. H. Mattison presented the following question for discussion, which was entered on the list: 'Is the future and endless punishment of those who die in their sins as strongly preached among us as formerly, and if not, what will be the probable results to Evangelical churches?'"

Here is a "straw" which tells us "which way the wind blows" in the Methodist E. Church. That the doctrine of eternal torments—for that is what the D. D. means by "endless punishment"—is not "preached among" them "as strongly as formerly" is a self-evident fact. There are too many intelligent and pious men in the Methodist ministry to remain hoodwinked by such smatterers in theology as Doctor Mattison.

Death.

Who is its author—God or the devil? Or, who has the power of death? Does God afflict us with pain, sickness, disease, and death? or, is it the devil?

Is this vile work done by a friend—God? or, is it done by an enemy—Satan?

The foregoing queries were suggested by reading, in the HERALD OF LIFE, two sentences, by the Editor, in relation to the death of his son.

Here are the sentences: "For the first time, in forty-two years, has our family circle been broken by 'the last enemy.'" (Satan, I suppose) "Shall we murmur or complain that He (God, as the context shows) takes from us our only son?" Who took him away?

TIM THY WHEELER.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We do not feel disposed, at this time and in our present relation to this subject, to go into a discussion of the questions presented above. So far as relates to our own language, we answer, Our Br. must not put words into our mouth which we did not utter. When we said "the last enemy," he may "suppsse" we mean "satan;" but we mean no such thing. Paul saith "The last enemy shall be destroyed—death." 1 Corth. xv, 26. "Death" is "the last enemy;" and not "satan," as you "suppose."

"Sin entered into the world, a death by sin" not by "the devil." Sin brought death on the race—not "satan." Death is an enemy to life, or the opposite of life. As an enemy, it will triumph forever over all unbelievers; but "The just by faith, shall live again." This "last enemy," to such, will be destroyed.

All others remain eternally under its dominion; not because there is a "devil," but because God has determined to leave them there. The wicked are "holden with the cords of their sins," and not by a personal devil. We are no devil worshipper. No such personage "has the power of death" now, or ever will have.

As to our expression, "shall we murmur or complain that He (God) takes from us our only son," we have only to say, in the language of inspiration, 'The LORD gave, and the LORD hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord. In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly.' Job i. 21, 22. If others choose to "charge God foolishly," by insinuating that "satan" took away their children, we are not of that number, and must be excused from thus "sinning" against Him. We fully believe that our LIFE-GIVER has taken our son into His own keeping; and that he sleeps in Jesus till the storms on this world are overpast; and that then he will be brought into life, to die no more. God "took him away" from the evil coming on the earth; and he sleeps in peace, whatever ills befall the world. So, we praise God and the Lamb.

Remember, Brother, "It pleased the Lord to bruise him;" [His Son] "He hath put him to grief," &c. Men may afflict themselves by sinful habits or practices, and thus do a "vile work" on themselves or theirs: but all the afflictions, pains, and sufferings of this life, of God's appointment, are for good, and are not evil, or "vile," but in mercy to us. So we believe.

Messiah's Reign.

There is a general agreement that the blessed Jesus will come in person to judge the world. It is also admitted on all hands that there will be at some period a general prevalence of millennial blessedness. The difference of opinion respects the question as to whether the Saviour's coming will precede or follow this season of universal blessing. Let us refer to the scriptures for information on this point. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Here we are apprised of the Lord's personal descent to the earth, accompanied by the subjects of the resurrection and also those of the change, and heralded by "the voice of the archangel" and "the trump of God" In another epistle of the same apostle we have the same announcement, with the additional intelligence that this trumpet is to the last trumpet; "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump" Now the last trumpet implies a series of trumpets; and according to the inspired rule of "comparing spiritual things with spiritual," we must seek for such a series. And turning to the eighth chapter of the Apocalypse, we find seven trumpets spoken of, while of the seventh or last this remarkable language is used: "In the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets."

Now if the winding up of the prophetic mystery of God be then finished, it follows that this must be "the last trumpet" of the apostle Paul. And what have we in the next chapter? Why, the stirring announcement that when "the seventh angel sounded there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Thus have we, by faith, accompanied the Lord Jesus from the right hand of the Father to the revisited earth, from the scene of his intercession to that of his triumph; and have seen his kingdom established and his reign commencing previous and introductory to the period of millennial blessedness.

Take another similar instance. Speaking of the resurection, Paul says again, that "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Where is this saying written? Isaiah xxv. 6. "And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces: and the rebuke of his people shall be taken away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it."

And how does the next chapter open? "In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. Open ye the gates that the rigeteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in." So we see it is not until after the Messiah's reign has commenced that "Judah shall be saved." Then shall be accomplished the as yet unfulfilled prediction of Jeremiah, "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous branch, and a king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth....and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." Oh, how thankful we ought to be to our heavenly Father for the privileges we have of knowing the truth. May we all be enlightened by it, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit endure unto the end, for our LIFE-GIVER said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." INCOG.

What a Philosopher says.

Raph Waldo Emerson said, in a discourse at Madison, Wisconsin, that Jesus did not teach the doctrine of a personal immortality.

His argument was, that the universal belief in a future life, is the best proof; the common desire of man to live, the greatest evidence of the immortality of the soul. If the continued existence of man would be good, then it would be given; and we should be content with that knowledge. Jesus did not teach it. Plato and Socrates had the weakness to set it forth. Jesus did not, by words, or actions, teach it; but men made themselves feel that they were eternal. The dissatisfaction of the mind with any other solution was the blazing evidence that man is immortal.

This may do very well as the fancy of a philosopher. But the theologians will not thank him for putting Jesus altogether in the background. He manifestly speaks ironically when he says, "Plato and Socrates had the weakness to affirm it." He means to disparage Jesus Christ. He has no confidence in the New Testament; yet he can see the statements that are made. The cry of infidelity on the part of the clergy, will be sufficient to satisfy many who will be struck with the statement; but it will not do. The ground he occupies is the ground of the heathen, the skeptic, and spiritualist. Is it christian? Not at all.

Leaving the New Testament out, what is the statement of the argument by this wise philosopher of the transcendental school? The same that the heathen philosophers made. The same; from the same stand-point. There is no difference at all, when men have the honesty, like Mr. Emerson, to admit that the doctrine is taught by heathen philosophers, and not by Jesus Christ.

Paul said, of the church in his time, and in all time, that they were "not as those who had no hope." That is, as the heathen, who, like Emerson, believed the statement of Plato, or "felt that they were eternal." And why was not the church like them? Because Jesus is risen from the dead, and, "because he is risen, the dead, who sleep in Jesus, will God bring with him." A good reason in his estimation, and one which, while Jesus did not state the immortality of man by man's self, is according to Christ's statement that there will be life in the future for those who believe.

To Parker Sawyer.

BR SAWYER:—It appears from your last communication that two certainties stand opposed to each other. You "feel certain that" I am "to be sadly disappointed" in my certainty of the fact that you are "yet to be somehow illuminated." But my certainty is not defined by "somehow." I know exactly "how." You will be illuminated by the Holy Spirit, according to the promise to Israel, Isa. xliv. 3, the effect of which is recorded in verse 5. "One shall say, I am YAHVEH'S; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe with his hand unto YAHVEH, and surname himself by the name of Israel." This is the programme, my brother, and you will have part in it.

You say "that facts in the history of Israel should have weight in the settlement of the question" whether the ten tribes have returned to their own land. So say I.

You agree with me that the same God who scattered Israel, and drove the ten tribes beyond the Euphrates, declared he would preserve their identity; but with the proviso that "their identity was to be preserved only to the time of their being gathered to be with Judah one nation," according to Hosea i. 11. "Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land; for great shall be the day of Jezreel." I agree This is just what I believe, for this prediction is yet to be fulfilled.

You devote one paragraph of thirteen lines to a statement that "David" in Ezek. xxxvii. 24, 25, refers "not to David personally, but to a representative of David." As if I doubted it!

You say, "I understand that David's throne properly existed from David to David's Son and Lord, through whom it is established forever." Then David's throne was not subverted! This is the latest discovery. I have heard men assert that the throne of David will never be rebuilt, and have attributed it to their unbelief; but I am at a loss to account for this novel denial of an undoubted "fact" by one who claims an especial regard for "facts in the history of Israel." So we have been "beating the air," it seems, in discussing the return of Israel; we should have first proved that Israel was scattered! David's throne has "properly existed" from David's time to the present! What next?

I wonder what the author of Psa. lxxxix, was babbling about in verses 38–51? I wonder what Amos meant, ch. ix. 11? As for Ezek. xxi. 27, we have your partial interpretation. You take the words, "overturn, overturn, overturn it," to indicate a transfer, and not a destruction. Then it follows that Nebuchadnezzar sat on the throne of David. And this you assert. The throne of David was overturned and overturned through the hands of the Chaldeans, Macedonians, and Romans. That is, it "properly existed" all the time. But the text rebels against such a wrenching, my brother. Not only does the marginal reading indicate the true meaning of the word "overturn," but the next expression agrees. "It shall be no more, until he come whose right it is." Can a thing that is not "properly exist?"

You conclude by claiming that 11,271 of the ten tribes came up with 31 089 of Judah and Benjamin; and then add, "If such a number of the ten tribes returned at the first, how vast may be the numbers that returned with Ezra and Nehemiah?" You are coming out just where I expected, my brother? Your "vast return" is only a "maybe," not a "fact." Your 11,271 nameless persons are a poor substitute for royal Ephraim and "all the house of Israel his companions." Allow me to close with an arithmetical statement which you may justify in your next. As 10 is to 13, so is 11,271 persons not worthy of a family identification, to 31,089 of Judah and Benjamin. But I may as well demand your authority for taking 11,281, who are counted in with "Judah and Benjamin" and are said to have been taken away by Nebuchadnezzar, and imputing them to the ten tribes in the face of the "fact" that not one of the ten tribes is named by Ezra or Nehemiah in their histories. Remember, my brother, that "facts should have weight in the settlement of this question," not a mere "claim that the ten tribes were represented."

I hope you will soon get out of the mist of human speculation, and begin to look for the redemption of Israel. Fraternally,

JOSEPH T. CURRY.

The Originality of Christ's Sayings.

[Concluded from No. 160.]

Let us pass on to a class of sayings in which the very greatness of the assumptions ascribed to our Saviour carry with them the strongest evidence of their genuineness. This class is so large, and so much of Christ's discourses, particularly in St. John's gospel, is marked by the assumption of superhuman authority, that it will be enough to mention a few instances by way of illustration. A remarkable feature of this teaching is the relation which he everywhere assumes to all mankind The salvation which he promises is not to a single race, but to the whole world. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved" St. John iii. 16, 17. The same universal relation to mankind generally had been claimed for Christ by John the Baptist in the title by which he pointed him out: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." John i. 29. It is continually asserted by our Lord in nearly all his discourses. "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." John iv. 14. It is united with a claim to divine attributes, such as that of giving spiritual life, raising the dead, judging the world, in the fifth chapter of St. John. Who is this who says, "As the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." John v. 21. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of judgment." And, if possible, yet more distinct in their assumption of divine power, and of this universal relation to all mankind, are the sayings related in the sixth chapter, in which Christ calls himself the bread of life, says that who ever believeth in him hath everlasting life, that he gives his flesh for the life of the world, and that he will raise up at the last day all who eat his flesh and drink his blood. We refer to these solemn words now, not for the purpose of commenting upon them, but merely to draw the reader's attention to the assumption which they imply. Nothing in any degree like it occurs in the teaching of the prophets. The novelty of the claims they advance is as remarkable as their transcendent greatness. It is not, however, part of our present argument to urge that he who could so speak must have been a divine being, but only to point out that the very extraordinary and transcendent nature of the assumptions contained in them impresses on us the conviction that he really made them, and that the wonderful words which we have quoted fell indeed from the lips of Jesus. What more sure way could there be of giving offence and estranging men from his teaching than by putting such claims into his mouth, unless he had really made them? It is going a step further to add, that he himself could not have made them unless they were true.

There are, again, some sayings of Christ of which it is not paradoxical to remark, that their very obscurity gives proof, or at least strong presumption, of their genuineness. When, for instance, he said to the Jews, in the early part of his ministry, on their asking for a sign of his authority, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up," he seems not to have intended that they should, at the time, understand the import of his words. That they were really spoken is clear, because they were brought against when he was accused before the council. But until his death and resurrection they must have been unintelligible, and even afterwards, with the help of St. John's interpretation, they have some remaining difficulty. Did our Lord speak only of his body, or did he mean also that the Jewish temple, and the dispensation connected with it, were to die with him, and be raised to a new life in the temple of the christian church, founded by his resurrection? It seems natural to suppose that his words contained this allusion; but they are adduced here as an instance of a saying which certainly fell from the lips of Jesus, as its very obscurity shows A similar example is that concerning the sign of the prophet Jonas; it was apparently not meant to be fully understood till after Christ's resurrection. To those who heard it, it must have been mysterious; its very obscurity marks its genuineness.

The twelfth chapter of St. Luke contains some very remarkable words of Christ, which probably struck his hearers as being of obscure and mysterious import. The time was probably towards the close of his ministry, perhaps a few months before his death. Some chapters earlier in the gospel (Luke ix. 51), it is related that "when the time was come that he should be received up, he steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." The words give the impression of an unusual earnestness and determination being visible in our Lord's countenance and demeanor, as of one who knew in what this last journey would end, who was sensible of a natural human shrinking from pain and death, but in whom the higher will, to finish his Father's work, predominated, yet so as to leave some mark of conflict and of effort, which his disciples observed. The same scene is described, apparently, in another of the gospels (Mark x. 32): "They were in the way, going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them; and they were amazed; and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him." The amazement and fear of the disciples must have been owing to something unusual in our Lord's deportment, probably that expression of set purpose and determination which St. Luke describes, and perhaps to some eagerness in his movements, as of one hastening forward, implied in the words, "He was going before them," with an interval between himself and his followers. For what was then in his own mind is made apparent from his immediately afterwards taking them, and foretelling his approaching shame, death and resurrection, with more particular details than he had used before. Now it was probably at a more advanced stage of this last journey that he used the remarkable words to which we allude They follow on some solemn warnings of the danger of not being ready at his coming, in the parables of the servant and steward, and the return of their lord from the wedding. And then he adds, "I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I? Would that it were already kindled; [for this seems the right punctuation and meaning: which is given differently in the authorized version:] but I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished."

It has doubtless come within the experience of many persons, who have had before them a work of great danger and suffering, but have resolved to go through with it at any cost, to feel, at times, an eager desire that the crisis should be past. To compare any such experience, in degree, with that feeling which the words of Christ express, would indeed betoken a most inadequate conception of the difference between the divine Saviour and his followers And an instinctive feeling of reverence seems to prescribe a caution, in all but those especially qualified for it, against indulgence too far in conjectures concerning what may have passed in our Lord's mind, at any solemn periods of his earthly life, or attempting to analyze too closely the feelings which his words express. They are related, however, for us to reflect upon them, and their purpose is lost unless, to some extent, we understand their import. Without trespassing irreverently on a sacred subject, we cannot doubt that an ardent and ever present zeal for God's glory urged Christ onwards to the fulfilment of his work, causing him to desire, almost with a holy impatience, that it might be completed: and that his human nature, subjected in filial obedience to his Father's will, and desiring above all things that it might be done, yet felt (more severely in proportion to its very perfection) the natural fear and shrinking which the prospect of his passion aroused, but which he never suffered to interfere with his entire devotion of purpose and of heart. Beyond this, we may decline to speculate upon what passed in his mind, and will but call the attention of the reader back to the purpose for which these remarks have been introduced. The whole scene, described as it is, in very few touches, no less than the solemn and remarkable words to which we have particularly referred, bears a stamp of reality and genuineness which no attentive reader can mistake.

We are aware that this may seem a poor result for so much comment, and one scarcely worthy of its sacred subject. Yet in days when assaults are made against the external and internal evidences of the christian faith, assaults often confident and presumptuous in proportion to their intrinsic weakness, it may not be useless to set the reader on a track which he may pursue for himself, without any aid but an attentive reading of holy scripture, namely, that of the proofs which its own pages afford of the genuineness of those narratives and discourses which they contain. We believe that the force of this proof is great and cogent, perhaps more cogent than any other branch of evidence. And, incidentally, it will not be without its us , if he is led into a more exact and complete conception of the scenes and discourses of the gospels; for, to gain a fuller and more adequate impression of the import of our Saviour's words and acts, is to be led further and further into the truth of the gospel which he revealed.—Sunday Magazine.

Consistencies.

1. Is it consistent to believe that man is undying, when God said if he transgressed he should surely die?

2. Is it consistent for a man to believe, when God says, "surely die," he meant, he should live forever?

3 Is it consistent for a man to believe that souls pass into heaven and hell, at death, and afterwards be called out and examined to see if they shall go back to the same?

4. Is it consistent for a man to pray, "Thy kingdom come," and at the same time believe that it is never coming, or that it has come?

5. Is it consistent for a man to say he loves God, whom he has not seen, and hate his brother, whom he has seen? "He that hateth his brother abideth in death"

6. Is it consistent to believe that the judgments which have been executed in the past, shall be re-inflicted in the future?

7. If God's wrath, or judgment, has come upon any people "to the uttermost" is it consistent to believe that more can be added to it?

8. If God has punished any people for their sins, is it consistent to believe in their future punishment for those sins?

9. "The wages of sin is death." Is it consistent to believe that the wages of sin is to die twice?

10. Is it consistent to believe that the death for sin is in the future, when the Bible says, "Sin entered the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men?"

Then comes the good news: life from death; for which sin is the cause. The good news does not save men from dying, but from death; and this salvation is conditional; for "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish," or remain in death, for which sin is the cause, but come out, by believing in God's Son, in the resurrection "at the last day." Amen. All who are now living, who reject the gospel, will go into future punishment, unless they repent and believe on the Son of God. So I think a man can believe in future punishment and be consistent, but not in future conscious punishment of Sodom and Dathan and hosts of others that might be named. They have been punished, and it will be eternal. So I think; for which I thank God.

Letters and Extracts.

From Lucretia B. Lamb.

ROOTSTOWN, OHIO, Jan., 9, 1867.

DEAR FRIENDS; Readers of the HERALD OF LIFE—how many wishes of a happy new year have greeted our ears since the morning of 1867; how many have been uttered in every family and throughout every community; and, indeed, the civilized world. There must be meaning in it; importance attached to it. It cannot be an unmeaning, frivolous expression. There must be personal responsibility in it also; and should we not inquire what it is? To me, it is in substance a promise that I will exert my influence, according to the talents bestowed, that this great end may be secured. Then having wished all a happy new year, what is to be done? Where lies the hidden magnet that will diffuse joy and electrify the universe with happiness that eye hath not seen nor ear heard? The angels sang of it o'er Bethlehem's plains. Jesus proclaimed it, and his disciples have continued the theme, that to be like Jesus was peace and joy that no man could take away. It is the fulness of joy which is to be realized in all its import at his right hand. This made Paul and Silas sing in prison; their feet in the stocks, their bodies smarting with the cruel scourge. Animated with the same spirit, the martyrs could embrace the stake, saying, Welcome cross of Christ; welcome everlasting life. If we would have this year pre-eminently a happy one, we must deny self and follow Christ. He pleased not himself; so should we seek not our own, but the things of others. His whole life was an unceasing effort for the recovery and salvation of a lost race. His requirements are, Do to others as I have done to you; and, inasmuch as ye have done it to the least, ye have done it to me. With these considerations I think it wise to review the past; and if we find our standard not sufficiently elevated, raise it higher. Rest not short of an entire conformity. Let Jesus be the Alpha and Omega of our being, when we lay down to rest and when we rise up, when we meet those dear to us in the family circle, let his image be visible in our countenances; when we walk by the way and mingle with neighbors, let the savor of Christ be so manifest that they will feel that we have been with, and learned of him; so shall we be happy and diffuse happiness through this year; and not only this year, but all coming time, reaching onward into the endless ages where faith is lost in sight, and hope in fruition.

Thus living, should our blessed Lord come this year, how completely would the smile of the Lord be the feast of the soul; and should he not come, the work to be done is still rich and glorious, and naught can separate us from his love: There will still be seed to be sown, suffering to be alleviated, and the sorrowing to be comforted. Should the coming of our Lord, whom we so earnestly desire to see, be delayed so that we will in our present state meet with many more new-years' greetings, with the fixed purpose that, Christ aiding us, all shall be for his glory. We behold among the admiring multitude, when Jesus comes, those we have fed and clothed, instructed and taught the way of life, the fruit of our labors and prayers, think we shall regret that Jesus gave us more time to work for him? Then may we gird ourselves for the work, and this year be one of enterprise and zeal commensurate with the magnitude of the object, and many find it through our efforts the year of their emancipation from sin's dominion into the liberty of the children of God. Your sister, wishing in all things to be Christlike.

SOUTH NORWALK, CONN, Feb. 24, 1867.

BR STORRS:—We have not received our HERALD for two weeks, viz: for Feb. 6, and 13. Will you please send them to us if you can, as we feel the loss? We prize them much, as we do love the truth; and being deprived of meeting with any of like faith, we would be very glad to get them. But best of all is the prospect of the glorious future. No death there; no parting with loved ones; no one heard to say, "I am sick." And the blessed Saviour to be in our midst; and his will done on earth as it is in heaven. And then to think that those who are not his "are dead, they shall not rise" to suffer but shall be "as though they had never been." From dust taken, and back to dust return; no life in them. O, what wisdom in God's plan; and so plain that all might see and know. God grant that his truth may shine more, brighter, and clearer, until the mist and fog that has for ages been thrown over his word may be driven away, and let it shine in its true light. And may we that profess to see the truth, and know his will, so live and walk that nothing can be found against us. O, for clean hearts and a close walk with our God. Each day of our lives to be spent in doing good. Father keep us on the rock, and feed us with bread from heaven, and let there be a well of water springing up unto eternal life. That we may be ready to live or die, or meet our LIFE-GIVER when he comes to claim all that are his, is our prayer.

FRANKFORT, WIS, Feb. 17. 1867.

BR. STORRS.—I may say to you that I am only about 26 miles from Lake City, Minn. So I felt a desire to see the brethren of a like precious faith, and went there lately. I did not see all the readers of the HERALD; but those whom I did see seemed to be intelligent and earnest. They are very desirous that some good preacher of Jesus as the "resurrection and the life" should be with them a while. I have no doubt but good would be accomplished in the name of Jesus; and the brethren would do according to promise for the preacher. Moses Hull [an apostate.—ED.] was there when I was. I heard him twice. I could not help feeling sorry for him. The truths concerning man's nature and destiny which I have learned seemed more precious to me than ever when contrasted with what is called "spiritualism." I think there is not so much danger of those who have embraced, heartily the truths of no life out of Christ, and the coming kingdom, being led away by what is called "spiritualism" as there is of others; but "let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Let us strive to obey the Bible injunctions; such as, "Beware; take heed; prove all things; hold fast that which is good," &c. Brother A. G. Hudson, I believe, has been the means of doing a good deal of good; as far as I could learn. He preaches occasionally, and would like to do it more, but business, which he is compelled to attend to for a living, forbids. I could write an epistle concerning my own experience and observation, but I shall have to defer it for the present. I will say, that I am striving so to live that I shall receive the crown of life and an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

NEW HAVEN, CONN, Feb. 4, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—On board of the steamer Continental I found on the centre table, a book placed there for the traveling community to read. On one of the blank leaves may be found written with pencil the following poetry in two distinct handwritings. I think they they are worth reading and send them to you for publication without comment:

"Tell me not in mournful numbers,
Life is but an empty dream,
For the soul is dead that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

"Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

"Then gird thine armor for the battle,
A creature of immortal life;
Death can touch naught but the mantle;
Be a hero in the strife.' A. G. P.

"'Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?" Job. xxxviii.

"Gentle reader, look and listen,
The above is but a lie;
For in God's word you'll find it written,
'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.'" D.

From Thomas W. Vaughn.

PUT IN BAY, OHIO, Oct. 30, 1866.

"Love not the world, or the things of the world, for they are vain"—Jesus.

I am sitting alone in my cabin, reflecting upon the above words, and their connections, the autumn winds howling fearfully without, the vessels in the harbor jerking upon their chains like a restive horse; the darkness of the night and nature seems to groan with the pain of expiring agonies.

Was it always so?

Mankind in general seem to act as if it was all they could wish it; or at least, do not expect any amendment save human progress. But will it always be so? No. God will send the "Restorer." Acts iii. 20, 21. My heart responds with thrilling joy, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

The world as it was, when God pronounced it very good. Gen. i. 31.

It is scarcely possible to give even an outline of the exceeding beauty of that bright Eden of delight, during nearly 2,000 years of its history. But after many years of investigation, I have made the following discovery, directed mainly by the plain testimony of God's prophets, aided by the science of geology and natural philosophy. First: This globe was something larger than at present, it not being so dense, its atmosphere being pure. Second: Its surface was smooth, without mountains or valleys; hence no violent or contrary currents of wind; no clouds, no storms of rain, or snow; but ever a clear sky. Third: The waters or seas were confined within the Arctic and Antartic circles, exhibiting two beautiful polar basins Fourth: The moon, always at the full, shed her light constantly as the sun retired behind the horizon, and with more powerful brilliancy than at present; she never waxed and waned. Her destruction was identical and similar to the earth's. Fifth: The earth moved on a line with the plane of the Ecliptic, there was no change of seasons; hence, one perpetual spring.

To fill in the details of this faint outline, with the fond hope of seeing it all restored and participating in its enjoyments, the curse removed, and death annulled, has yielded the most exquisite pleasure while enduring the persecutions, disappointments, bereavements, and perils of my eventful life.

The restoration is certain; but of my own share in its joys, I hope with trembling.

If any of those who are looking for the soon coming kingdom of our Lord, feel anxious to know the evidences upon which I have drawn the above sketch, I shall be happy to gratify them.

N. B. I totally ignore the conclusions that modern geologists have come to, in regard to the earth's history. The Bible testimony, and my own personal discoveries and researches, prove that their conclusions are fallacious and only lead to infidelty.

Truth is stronger than fiction. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Yours, in hope of the LIFE-GIVER soon to appear.

C. SWIFT, South Boston, Mass., writes:—Please send twenty-five of the sermons by Geo. Storrs, "Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints:"

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The XLth Congress assembled on the 4th inst, when the previous one expired. It has but one very important question left to it, and that is the impeachment of President Johnson This is looked for as certain by a portion of the politicians, while another deem it as certain the other way. Congress has, nevertheless, adopted the Military Bill against the veto of the President; if the latter refuses to carry out what Congress has decreed, the issues will be made up against him. The new Congress is still more Radical than its predecessor, and has some stronger minds to push the matter against the President to an extremity. The session can be permanent, provision to that effect having been made by the late body, so that at the worst the Executive can do little to thwart the dominant party.

The President also vetoed the bill entitled "The Tenure of Office Bill," but it also was passed by a two-third vote over him. The distinguishing feature of this law is the provision preventing the removal of a Cabinet officer without the consent of the Senate. The passage of the act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States will afford general satisfaction and prove a valuable boon to the country.

A great many bills were passed by the late Congress, but we believe we have noticed all of any particular note.

FOREIGN.

Maximilian has not, as was commonly expected, left Mexico simultaneously with the French troops, but he has gone northward to fight in person for his crown. This determination may increase his reputation for personal bravery, but it will hardly improve the prospects of the empire or his chances of escape.

It is reported that dispatches have been received here announcing that war has broken out in India.

Meeting in Plymouth, Me.

There will be a meeting in the Union Meeting House, in Plymouth, Me., commencing Saturday evening, March 16th, and hold over Sunday, and into the week, after as the Lord may direct. Br. Daniel Holt is expected to come, and others. We shall make provision, as far as we can, to accommodate all that come. Mr. Brown has offered his Hall, for the use of the meeting, free of charge. We shall have a table in the Hall, and those who can may bring such provisions as they can, and also some comforters, so that those can be accommodated who may have to sleep in the Hall. The poor will be provided for free of charge.

HENRY PERKINS.

We have received a communication from a party signing himself M. A. B., accompanied by a private note, also without name, in regard to some remarks on the meeting lately held in Middletown, Conn. It is unreasonable to ask for a hearing in such a case, or, indeed, in any case, by any one unknown to the Editor of a journal W M.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St, at 7 1-2 o'clock The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE EDITOR can now be had at this office by those who desire them. Price 30 cents; which includes the postage when sent by mail.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy" —more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

not one of the ten tribes is named by Ezra or Nehemiah in their histories. Remember, my brother, that "facts should have weight in the settlement of this question," not a mere "claim that the ten tribes were represented."

I hope you will soon get out of the mist of human speculation, and begin to look for the redemption of Israel. Fraternally,

The Originality of Christ's Sayings.

Let us pass on to a class of sayings in which the very greatness of the assumptions ascribed to our Saviour carry with them the strongest evidence of their genuineness. This class is so large, and so much of Christ's discourses, particularly in St. John's gospel, is marked by the assumption of superhuman authority, that it will be enough to mention a few instances by way of illustration. A remarkable feature of this teaching is the relation which he everywhere assumes to all mankind The salvation which he promises is not to a single race, but to the whole world. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved" St. John iii. 16, 17. The same universal relation to mankind generally had been claimed for Christ by John the Baptist in the title by which he pointed him out: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." John i. 29. It is continually asserted by our Lord in nearly all his discourses. "Whosever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst." John iv. 14. It is united with a claim to divine attributes, such as that of giving spiritual life, raising the dead, judging the world, in the fifth chapter of St. John. Who is this who says, "As the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." John v. 21. "The hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life: and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of judgment." And, if possible, yet more distinct in their assumption of divine power, and of this universal relation to all mankind, are the sayings related in the sixth chapter, in which Christ calls himself the bread of life, says that who ever believeth in him hath everlasting life, that he gives his flesh for the life of the world, and that he will raise up at the last day all who eat his flesh and drink his blood. We refer to these solemn words now, not for the purpose of commenting upon them, but merely to draw the reader's attention to the assumption which they imply. Nothing in any degree like it occurs in the teaching of the prophets. The novelty of the claims they advance is as remarkable as their transcendent greatness. It is not, however, part of our present argument to urge that he who could so speak must have been a divine being, but only to point out that the very extraordinary and transcendent nature of the assumptions contained in them impresses on us the conviction that he really made them, and that the wonderful words which we have quoted fell indeed from the lips of Jesus. What more sure way could there be of giving offence and estranging men from his teaching than by putting such claims into his mouth, unless he had really made them? It is going a step further to add, that he himself could not have made them unless they were true.

There are, again, some sayings of Christ of which it is not paradoxical to remark, that their very obscurity gives proof, or at least strong presumption, of their genuineness. When, for instance, he said to the Jews, in the early part of his ministry, on their asking for a sign of his authority, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up," he seems not to have intended that they should, at the time, understand the import of his words. That they were really spoken is clear, because they were brought against when he was accused before the council. But until his death and resurrection they must have been unintelligible, and even afterwards, with the help of St. John's interpretation, they have some remaining difficulty. Did our Lord speak only of his body, or did he mean also that the Jewish temple, and the dispensation connected with it, were to die with him, and be raised to a new life in the temple of the christian church, founded by his resurrection? It seems natural to suppose that his words contained this allusion; but they are adduced here as an instance of a saying which certainly fell from the lips of Jesus, as its very obscurity shows A similar example is that concerning the sign of the prophet Jonas; it was apparently not meant to be fully understood till after Christ's resurrection. To those who heard it, it must have been mysterious; its very obscurity marks its genuineness.

The twelfth chapter of St. Luke contains some very remarkable words of Christ, which probably struck his hearers as being of obscure and mysterious import. The time was probably towards the close of his ministry, perhaps a few months before his death. Some chapters earlier in the gospel (Luke ix. 51), it is related that "when the time was come that he should be received up, he steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." The words give the impression of an unusual earnestness and determination being visible in our Lord's countenance and demeanor, as of one who knew in what this last journey would end, who was sensible of a natural human shrinking from pain and death, but in whom the higher will, to finish his Father's work, predominated, yet so as to leave some mark of conflict and of effort, which his disciples observed. The same scene is described, apparently, in another of the gospels (Mark x. 32): "They were in the way, going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them; and they were amazed; and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him." The amazement and fear of the disciples must have been owing to something unusual in our Lord's deportment, probably that expression of set purpose and determination which St. Luke describes, and perhaps to some eagerness in his movements, as of one hastening forward, implied in the words, "He was going before them," with an interval between himself and his followers. For what was then in his own mind is made apparent from his immediately afterwards taking them, and foretelling his approaching shame, death and resurrection, with more particular details than he had used before. Now it was probably at a more advanced stage of this last journey that he used the remarkable words to which we allude They follow on some solemn warnings of the danger of not being ready at his coming, in the parables of the servant and steward, and the return of their lord from the wedding. And then he adds, "I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I? Would that it were already kindled; [for this seems the right punctuation and meaning: which is given differently in the authorized version:] but I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished."

It has doubtless come within the experience of many persons, who have had before them a work of great danger and suffering, but have resolved to go through with it at any cost, to feel, at times, an eager desire that the crisis should be past. To compare any such experience, in degree, with that feeling which the words of Christ express, would indeed betoken a most inadequate conception of the difference between the divine Saviour and his followers And an instinctive feeling of reverence seems to prescribe a caution, in all but those especially qualified for it, against indulgence too far in conjectures concerning what may have passed in our Lord's mind, at any solemn periods of his earthly life, or attempting to analyze too closely the feelings which his words express. They are related, however, for us to reflect upon them, and their purpose is lost unless, to some extent, we understand their import. Without trespassing irreverently on a sacred subject, we cannot doubt that an ardent and ever present zeal for God's glory urged Christ onwards to the fulfilment of his work, causing him to desire, almost with a holy impatience, that it might be completed; and that his human nature, subjected in filial obedience to his Father's will, and desiring above all things that it might be done, yet felt (more severely in proportion to its very perfection) the natural fear and shrinking which the prospect of his passion aroused, but which he never suffered to interfere with his entire devotion of purpose and of heart. Beyond this, we may decline to speculate upon what passed in his mind, and will but call the attention of the reader back to the purpose for which these remarks have been introduced. The whole scene, described as it is, in very few touches, no less than the solemn and remarkable words to which we have particularly referred, bears a stamp of reality and genuineness which no attentive reader can mistake.

We are aware that this may seem a poor result for so much comment, and one scarcely worthy of its sacred subject. Yet in days when assaults are made against the external and internal evidences of the christian faith, assaults often confident and presumptuous in proportion to their intrinsic weakness, it may not be useless to set the reader on a track which he may pursue for himself, without any aid but an attentive reading of holy scripture, namely, that of the proofs which its own pages afford of the genuineness of those narratives and discourses which they contain. We believe that the force of this proof is great and cogent, perhaps more cogent than any other branch of evidence. And, incidentally, it will not be without its us , if he is led into a more exact and complete conception of the scenes and discourses of the gospels; for, to gain a fuller and more adequate impression of the import of our Saviour's words and acts, is to be led further and further into the truth of the gospel which he revealed.—Sunday Magazine.

Consistencies.

1. Is it consistent to believe that man is undying, when God said if he transgressed he should surely die?

2. Is it consistent for a man to believe, when God says, "surely die," he meant, he should live forever?

3 Is it consistent for a man to believe that souls pass into heaven and hell, at death, and afterwards be called out and examined to see if they shall go back to the same?

4. Is it consistent for a man to pray, "Thy kingdom come," and at the same time believe that it is never coming, or that it has come?

5. Is it consistent for a man to say he loves God, whom he has not seen, and hate his brother, whom he has seen? "He that hateth his brother abideth in death"

6. Is it consistent to believe that the judgments which have been executed in the past, shall be re-inflicted in the future?

7. If God's wrath, or judgment, has come upon any people "to the uttermost" is it consistent to believe that more can be added to it?

8. If God has punished any people for their sins, is it consistent to believe in their future punishment for those sins?

9. "The wages of sin is death." Is it consistent to believe that the wages of sin is to die twice?

10. Is it consistent to believe that the death for sin is in the future, when the Bible says, "Sin entered the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men?"

Then comes the good news: life from death; for which sin is the cause. The good news does not save men from dying, but from death; and this salvation is conditional; for "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish," or remain in death, for which sin is the cause, but come out, by believing in God's Son, in the resurrection "at the last day." Amen. All who are now living, who reject the gospel, will go into future punishment, unless they repent and believe on the Son of God. So I think a man can believe in future punishment and be consistent, but not in future conscious punishment of Sodom and Dathan and hosts of others that might be named. They have been punished, and it will be eternal. So I think; for which I thank God.

Letters and Extracts.

From Lucretia B. Lamb.

ROOTSTOWN, OHIO, Jan., 9, 1867.

DEAR FRIENDS; Readers of the HERALD OF LIFE—how many wishes of a happy new year have greeted our ears since the morning of 1867; how many have been uttered in every family and throughout every community; and, indeed, the civilized world. There must be meaning in it; importance attached to it. It cannot be an unmeaning, frivolous expression. There must be personal responsibility in it also; and should we not inquire what it is? To me, it is in substance a promise that I will exert my influence, according to the talents bestowed, that this great end may be secured. Then having wished all a happy new year, what is to be done? Where lies the hidden magnet that will diffuse joy and electrify the universe with happiness that eye hath not seen nor ear heard? The angels sang of it o'er Bethlehem's plains. Jesus proclaimed it, and his disciples have continued the theme, that to be like Jesus was peace and joy that no man could take away. It is the fulness of joy which is to be realized in all its import at his right hand. This made Paul and Silas sing in prison; their feet in the stocks, their bodies smarting with the cruel scourge. Animated with the same spirit, the martyrs could embrace the stake, saying, Welcome cross of Christ; welcome everlasting life. If we would have this year pre-eminently a happy one, we must deny self and follow Christ. He pleased not himself; so should we seek not our own, but the things of others. His whole life was an unceasing effort for the recovery and salvation of a lost race. His requirements are, Do to others as I have done to you; and, inasmuch as ye have done it to the least, ye have done it to me. With these considerations I think it wise to review the past; and if we find our standard not sufficiently elevated, raise it higher. Rest not short of an entire conformity. Let Jesus be the Alpha and Omega of our being, when we lay down to rest and when we rise up, when we meet those dear to us in the family circle, let his image be visible in our countenances; when we walk by the way and mingle with neighbors, let the savor of Christ be so manifest that they will feel that we have been with, and learned of him; so shall we be happy and diffuse happiness through this year; and not only this year, but all coming time, reaching onward into the endless ages where faith is lost in sight, and hope in fruition.

Thus living, should our blessed Lord come this year, how completely would the smile of the Lord be the feast of the soul; and should he not come, the work to be done is still rich and glorious, and naught can separate us from his love: There will still be seed to be sown, suffering to be alleviated, and the sorrowing to be comforted. Should the coming of our Lord, whom we so earnestly desire to see, be delayed so that we will in our present state meet with many more new-years' greetings, with the fixed purpose that, Christ aiding us, all shall be for his glory. We behold among the admiring multitude, when Jesus comes, those we have fed and clothed, instructed and taught the way of life, the fruit of our labors and prayers, think we shall regret that Jesus gave us more time to work for him? Then may we gird ourselves for the work, and this year be one of enterprise and zeal commensurate with the magnitude of the object, and many find it through our efforts the year of their emancipation from sin's dominion into the liberty of the children of God. Your sister, wishing in all things to be Christlike.

SOUTH NORWALK, CONN, Feb. 24, 1867.

BR STORRS:—We have not received our HERALD for two weeks, viz: for Feb. 6, and 13. Will you please send them to us if you can, as we feel the loss? We prize them much, as we do love the truth; and being deprived of meeting with any of like faith, we would be very glad to get them. But best of all is the prospect of the glorious future. No death there; no parting with loved ones; no one heard to say, "I am sick." And the blessed Saviour to be in our midst; and his will done on earth as it is in heaven. And then to think that those who are not his "are dead, they shall not rise" to suffer but shall be "as though they had never been." From dust taken, and back to dust return; no life in them. O, what wisdom in God's plan; and so plain that all might see and know. God grant that his truth may shine more, brighter, and clearer, until the mist and fog that has for ages been thrown over his word may be driven away, and let it shine in its true light. And may we that profess to see the truth, and know his will, so live and walk that nothing can be found against us. O, for clean hearts and a close walk with our God. Each day of our lives to be spent in doing good. Father keep us on the rock, and feed us with bread from heaven, and let there be a well of water springing up unto eternal life. That we may be ready to live or die, or meet our LIFE-GIVER when he comes to claim all that are his, is our prayer.

From Wm. Steele.

FRANKFORT, WIS, Feb. 17. 1867.

BR. STORRS.—I may say to you that I am only about 26 miles from Lake City, Minn. So I felt a desire to see the brethren of a like precious faith, and went there lately. I did not see all the readers of the HERALD; but those whom I did see seemed to be intelligent and earnest. They are very desirous that some good preacher of Jesus as the "resurrection and the life" should be with them a while. I have no doubt but good would be accomplished in the name of Jesus; and the brethren would do according to promise for the preacher. Moses Hull [an apostate.—ED.] was there when I was. I heard him twice. I could not help feeling sorry for him. The truths concerning man's nature and destiny which I have learned seemed more precious to me than ever when contrasted with what is called "spiritualism." I think there is not so much danger of those who have embraced, heartily the truths of no life out of Christ, and the coming kingdom, being led away by what is called "spiritualism" as there is of others; but "let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Let us strive to obey the Bible injunctions; such as, "Beware; take heed; prove all things; hold fast that which is good," &c. Brother A. G. Hudson, I believe, has been the means of doing a good deal of good; as far as I could learn. He preaches occasionally, and would like to do it more, but business, which he is compelled to attend to for a living, forbids. I could write an epistle concerning my own experience and observation, but I shall have to defer it for the present. I will say, that I am striving so to live that I shall receive the crown of life and an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

NEW HAVEN, CONN, Feb. 4, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—On board of the steamer Continental I found on the centre table, a book placed there for the traveling community to read. On one of the blank leaves may be found written with pencil the following poetry in two distinct handwritings. I think they they are worth reading and send them to you for publication without comment:

"Tell me not in mournful numbers,
Life is but an empty dream,
For the soul is dead that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

"Life is real, life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal;
Dust thou art, to dust returnest,
Was not spoken of the soul.

"Then gird thine armor for the battle,
A creature of immortal life;
Death can touch naught but the mantle;
Be a hero in the strife.' A. G. P.

"'Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?" Job. xxxviii.

"Gentle reader, look and listen,
The above is but a lie;
For in God's word you'll find it written,
'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.'" D.

From Thomas W. Vaughn.

PUT IN BAY, OHIO, Oct. 30, 1866.

"Love not the world, or the things of the world, for they are vain"—Jesus.

I am sitting alone in my cabin, reflecting upon the above words, and their connections, the autumn winds howling fearfully without, the vessels in the harbor jerking upon their chains like a restive horse; the darkness of the night and nature seems to groan with the pain of expiring agonies.

Was it always so?

Mankind in general seem to act as if it was all they could wish it; or at least, do not exexpect any amendment save human progress. But will it always be so? No. God will send the "Restorer." Acts iii. 20, 21. My heart responds with thrilling joy, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

The world as it was, when God pronounced it very good. Gen. i. 31.

It is scarcely possible to give even an outline of the exceeding beauty of that bright Eden of delight, during nearly 2,000 years of its history. But after many years of investigation, I have made the following discovery, directed mainly by the plain testimony of God's prophets, aided by the science of geology and natural philosophy. First: This globe was something larger than at present, it not being so dense, its atmosphere being pure. Second: Its surface was smooth, without mountains or valleys; hence no violent or contrary currents of wind; no clouds, no storms of rain, or snow; but ever a clear sky. Third: The waters or seas were confined within the Arctic and Antartic circles, exhibiting two beautiful polar basins Fourth: The moon, always at the full, shed her light constantly as the sun retired behind the horizon, and with more powerful brilliancy than at present; she never waxed and waned. Her destruction was identical and similar to the earth's. Fifth: The earth moved on a line with the plane of the Ecliptic, there was no change of seasons; hence, one perpetual spring.

To fill in the details of this faint outline, with the fond hope of seeing it all restored and participating in its enjoyments, the curse removed, and death annulled, has yielded the most exquisite pleasure while enduring the persecutions, disappointments, bereavements, and perils of my eventful life.

The restoration is certain; but of my own share in its joys, I hope with trembling.

If any of those who are looking for the soon coming kingdom of our Lord, feel anxious to know the evidences upon which I have drawn the above sketch, I shall be happy to gratify them.

N. B. I totally ignore the conclusions that modern geologists have come to, in regard to the earth's history. The Bible testimony, and my own personal discoveries and researches, prove that their conclusions are fallacious and only lead to infidelty.

Truth is stronger than fiction. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Yours, in hope of the LIFE-GIVER soon to appear.

C. SWIFT, South Boston, Mass., writes:—Please send twenty-five of the sermons by Geo. Storrs, "Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints:"

Also twenty-five of the "Doom of the Ungodly; or, the wicked dead remain eternally under death's dominion."

Also twenty-five of the "Atonement, and the Gospel Hope," in one tract to Eld. J. Lewis (the old one-armed preacher) of Illinois. I inclose $3 for the tracts specified.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The XLth Congress assembled on the 4th inst, when the previous one expired. It has but one very important question left to it, and that is the impeachment of President Johnson. This is looked for as certain by a portion of the politicians, while another deem it as certain the other way. Congress has, nevertheless, adopted the Military Bill against the veto of the President; if the latter refuses to carry out what Congress has decreed, the issues will be made up against him. The new Congress is still more Radical than its predecessor, and has some stronger minds to push the matter against the President to an extremity. The session can be permanent, provision to that effect having been made by the late body, so that at the worst the Executive can do little to thwart the dominant party.

The President also vetoed the bill entitled "The Tenure of Office Bill," but it also was passed by a two-third vote over him. The distinguishing feature of this law is the provision preventing the removal of a Cabinet officer without the consent of the Senate. The passage of the act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States will afford general satisfaction and prove a valuable boon to the country.

A great many bills were passed by the late Congress, but we believe we have noticed all of any particular note.

FOREIGN.

Maximilian has not, as was commonly expected, left Mexico simultaneously with the French troops, but he has gone northward to fight in person for his crown. This determination may increase his reputation for personal bravery, but it will hardly improve the prospects of the empire or his chances of escape.

It is reported that dispatches have been received here announcing that war has broken out in India.

Meeting in Plymouth, Me.

There will be a meeting in the Union Meeting House, in Plymouth, Me., commencing Saturday evening, March 16th, and hold over Sunday, and into the week, after as the Lord may direct. Br. Daniel Holt is expected to come, and others. We shall make provision, as far as we can, to accommodate all that come. Mr. Brown has offered his Hall, for the use of the meeting, free of charge. We shall have a table in the Hall, and those who can may bring such provisions as they can, and also some comforters, so that those can be accommodated who may have to sleep in the Hall. The poor will be provided for free of charge.

HENRY PERKINS.

We have received a communication from a party signing himself M. A. B., accompanied by a private note, also without name, in regard to some remarks on the meeting lately held in Middletown, Conn. It is unreasonable to ask for a hearing in such a case, or, indeed, in any case, by any one unknown to the Editor of a journal W. M.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St, at 7 1-2 o'clock The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 3 cents.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE EDITOR can now be had at this office by those who desire them. Price 30 cents; which includes the postage when sent by mail.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

IN MEMORIAM.

BY MRS. L. E. H. BISHOP.

Written on the death of Mrs. HATTIE A. HART only daughter of Dea. and Mrs. Nelson Kingsbury, and niece of the writer.

The struggle is ended, thou art conqueror,
Consumption! fell destroyer of our race!
That form so wasted by thy withering touch,
Nature had moulded with exquisite grace.

The laboring breath is hushed—the heart is still,
Which with such kindly sympathy was fraught,
That e'en for human frailty, some excuse
To palliate the guilt, it ever sought.

Those glorious sloe-black eyes, whose depths disclosed
Such wealth as noble hearts alone can bring;
Cold and expressionless, are bearing now,
The impress of Death's fatal signet ring.

That hand I saw so gently when a bride,
Laid on his arm whose widowed heart and lone,
Had lured this sunbeam from its native skies,
To gladden and illuminate his own;

When pale and thin, how yearningly it smoothed
The silken curls on little Willie's brow;
Alas, 'tis sheltered by the coffin-lid,
And darling Willie rests beside her now.

"She is not dead, but sleepeth!" said that voice,
Whose tones once echoed round a rocky bed,
Till the stilled pulses woke within his breast,
Who in another and a milder sense, was dead!

"She is not dead,"—not perished—not destroyed—
Not passed away forever from our sight;
"Death shall (not) feed on" her, as on the dead
Who never more shall see life's glorious light.

"She is not dead but sleepeth," so we trust:
Albeit 'tis a quiet, dreamless sleep,
A calm repose, like that an infant takes,
Whose gentle mother doth the vigil keep.

E'en so, "He giveth his beloved sleep:"
But sleeping ones will surely wake again;
And they who're counted worthy thus to wake,
Can never die—and there shall be no pain!

"Not dead but sleepeth:" from this height sublime,
The key-stone of redemption's arch I see!
"I AM THE RESURRECTION AND THE LIFE,"
Opens the gate to immortality!

LOVE YOUR ENEMIES.

It is now many years since there lived in a small town of Germany a rich merchant whose name was Martin Strecker. His family consisted of a wife and three children, two sons and a daughter. The boys were both older than their sister, and the elder, whose name was Augustin, showed so much talent and so great a love for study, that, by the advice of his teachers, his father determined instead of making a merchant of him, as he had intended, to send him to the University. Here he was doing honor to himself and his father, when he was suddenly called home, and arrived there just in time to bury his father. The deceptions of a false friend had ruined him, and distress, for his family's sake, had ended his life.

The wife and children had now no one to look to but Augustin, and he, to support those he loved so dearly, must give up his darling studies and secure profitable work of some sort. Finding, after many trials, that there was no hope of recovering any part of his father's property, he tried one employment after another, and at last was obliged to engage as a copying clerk for the publishers and lawyers. It made him work night and day, but it gave them bread—that was nearly all, though.

One night when he was more tired than usual, he sat leaning his head on his hand and thinking over the troubles of the mother whom he loved so much, when all at once he jumped up and brought his father's account books, to try for the hundredth time, at least, to find the name of some one who owed him money to whom he could send a bill. He found none, however, and was sorrowfully putting them back again, when in a corner of the closet where they were kept, he spied a tin case he had never seen before. Opening it in haste, he found it filled with papers and parchments covered with writing; but the words were all English. This surprised him, for he knew his father had never had any business with English people; but just as he was beginning to look into them, his end of candle burned out. Vainly he searched all over for another—not a scrap was to be found; so he was obliged to grope his way to bed in the dark and wait until morning.

He was up early, and before his mother appeared had read every line, and knew well that he had found a rich inheritance, if things proved to be what they seemed. At breakfast he asked his mother whether she had ever heard that his father had a brother.

"Certainly, my son," said she; "his name was Dietrich. He was a wild, but not a vicious boy, and after quarrelling with his family, went to America. There he 'sowed his wild oats,' as it is called, and must have settled down into a respectable man, for the American Government gave him a large tract of land as a reward for his services to the country. This, with some other property, he left by his will to your father, which was sent to him in a tin case; but not thinking it worth the trouble and expense of looking after, he let the case lie round, and lately it has not been seen."

"I found it, mother, last night!" exclaimed Augustin, with delight. "I found it, and it contains the deed and gift and map of the land, as well as uncle's will, and a letter from the American President commending him as an able and excellent officer." Then he went on to explain to her what a rich inheritance it was for them all, and proposed going at once to see about it.

After making all necessary arrangements for those at home, he went to Bremen to find a ship. The Carolina was just ready to sail; her commander, Captain Steding, was an old, rough looking sailor, but a kind man and a good officer. Augustin found him at a small inn near the dock—for his family did not live in Bremen—taking his last meal before sailing, and asked to be taken as his passenger. The captain's small gray eyes examined him from head to foot; and the old gentleman seemed pleased with the result; for he readily agreed to take him, and said that all that would be necessary was to send his baggage at once on board and pay his passage money. But when he named the amount of that—$85—poor Augustin's countenance fell; and he frankly acknowledged that he could not go. He told the captain the whole story of his past life and his present object, and something like a tear stood in the good man's little gray eyes when he jumped up and said rather roughly that he couldn't make the passage any cheaper, for that was settled by the ship-owners; but he had a little business yet to see after, and if Augustin would stay where he was until he came back, he would see what could be done: "For," said he, "a good son won't be a bad part of a ship's load"—but Augustin must promise not to go away. The good old man did not say that he was going to the ship's owner to plead for the young stranger, but so it was.

Augustin promised, but not caring to stay in the inn, was walking up and down the street, when he heard shrieks of distress, and saw a young girl running and wringing her hands wildly. A child, of which she had charge, had fallen into the water, and no one being near who knew how to swim, all were afraid to jump in after her. Augustin was a fine swimmer, and throwing off his coat he plunged boldly into the water and brought out a most beautiful little girl, whom, all wet as he was, guided by the young nurse, he carried in his arms to her home. At the door, to his great surprise, he met Captain Steding; for the little one he had saved was the only child of the rich owner of the Carolina, Herr Stootsof. The gratitude of both father and mother was unbounded; the merchant wanted Augustin to stay with him, and offered to give him every advantage; but when he found that he would not consent, and that it was for him Captain Steding had been pleading, he not only offered him a free passage, but letters to rich merchants in New York, who would give him all the help he might want.

The delighted Captain Steding sailed that very afternoon, and in a short time Augustin had become the favorite of the whole ship's company. Among them was a young sailor, known only by the name of "Natty," who formed a very strong attachment for him. Natty had been brought up in America, and knew not only the customs and habits of the Indians, but spoke well the language of the Delawares, near whose towns Augustin's land was situated. When he heard why his young friend was going to America, he offered to teach him this language, and did so, thoroughly. But as they approached the land, finding Natty so distressed at parting with Augustin, and knowing how useful a companion he would be for him, Captain Steding proposed that they should remain together. The only thing to prevent this was Natty's written engagement to return with the ship; so the captain put an end to that trouble by giving him a release.

When they arrived, after delivering his letters and getting his claims to his uncle's land certified, he set out to visit it. By Natty's advice they hired a young Indian for a guide; he led them rapidly through the forest, until they arrived at Augustin's land, and they sat down to admire it and discuss their plans. Augustin was for building a log house at once and bringing out his mother; but Natty assured him that, unless he first made a treaty of friendship with the Indians, that would be impossible. Then the question was how to make this treaty, and they agreed to send Dacotah. Going up to the young Indian, they asked if he would take their message to his chief.

When he was gone, while the young men were talking, a fine buck came into sight, slowly walking and grazing, and, feeling hungry, Augustin raised his gun and fired. The creature fell, and as they were going up to it, they were surprised by the Indian cry of astonishment, "Ugh!" and a young Delaware, apparently about eighteen years of age, showed himself from behind the bushes. Seeing his nation Augustin at once made gestures of friendship, and breaking off a green twig advanced with it towards him. But the savage refused their friendship. Looking at them with hatred and ill-will in his eye, he called them snakes and dogs; declared that the buck was his, for he had followed it all day, and now they had stolen it. In vain they offered to leave him the animal; his anger grew greater at that; and repeating over and over again, "Wenonda's ears are shut! the pale faces are dogs and snakes!" he grasped his tomahawk and raised it to throw at them. The sight of their guns, however, checked him, and he disappeared behind the bushes. "Now," said Natty, "we must put a ball through that gentleman. An Indian never forgives; he thinks we have injured him, and we shall not be safe an hour while he lives."

"Never! Never!" cried Augustin; "He has no doubt suffered from the white traders you have often told me of, and judges us by them; but I will never consent to shed his blood, cost me what it may."

"Very well," said Natty, shortly. "You will pay for it—that's all; but come, let's have a mouthful of our deer." Fine pieces were soon cut and roasted at an immense fire they kindled for the purpose; and just as they had finished their meal, Dacotah returned and said that the chief of the Delawares was waiting for them. Great was his delight at the fine slices they had saved for him. "My brother is good!" said he. "He remembered his friend who was away. Dacotah is thankful."

On the way to visit the chief Natty tried hard to persuade Augustin to put an end to Wenonda; but he said, "No. 'Love your enemies: do good to them that hate you;' shed no blood! Those are the Lord's own words, Natty; and how can I ask his protection if I disobey his commands? No, no; I will win him by kindness; I will make him my friend yet; remember, 'Soft words turn away wrath.'"

ST. LUKE AND HIS GOSPEL.

BY EDWARD IRVING.

[Concluded.]

When several narratives have been written of the same events by men disconnected with each other, the mind has a high satisfaction in observing their coincidence in the main, and their small differences in the detail, while the color communicated by the character of each individual writer is also a great source of satisfaction. A discrepancy in the manner is as necessary to remove suspicion of false witness, as an agreement in the matter is to establish the fact. This satisfaction you will taste highly in perusing these four accounts that have come down to us out of the many that were in circulation. That the others are lost should give you no concern, as if any matter of fact or weight of evidence were thereby lost. Had Luke given us the slightest intimation that of those many treatises which he had seen or heard of some had borne against others, and that he had sided with the one party, then I will allow their loss were to be regretted, because we would have as it were only one side of the question, and therefore only a chance of the truth. But Luke doth not hint at any such disagreement, he doth not even disapprove any one of the many treatises he alludes to, he doth not even hint at their being imperfect, much less at their being incorrect or unconnected with each other.

It may be asked, What need to write another if he was satisfied with the many that existed? I answer, though many perfect accounts existed, it might not happen that any of them had been seen by Theophilus, for whose special instruction Luke proposes to write. None of them might be circulating in his neighborhood, they might be inelegant in their style, not suited to the taste of the people he wished to write for; or, without any of these special reason, he might like to employ his time and faculties in such a work; in short, a thousand things might induce him, though the treatises in existence were as perfect as any he could produce. The only evidence of their being inferior in any respect is the fact which hath been stated, that they could not hold their place, but sunk into disuse within the brief period of one century, and are not now to be found in any part of the world; while these four manuscripts were multiplied almost to infinity over all the church, and in every age of the church. This shows they were judged inferior by all the christians, not only of those times, but afterwards, so long as they remained unconsumed by the hand of time. This consideration is strengthened greatly by the circumstance that men like the first edition of a book, the first in circulation; and that nothing but great superiority in the second edition—for truly it was nothing but a second edition of the same matters—could have induced the people to lay aside that they were already possessed of and acquainted with, and trouble themselves either to make or procure a copy of the new one.

The other accounts, coming as well recommended as this one of Luke's, being taken down from eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, had as good claims to belief as his, and by being already in circulation and use had the advantage over it. Every one versant in these, and having grounded his faith on them, was a natural antagonist to anything opposite; and the probability is that it would never have made its way, or if it did, only partially, unless it came better recommended. There would have arisen adverse interests and controversy. But instead of this, without a word of controversy or a spark of opposition, Luke and his three companions make their way and establish themselves in a time inconceivably brief over the whole church. This at once proves their superiority, and the agreement of the existing narratives.

It were easy by many arguments to show how these books have added to their own intrinsic authority the weightiest sanction of human judgment, in having thus stood their ground, though they were late in coming on the field, and cast into the stream of entire oblivion all other works which stood along with them, having stood the test of all cavil and opposition, and descended unto us strengthened by a thousand testimonies, and crowned with a thousand triumphs. But it is time that we close a dicourse which we have been at pains to draw together from various sources of knowledge. But you know as well as I do that the design of the pulpit is not to display erudition, nor to communicate historical or antiquarian knowledge, but to draw the affections to God, from whom they have strayed, and to recommend Christ as the only way unto the Father. It avails not to be learned or powerful in the scriptures, if we do not submit our souls to their obedience. It is the faith in things revealed, and the preference of things unseen and eternal over things seen and temporal—it is the adoption of a righteous life, and the putting away of all wickedness, that is to stand us in any stead before the Judge of all. You may know all mysteries and make them plain, you may prophesy in the name of Christ, you may cast out devils in his name, you may speak with the tongue of angels, but if ye have not charity—that is, the love of God, the constraining love of Christ, and the love of your fellow-men—you are as a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. It is not the essence of the gospel you have heard now, nor anything from which you will derive much advantage, if you be already established in the truth. Humble, very humble has been our occupation to clear some obstructions out of the way, but if they impeded the progress of any one to the Saviour, we have not been occupied in vain. We know how the mind lurks behind subterfuges, and puts off inquiry. We know how the poison of infidel opinions takes root, and does not like to show itself, but works unseen against the truth of Christ. Perhaps we have done wrong in supposing there has been any such present in your minds; we have drawn a bow at a venture, and it may have missed. Then God may spare us to enter together into the holy place of the truth, whose battlements we have here been observing. Meanwhile, seek him while he is to be found, lest ye be cut off in your sins, and perish from the way. Turn unto him, and He will have mercy; and in Christ He will abundantly pardon.

REPLY TO AN OBJECTOR.

BY ELD. T. T. JENKS.

FLORIDA, MASS., Jan. 31, 1867.

DEAR BR. FITTS:—I received your friendly letter of Oct. 25th in due time. I should have responded to it before this, but my time has been otherwise occupied. I now briefly reply. My health is not as good as I would desire; have not great power of endurance. I thank the Lord, however, for the degree of health I do enjoy. I hope to improve it to his glory in the advancement of the truth. I judge from the tenor of your letter that you are suspicious that I have run off the gospel track. You say, "I hope you will not allow yourself to be drawn aside from the old paths by any of the isms of the day, and thus have your influence for good destroyed." I hope not. It has cost me a hard struggle to find them, obscured as they were by the creeds and traditions of men. Praise the Lord, I have found the "old paths" marked by the footprints of patriarchs, prophets, apostles, &c., consecrated by the blood of Jesus, "who hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." In short, I have found that the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, teaches that man is wholly mortal, with the death penalty resting upon him; and that the only way he can escape the utter loss of his being is to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vi. 23. And this life comes to the believer through Jesus Christ by a resurrection from the dead. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40. "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." John xi. 25.

You say "the worst ism I know of is spiritualism" I freely agree with you in this. But is it not the legitimate child of orthodoxy? Certainly, to my mind, it is the natural fruit of that doctrine which claims that a dead man knows more than all the living. If the soul entity, when liberated from its prison house of clay, has such enlarged capacities of knowledge and power as is claimed, why not mingle and communicate with the living? But you say again, "And kindred to it is the annihilation of the wicked." My dear sir, I beg to know wherein the relationship consists? There certainly can be no similarity of belief. Spiritualists believe that man has an immaterial essence, or soul entity, which outlives the body. Destructionists (for I prefer that name) do not. Spiritualists believe that dead men know more than when alive. Destructionists believe the inspired record, "The dead know not anything." Ecl. ix. 5. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Certainly the relationship cannot consist in this. But perhaps you would have the relationship consist in the idea you advanced, that both are the offspring of the devil. Now spiritualists say, "Thou shalt not surely die." But destructionists believe God meant what he said to Adam, "Thou shalt surely die;" also his declaration through the prophet, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Surely the relationship does not consist in both having one father. Spiritualists indorse the serpent's lie. Destructionists indorse God's truth. Now, my dear brother, I leave it with you and every candid mind to judge whether we or our opponents sustain the nearest relation to this "worst of isms." You further say, "These isms with others of modern date, have pretty much spent themselves, so far as I am acquainted. Most persons who were drawn into them have abandoned them or are disposed to be quiet. Like Br. Burnham, they have been brought to see their error. He once wrote in favor of the annihilation of the wicked; but has since published a refutation of those arguments, and is fully convinced that the belief in the annihilation of the wicked was wrong." So far as the doctrine of destruction is concerned, I think you labor under a great mistake in thinking it "pretty much spent." I know that mankind are slow to receive the truth. It was so in Christ's day; though he was the very embodiment of it. "I am the way, the truth and the life." John xiv. 6. Yet the great mass in Christ's day rejected both him and his teachings. So it has been from that day to this. But the truth is onward in its course. It must triumph. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away." The doctrine of destruction is evidently gaining a hold on the minds of thinking men. The Springfield weekly Republican, of Nov. 10th, under the caption, "An attempt to annihilate annihilation," says, "A tendency has recently manifested itself among the orthodox sects to seek relief from the doctrine of endless misery in that of the annihilatian of the wicked. . . . To meet this tendency, to substitute annihilation for the endless misery of the bulk of mankind, Prof. Bartlett, of the Chicago Theological Seminary, has published an elaborate argument which theologians, who desire to be posted in the present aspect of religious thought will not neglect to examine." About a year since, I was conversing with an able Congregational clergyman upon the doctrine in question. He frankly confessed that his own faith in the doctrine of eternal misery for the wicked was staggered. He further stated that at a conference of Congregational ministers, held at New York a few day previous, at which he was present, the question came up as to the propriety of getting up a work to counteract the influence of a work by E. H. Hudson, entitled, "Debt and Grace," which they said is exerting a great influence in the churches against the doctrine of man's inherent immortality. Upon the propriety of which a number of clergymen present objected as being a useless task, for he (Hudson) an able scholar and sound reasoner, had the better of them in the argument. This brother acknowledged that quite a number of clergymen with whom he was acquaintod were favorable to the doctrine of destruction; although they had not publicly declared their convictions. I might greatly enlarge upon this point. But this much plainly indicates the current of religious thought at the present time. Whatever may be said of the isms, of which you speak, this is far from being "pretty much spent." As to the case of Br. Burnham, I would say, as with you and myself, so with him, to his own Master he stands or falls. However, in view of his statement in the Worlds' Crisis on entering the Baptist denomination, that he had not changed his sentiments, and what you claim for him, that he is fully committed to orthodoxy, it stands him in hand to make a clean record. Otherwise his "influence for good may be destroyed" (if it be possible) outside the ranks of destructionists. Perhaps this matter is set right in his "Refutation of his former arguments," which, you say, he has published. Will you please inform me where the work can be found, as I can get no clew to its whereabouts. Let not the light be kept under a bushel. We destructionists "believe in proving all things, and holding fast to that which is good." You ask, "Is it not cruel to others and wicked, to try to weaken any of the motives God has presented to influence men to obedience?" Yes, my brother, it is; and far be it from me to do so. I would strengthen those motives by removing, so far as possible, the dishonor in which God's government is involved by the unscriptural doctrine of endless woe. A doctrine which, says the great and good John Foster (of Bap. notoriety) "is infinitely beyond the highest archangel's faculty to apprehend a thousandth part of the horror." Man comes into the world independent of his own will or choice, with a depraved nature tending to evil, surrounded by innumerable temptations to sin, and almost sure to go wrong. Yet for his delinquency must writhe in unutterable agony millions of ages for each moment of his sinful existence here, with still an eternity of increasing wretchedness before him. I ask, in all sincerity, does such a doctrine commend itself to the consciences of man or any principle of justice implanted in his breast? Dear brother, I honestly believe that millions have stumbled over this doctrine into Universalism, and what is far worse, infidelity and atheism. Says Foster (above alluded to) in a letter to J. White, on future punishment, after endeavoring to illustrate by various figures what eternity is, "But endless punishment! Hopeless misery, through a duration to which the terms above imagined will be absolutely nothing!" I acknowledge my inability (I would say it reverently) to admit this belief together with a belief in the Divine goodness—the belief that "God is love," that his "tender mercies are over all his works." Many good men in all denominations have come to the same conclusion. And now my dear brother, while you caution me (and I believe sincerely as a friend) to be careful not to weaken the motives to obedience, let me (and with becoming modesty I would do it, you being years my senior, for whom I have ever entertained great respect) urge upon you to carefully consider whether orthodoxy does not greatly exaggerate the justice of God, exerting a repelling influence upon the sinner, and thus is guilty of the very sin of "weakening the motives to obedience" laid to the charge of destructionists? You say, "I shall be pleased to assist you in regard to a field of labor, if you are disposed to build on the true foundation, by preaching the good old gospel of Jesus Christ." I thank you for your kind offer. I shall endeavor to build on that "foundation," God helping me, but "the field is the world," and wherever my lot is cast, in the providence of God, I hope to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." Hoping to meet you in the coming kingdom, where all will see eye to eye, I remain your affectionate brother in Christ.

PRINCIPLE AND POLICY.—The early christians exerted the greatest influence on the world, when they were most unpopular, most talked against, most persecuted. The less they accommodated themselves to the world, the more they shook the world. When they began to sacrifice principle to meet the world half-way, their power to regenerate and bless the world declined. Truth and righteousness are the christian's might. With these he is strong. When he changes these for craft or policy, he loses his power, and becomes weak as other men. Be honest, then, straightforward, bold. Tell the truth plainly. If people cannot bear the truth, shock them. Teach them to hear it by accustoming them to hear it. Expel intolerance by tormenting it. Be faithful; God will see to the rest.

HERETIC.—It is better to be called a heretic than to be one; and it is better to be persecuted for righteousness' sake, than to be left at ease in sin. We cannot have all good things on earth, we can only have some, but we may generally choose which we will have, and it behooves us to choose with prudence. We cannot have goodness, and the reputation of goodness; we cannot have orthodoxy, and the reputation of orthodoxy; we cannot have wisdom, and the reputation of wisdom. If we would be wise indeed, we must be content to be counted fools; if we would be good indeed, we must be counted unfit to live; and if we would be truly orthodox, we must be content to be called heretics, blasphemers, infidels. "It is hard," says Baxter, "that a man must either be a heretic, or be called one." But so he found it. And others will find it so in our own days, if they will make the experiment

Quite a flood prevails in the Wabash river, in Indiana and Illinois. The water is higher than it was ever known before. The tops of the houses are barely visible, and steamboats are plying over the prairies in all directions after freight. The river, usually a narrow stream, is at present ten miles wide.

Twenty years ago, there was but one Roman Catholic Archbishops in America, and he was at Baltimore. Now there twenty-two and more are to be made.

OUR LORD AT CAPERNAUM.

Our Lord's second circuit through Galilee, if not more extensive, was more public and formal than the first. He was now constantly attended by the twelve men whom he had chosen out of the general company of his followers, while certain women, Mary, Joanna, Susanna, and many others, some of them of good position, waited on him, ministering to him of their substance. The crowds that gathered around him wherever he went; the wonder, joy, and gratitude with which his miracles, particularly those recent ones of raising the dead, were hailed; the impression his discourses had created, and the steps that he had now obviously taken towards organizing a distinct body of disciples, fanned into an open flame the long smouldering fire of Pharisaic opposition. The Pharisees of Galilee may not at first have been as quick and deep in their resentment as were their brethren of Jerusalem, neither had they the same kind of instruments in their hands to employ against him. But their resentment grew as the profound discord between the whole teaching and life of Jesus and theirs more fully developed itself, and it was zealously fostered by a deputation that came down from the capital. It had already once and again broken out, as when they had charged him with being a Sabbath-breaker and a blasphemer. On these occasions Jesus had satisfied himself with rebuking on the spot the men by whom the charges had been preferred. But he had not yet broken with the Pharisees as a party, nor denounced them either privately to his disciples, or publicly to the multitude. But now, at the close of his second circuit through Galilee, after nearly a year's labor bestowed upon that province, the collision came, and the whole manner of his speech and action towards them was changed.

Early in the forenoon of one of his longest and most laborious days in Capernaum, there was brought to him one possessed with a devil, blind and dumb. Blindness and dumbness, whether springing from original organic defect or induced by disease, he had often cured. But here, underlying the blindness and dumbness, was the deeper spiritual malady of possession. Jesus cast the devil out, and the immediate effect of the dispossession was the recovery of the powers of speech and vision. There must have been something peculiar in the case. Perhaps it lay in this, that whereas dumbness in all ordinary cases springs either from congenital deafness or from some defect in the organs of speech, it was due here to neither of these causes. The man could hear as well as others, and once too had spoken as well as they. But from the time the devil entered he had been tongue-tied, had tried to speak but could not. A new and horrible kind of dumbness had come upon him, the closing of his lips by an inward constraint that he could not, struggle as he might, overcome. St. Luke speaks only of the dumbness, as if in it more than in the blindness lay the peculiarity of the case. St. Matthew records another instance of the ejection of a devil from one who was dumb, in which the same effect followed; the dumb speaking as soon as the devil was ejected. It is at least very remarkable that it was in connection with this class of cases only that the double result appeared, of an extraordinary commotion among the people and an extraordinary allegation put forward by the Pharisees.

The casting out of devils had been one of the earliest and most common of our Lord's miracles; always carefully distinguished by the Evangelists from the healing of ordinary diseases; awakening generally not more wonder, perhaps not so much, as some of the bodily cures. If the testimony of Josephus is to be credited, demoniac possession was common at this period, and exorcism by the Jews themselves not unfrequent. But when a dumb devil was cast out, and instantly the man began to speak, we are told that in one instance, "the multitudes marvelled, saying, It was never so seen in Israel;" and in another, "All the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the Son of David?" Here for the first time was an open expression of an incipient faith in Jesus as the Messiah, who was known and spoken of all over Judea as the Son of David. Whatever his words and actions might have implied, Jesus had never taken this title to himself—never claimed to be the Messiah; but now the people of themselves begin to think that it must be so—that by none other than he could works like these be done. The man whose character the Pharisees had been attempting to malign, whose influence with the people they had been doing their utmost to undermine, is not only hailed as a teacher sent from God, but as a prophet, nay, more than a prophet, the very Son of David. What is to be said and done? The facts of the case they do not, they cannot deny. That the man's dumbness had been nothing but a common dumbness, that there had been no evil spirit in him to be cast out of him, they do not venture to suggest. Those ingenious Scribes that have come down from Jerusalem can see but one way out of the difficulty. They do not hesitate to suggest it, nor their friends beside them to adopt it; and so they go about the crowd that is standing lost in wonder, saying contemptuously, "This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the Prince of the devils." A wine-bibber, a gluttonous man, a friend of publicans and sinners, a sabbath-breaker, a blasphemer, they had called him, but here is the last and vilest thing that calumny can say of him—that he is in league with Satan, and that it is to his connection with the devil, and to that alone, that he owes all his wisdom and his power. How does Jesus meet this calumny? How does he speak of and to the men who were guilty of forging and circulating it? They were busy among the crowd secretly propagating the slander, but they must not think that he was unconscious or careless of what they were saying of him. He calls them unto him, and they come. His accusers and he stand forth before the assembled multitude, fairly confronted. First, in the simplest, plainest manner, obviously for the sake of convincing any of the simple-minded people who might be ready to adopt this new solution of the secret of his power, he exposes its foolishness and injustice. There was, he assumes, a prince of the devils, who had a kingdom of his own, opposed to the kingdom of God. That kingdom of darkness might admit of much internal discord, but in one thing it was and must ever be united—in its antagonism to the kingdom of light. No more than any other kingdom, or city, or house, could it stand, were it, in that respect, divided against itself. Yet it was such kind of division that these Pharisees were attributing to it. Their own sons, their children or their disciples, undertook to cast out devils: was it by Beelzebub that they did it? If not, why cast the imputation of doing so upon him? None but a strong one could enter the house of the human spirit, as the devil was seen to enter it in these cases of possession. It must be a stronger than he who binds him, and casts him forth, and strips him of all his spoils. This was what they had just seen Jesus do; and if he by the mighty power of God had done so, then no doubt the kingdom was come unto them—come in his person, his teaching, his work. He—Jesus—stood now the visible head and representative of the kingdom, in the midst of them. To come to him was to enter that kingdom—to be with him was to be on the side of that kingdom; and such was its nature, such the claims he made, that there could be no neutrality, no middle ground to be occupied. He that was not with him was against him; he that gathered not with him was scattering abroad. Much there was in the spirit and conduct of many then before him whom the application of this test must bring in as guilty; but let them know that all manner of sin and blasphemy might be forgiven. In ignorance and unbelief they might speak against the Son of man, and yet not put themselves beyond the pale of mercy; but in presence of that divine spirit and power in which he spake and acted, not only to ignore it, but to misrepresent and malign it, as these Pharisees had done, was to enter upon a path of wilful, perverse resistance to the Spirit of God, which, if pursued, would land the men who took and followed it in a guilt for which there would be no forgiveness, neither here nor hereafter; no forgiveness, not because any kind or degree of guilt could exhaust the divine mercy or exceed its reach, but because the pursuers of such a path, sooner or later, would throw them into such a state of mind, and heart, and habit, that all chance or hope of their ever being disposed to or capable of fulfilling those conditions upon which alone mercy is or can be dispensed, would vanish away. The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, which never hath forgiveness, lies not in any single word or deed. Jesus, though not obscurely hinting that in the foul calumny that had been uttered there lay the elements of the unpardonable offence, does not distinctly say that the man before him never would or could be forgiven for uttering it. His words are words of warning rather than of judgment. A monstrous accusation had been made, one in which, if the men who made it persevered, they would be displaying thereby the very temper and spirit of such blasphemy against the Holy Ghost as never would be forgiven. It was out of an evil heart that the evil word had been spoken. It was by a corrupt tree that this corrupt fruit had been borne, and the heart would get worse, the tree more rotten, unless now made better. Such bitter words of ungodly malice and despite as the Pharisees had spoken, were but outward indices of the state of things within. Yet such good signs were words in general, that "Verily," said Jesus, "I say unto you.... By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

THE CHRISTIAN WARRIOR.

We come now to the armor itself which he wears. As described to us here, we observe that it consists of six pieces. A few words may be devoted to each of them. But first let us bear in mind how much reality and life is communicated to the description, when we recollect where St. Paul was when he wrote it. He was in the midst of the Prætorian Guards, the elite of the Roman army, a body of men raised far more conspicuously above the legions than our Guards, or even the French Imperial Guard, are above the regiments of the line. But not only was he in the midst of them, seeing them continually, and hearing daily all the sounds of barrack life, but he was fastened to one of these guardsmen while he dictated the letter, and he felt the chain on his wrist while he affixed his signature.

First in order of enumeration we have the BELT—"having your loins girt about with truth." By this we are not to understand a loose sword-belt, like that which our own officers wear, nor any ornamented girdle, but a very strong girding apparatus, made of leather, and covered over with metal plates, and fastened firmly round the loins. The appearance and use of it are best seen in ancient statues in the British Museum and elsewhere. It was the first part of the armor which the soldier would put on, and it was of essential use to him for the purposes of safety, and especially for the sake of standing firmly. It was to the Roman soldier exactly what Truth is to the soldier of Christ. Of Christ himself it is said in the prophecy that, "righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness (the word is truth in the Septuagint) the girdle of his reins."

The BREASTPLATE is next to be considered. It is described as the "breastplate of righteousness." A question might be raised here as to the meaning of the word "righteousness," whether it denotes the justification which belongs to the believer by virtue of his union with Christ, or refers to that rectitude of character which cannot be wanting in a true christian. I feel little doubt that the latter is the true meaning of St. Paul; and this, for two or three reasons. In the first place, justification would seem to belong more naturally to the "shield of faith," which is mentioned below: but, again, it appears to me that all the parts of defensive armor mentioned here designate graces of christian character. Moreover, in the shorter allegory of the first Thessalonian letter, the breastplate is described as made up of "faith and love," a perfect account of that principle in a christian which leads him to feel rightly, to think rightly, and to act rightly; but hardly such a definition as we should expect of a sinner's state of pardon and acceptance with God. But there is another reason which, to my mind, is almost decisive. St. Paul is here again using Greek words from the Old Testament (and it is important to observe this: for there is seldom any long passage in St. Paul's writings without some quotations from the Septuagint), and there we find it said of the Lord himself that "He put on righteousness as a breastplate, and an helmet of salvation on his head." The incongruity is obvious on the former interpretation: "It is God that justifieth."

This reference to Isaiah leads me to break the order of St. Paul's words, and to take "the helmet of salvation" next after the "breastplate of righteousness;" for they are coupled together in the same clause by the prophet from whom he quotes. Clearly we might have some difficulty here in assigning a precise meaning to the christian's helmet, were it not that the apostle himself comes to our assistance; for he says to the Thessalonians, that it is the "hope of salvation" which we are to take for a HELMET. I conceive then that we are to see here a representation of that cheerful and courageous hope, which is so important an element in the christian's warfare, and so bright an ornament and crowning point to all the other graces of his character.

The helmet is perhaps the brightest and most conspicuous part of a soldier's equipment; but there are other parts less showy, but not less essential. A soldier badly shod can never last well through a campaign. Many of us have a vivid remembrance of what we read in the newspapers concerning some passages of the Crimean war. St. Paul does not leave his description of the christian warrior incomplete in this respect. "Have your feet shod," he says "with the preparation (or, with the prompt, ready movement) of the gospel of peace." It is needless to enter here into any details concerning the military equipment of the feet, which enabled the Roman armies to march to the conquest of the world. But we should observe the holy irony with which St. Paul gives an unexpected turn to his mention of this part of the christian armor. The Roman soldiers were all on the alert to obey orders, to carry into all nations the miseries of war. The like alacrity ought to be shown by us in obedience to our Captain; and no slipshod indolence ought to make us slow in moving on this blessed errand of Peace.

The words in which the Authorized Version introduced the SHIELD are again (I conceive) inadequate, or at least obscure. "Above all," conveys the impression of "especially," as if the apostle was now about to mention what is most important. And so perhaps the "shield of faith" is the most important of all the defences of the christian soldier. But I think the Greek words mean simply "over all," "on the outside of all." The great Roman shield referred to here was very different from the small bucklers which were used in some kinds of ancient warfare. Sculptured representations of it may be seen on Trojan's Column. It covered and protected the whole body; and whatever weak points there might be in other parts of the armor, this supplied their deficiencies, as faith comes to the rescue when all other graces are failing. True faith is invulnerable. It is competent to quench even the "fiery arrows" of the evil one. Here the image of the christian conflict assumes all the animation of a siege, and one of the best illustrations I am acquainted with of the words used by the apostle is in the history of one of the sieges of Rhodes, during which arrows charged with combustible materials were sent against the ships, and the very expression used here by St. Paul is used by Diodorus Siculus in describing the defences used for quenching the fire.

HUMILITY BECOMETH THE SERVANT.

"When," said the psalmist-king, "I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that thou visitest him?"

David was still tending his father's flocks when he was anointed as the future king of Israel. His heart was early inclined to the praise of God, and not unfavorable to the development of his deeply meditative mind was the occupation of shepherd. We may reasonably fancy him alone with his herds, wrapt in silent contemplation of the beauty of surrounding nature, and entranced by its mighty eloquence as with a thousand tongues it proclaimed the Creator's power and glory. While yet a shepherd he had become a psalmist and was famous for his musical skill, having been brought to the court of Saul to soothe the melancholy of the king with sweet music from the harp. But the path which led from the humble occupation of shepherd to the exalted position of king was not strewn with myrtle and roses, for at almost every step the youthful instrument of God was beset with vexations, disappointments, conspiracies, and oppositions, so sore and determined that Jehovah's care and assistance alone preserved him from falling by the way. His reign was long, victorious and prosperous. Under it the military power of the state attained its highest pitch, and a corresponding development of prosperity was reached in other respects. He made Jerusalem his capital and the seat of the national worship, which he organized and perfected, entered into friendly relations with Phœnicia, and defeated the Syrians, the Edomites, the Moabites, the Philistines, and the Ammorites; and the country, thus enlarged, extended from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean, and from Damascus to the Arabian Gulf. But notwithstanding the great things, which, as a servant of God, he had been enabled to accomplish; standing at the very pinnacle of earthly greatness, and conscious of divine approbation, when he fixed his attention upon the heavens, the moon, and the stars, and contemplated the wondrous skill which their arrangement and movements display, and looked through them up to the eternal being who made and sustains them in their ceaseless and unerring rounds, his pride was crushed, and overwhelmed by a sense of his own weakness and unimportance, he wondered, "what is man" that God is even "mindful of him." What a precious degree of humility is this for those followers of Jesus to frequently experience who are called to the proclamation of unpopular gospel truth in these last days of carelessness even in religious circles, respecting those things that pertain to Christ and his kingdom. Times when the church panders to the pride of its people, and when men exalted to high positions among their fellow christians are so apt to be puffed up with feelings of their own worthiness, forgetting that in true meekness there is exaltation, and that in weakness there is strength.

We may sometimes fancy, perhaps, that we are doing much for the spread of truth, and thus overrate our services; but if we look around us we may be both surprised and delighted to find that others have, in a quiet and unostentatious manner, accomplished far more than we can hope to have done.

There are few more ample proofs of the goodness of God than that he condescends to exalt, upon certain conditions, our poor fallen race to a state in which we will become everlasting glorifiers of him, and participants in the heavenly kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, soon to be established. What a being! Think of the heavens, all the work of his hands; the moon, always the wonder of our wisest men; the earth, with its eight thousand miles of diameter; the planet Herschel, eighty times larger than the earth; Saturn, nearly a thousand times larger; Jupiter, twelve hundred times greater; the sun, more than thirteen hundred thousand times greater; the stars, so remote in space that if a model of the universe were constructed on a scale of ten millions of miles to an inch (so that the sun should become the size of a shot, .08 of an inch in diameter, and the earth's orbit be 19 inches in diameter), the nearest of the fixed ones would still be thirty miles distant, according to the most reliable astronomical calculations. Think that it is God who formed and launched all these, perfected the wondrous harmony of their motion, and maintains them by his incomprehensible power; and then not so much wonder, "what is man that" God is "mindful of him," as marvel at the towering manifestation of his mercy in extending unto us the offer of forgiveness and salvation, and the unbounded love of our Lord Jesus, who completed the redemption scheme and showed unto us the "path of life."

Surely, God is nothing but love, and will not, in any of his dealings with man, manifest more of aught but that than is consistent with his eternal purposes respecting a finally clean universe. What room is there on the part of any of his servants for pride or boasting? To the extent that they are indulged, they usurp the place of that blessed spirit which God is waiting to pour upon us in the full proportion of our faithfulness. If we lack any needful spiritual gift the fault is ours, for God, in his infinite love, desires to bestow it. What a Master! Rewarding even before the work is done; but when finished, what transcendent delights await his people. Who would not with all diligence serve such a being? Who would not strive to attain unto that condition in which we may with confidence call him Father? He it is who stoops to help us and bears with our infirmities. Blessed, forever blessed, be his holy name, and Jesus Christ, his dearly beloved.

L. C. T.

BY CHARLES C. TUCK.

"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth, let him understand)." Matt. xxiv. 15.

The great apostle to the gentiles, Paul, in his instructions to Timothy, as recorded in the second epistle, uses the following words, which will be found in the second chapter, fifteenth verse: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." That is good instruction, truly; and if the last clause of that verse had always been strictly carried out, how much jargon and confusion might have been avoided. "Rightly dividing the word of truth;" that is, dividing it in such a way that each part may have its proper place, and thus accomplish the purpose for which it was designed. When I read the history of the church, from the days when Paul uttered those words to Timothy, down to the present time, and see the confusion and distraction that have been created and are still created, in consequence of not "rightly dividing the word of truth," the thought often comes to me that many have reason to be "ashamed" of their uncomely, miserable workmanship. But, to say nothing about the awful havoc that has been made in former ages, in consequence of this unskilful handling of the word of truth, let us come down to the present age, and without pausing a moment amidst the ruin and devastation which lie in the track of the expositors of the nominal church, we will look at some of the expositions and applications of scripture, which are made by Adventists.

A little more than two years ago, I wrote out a few of my thoughts concerning the "great tribulation" predicted by Christ, as recorded Matt. xxiv., in which I showed that the application of that tribulation to the Papal persecution was not according to the scriptures. In speaking of that tribulation I also referred to the "abomination of desolation," those two subjects being inseparably connected. My present object will be plainly to show what is meant by the term "abomination of desolation," who, or what it was that was desolated; and also show the fallacy of some of the arguments used by those who hold to the idea that the term "abomination of desolation" refers to the "idolatrous worship of the catholic church."

In speaking of the "abomination of desolation," Christ referred to Daniel the prophet, where the term is first used. Let us examine Daniel's prophecy, and see what is meant by it. In chapter viii. is recorded Daniel's vision of the ram and the he-goat. It begins with the second verse and ends with the twelfth verse. In verses 9 to 12, we find an account of a "little horn," which "waxed exceeding great, even to the host of heaven;" and "magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down." Please notice that the work of this little horn was to "magnify himself even to (or against, as the margin reads) the prince of the host," and also to "take away the daily sacrifice," and "cast down" the "sanctuary."

Now let us look at the explanation of this vision, as given by the angel Gabriel to Daniel. Gabriel was commanded (verse 16) to make Daniel "understand the vision;" therefore he proceeded to explain it to him. He told Daniel that the ram with two horns represented Medea and Persia; that the he-goat represented Grecia; and the great horn between his eyes represented the first king (or Alexander the Great); that the four other horns which rose up when that horn was broken, represented four kingdoms which should come up after Alexander's death. He then proceeds to explain to Daniel what that "little horn" represented, whose work is described in verses 9, 10, 11, and 12. In the vision, that little horn "waxed great, even to (or against) the host of heaven," and "magnified himself even to (or against) the prince of the host," took away the daily sacrifice, and cast down the sanctuary. In the angel's explanation, he calls that "little horn" a "king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," and then explains what is meant by the "little horn" waxing great against the host of heaven, magnifying himself against the prince of the host, &c. What does he say that work represented? He simply gives us to understand that it represented destroying "the mighty and the holy people," and standing up "against the prince of princes." (See the angel's explanation.) Mark, he does not explain what is meant by taking away the daily sacrifice and casting down the sanctuary, for the very good reason that that was a literal statement of itself, and therefore needed no explanation; but the terms "host of heaven" and "prince of the host," are figurative expressions, and therefore he was under the necessity of telling Daniel what they meant.

But, notwithstanding Daniel had heard the vision explained, it appears that he did not understand it yet, for he says (verse 27) "and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." Therefore Gabriel must yet explain it more clearly, or he will not cause Daniel to "understand the vision," as he was commanded. Thus chapter viii ends. In chapter ix. there is recorded a prayer of Daniel, concerning Jerusalem, which was then lying desolate, after having been destroyed by the Babylonians. While he was praying the angel Gabriel came to him again and said to him, "O, Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to show thee; for thou art greatly beloved; therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision." What vision? The vision of the ram and the he-goat, in chapter viii. of course, for that is the very one which Daniel did not understand, and all the one which Gabriel was commanded to make him understand. Therefore, Gabrie will now give Daniel an understanding of the vision in plain language which cannot be misunderstood. He commences by telling Daniel that "Seventy weeks are determined" upon the Jews and Jerusalem, "to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy." Then, after speaking (verse 25) about the restoration of Jerusalem, which was then desolate, and the building of her streets and walls, he says, (verse 26) "And after three score and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself; and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary," &c. Verse 27. "And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation," &c. Who was that prince that destroyed the city of Jerusalem, and the sanctuary, or temple? It was Titus, with the Roman army. This same prince was to "cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease." Josephus says that the Jewish daily sacrifice failed on account of the scarcity of men to offer it, which was occasioned by Titus' army besieging the city.

Thus we see that the little horn of the eighth chapter (verses 9 to 12), which was to take away the daily sacrifice, cast down the sanctuary, &c., and which the angel in his explanation (verse 23) calls "a king of fierce countenance," and who was to "stand up against the Prince of princes," was no other than the Roman kingdom, acting through its representatives. The Messiah was put to death by Roman soldiers, and the city and sanctuary were destroyed, and the daily sacrifice taken away by the same agents. It is also said that this prince (Titus) should "confirm the covenant with many for one week." What covenant? Some say it was the new covenant; but I should think that was a very inappropriate time and place to confirm the new covenant—in that prophetic week, and while Titus was besieging the city of Jerusalem. Remember: the same prince whose people were to destroy the city and the sanctuary was also to "confirm the covenant with many for one week." We have found that prince was Titus. Therefore Titus, as a representative of the Roman kingdom, was the one who confirmed "the covenant." But let us look and see what we are to understand by "confirming the covenant."

Daniel, in uttering his prayer, recorded in the ninth chapter, confesses his sin and the sin of his people, and recognizes the desolate condition in which Jerusalem then was as a judgment from God for their wickedness. In the eleventh verse he says: "Yea, all Israel have transgressed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice; therefore THE CURSE is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned against him. (Verse 12) And he hath confirmed his words, which he spake against us, and against our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil; for under the whole heaven hath not been done as hath been done upon Jerusalem." By this we see that "confirming" God's words was simply bringing the evil upon Jerusalem which he had threatened in case they disobeyed him. That desolate condition in which Jerusalem then was, brought on by the Babylonians, was a part of the curse of which Daniel spake, which was writtten in the law of Moses. Turn to Deut. xxviii. and read the covenant which was made with the children of Israel—blessings to come upon them if they obeyed the Lord, and curses if they disobeyed him. In verses 36, 37, is foretold the Babylonish captivity; in the 49th verse, and onward, including the 57th, is foretold the conquest of Judea and the final destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, under that prince, Titus. Moses, in speaking of the Roman nation, which was to destroy the nationality of the Jews, calls it "a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance." The angel, in explaining to Daniel who the "little horn" was, who was to take away the daily sacrifice and cast down the sanctuary, calls it a "king (or kingdom) of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences." Both Moses and Daniel give the same description of the Roman nation. Let any one read the prediction concerning the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, as it is written in Deut. xxviii. from the 49th to the 57th verse, inclusive, and then read the history of the siege and destruction of that city, as it was written by Josephus, an eye-witness, and they will see that that covenant was most fearfully confirmed.

Thus we have succeded—by the help of the angel Gabriel—in identifying the little horn of Daniel viii. as the Roman nation, which destroyed the city of Jerusalem, caused the Jewish sacrifices to cease, cast down the sanctuary, or temple (see Josephus), and "confirmed the covenant with many," by fearfully fulfilling the very terms of that covenant which Moses said would come upon them if they did not obey the Lord.

I will now, in as few words as possible, identify the abomination of desolation, so far as Daniel is concerned. In chapter ix. 27, the angel, in speaking of the confirming of the covenant and causing of the sacrifice to cease, by that prince (Titus), says, "and for the overspreading of ABOMINATIONS he (Titus) shall make it DESOLATE." But some of those who acknowledge that the prince spoken of was Titus, will not acknowledge that the above quotation refers to the "abomination of desolation," because it is put in the plural number (abominations). If anything more to the point is wanted to prove that that does refer to the abomination of desolation, I will say that that verse is rendered thus in the Douay translation: "And he shall confirm the covenant with many, in one week; and in the half of the week the victim and the sacrifice shall fail; and there shall be in the temple the ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION; and the desolation shall continue even to the consummation, and to the end." The historian says, "the whole Roman army entered the sacred precincts (the temple), and pitched their standards among the smoking ruins."

I have fully identified the little horn, which took away the daily sacrifice, and cast down the sanctuary, as the Roman power; and as the same power takes away the daily sacrifice and places the abomination that maketh desolate, I can see no way to avoid the conclusion that the term "abomination of desolation" means the Roman army under Titus.

In my next I shall examine Matthew, Mark and Luke, in relation to this subject, and also notice some of the objections which are offered to this view of the subject, by those who claim that the abomination of desolation was the papal power.

Bangor, Me., Feb. 2, 1867.

LA FAYETTE NORRIS, Campton, Ia., writes:—"This vicinty has been a place of mourning lately. One of my little scholars, a girl 8 years old, has been taken to her grave. Her parents' grief was great; but I soon saw it was not the sorrow that leadeth to repentance. They employed a talented preacher to deliver the funeral discourse; and a really christian discourse it was, too. It pointed to Christ as the only comfort. But he fairly spoiled the discourse by his "going to heaven at death;" and that, too, after he had dwelt upon the glorious resurrection. My heart saddens at the awful condition of the religious world.

The people of Italy refuse to acquiesce in the arrangment of their government, in allotting to the Catholic power a large share of the church property seized by the state. But the politicians and crafty clergy are likely to prove too strong for the simple people, so that they may be defeated in their desire to overthrow and crush out the hated prelacy that has so long ground them down by its tyranny. But the cause of religious tolerance and freedom is progressing notwithstanding.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, MARCH 13, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

OUR PAPER, for a few weeks past, has been printed very much to our dissatisfaction. We have felt ashamed to send it to our subscribers, so blurred and badly printed. We are striving to get it done better. If there is no other remedy, we shall be compelled to get a printing press of our own; for we abominate botch work in printing. To have a paper containing such valuable matter as the HERALD OF LIFE, printed as if it was of no more value than the trash that floats in the streets is insufferable. We cannot endure it, and we are determined we will not. Either the work shall be done better, or we will cease printing at all. We seem to have had "printers' devils," as they call some in their offices, on our presswork. We wish Judge HALSTED could annihilate these as thoroughly as he has "orthodox devils."

KIND SYMPATHY.—We have again to thank our kind friends who have sent us so many letters of sympathy in our late bereavement. If these letters were not private, we would give them place in the HERALD, as the largest part of each contains words suitable to all christians under trials. We do not, however, feel at liberty to give them to the public; but we cannot but pray that the consolation these letters were designed to communicate to us, may be realized by all the writers in their afflictions: and we do not forget that very many who have not written us have borne us up by their prayers before the Lord. For all such, also, we earnestly pray our heavenly Father, that He would grant them such mercies and divine aid as they have sought for us. It comforts our heart to know so many earnest prayers have been offered for us and our surviving household; and it is a comfort to us to pray for blessings on them in return. We pray you all, continue to pray for us; and may our covenant God and Redeemer abundantly bless you all, and bring you to his eternal kingdom and glory by our LIFE-GIVER, Jesus Christ.

"The Theology of the Bible."

We cannot forbear calling attention again to this work of the ex-Chancellor of New Jersey, O. S. HALSTED. We thank and praise the Lord for such a work. Its thorough expose of the corruptions of the word of God by interested ecclesiastics, for long centuries past, is refreshing to one who sighs to know the truth. We find our own labors to remove those corruptions were but a brushing away the dust, while Judge HALSTED's purge out the inside rottenness which has so long disfigured the beautiful temple of truth—the words of the living God. We welcome our new co-laborer to the honor God has conferred on him, and almost feel like good old Simeon when he said, "Lord now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," &c; for God has raised up a light, which neither orthodoxy or heterodoxy will ever be able to extinguish. Let this work go into every corner of the earth, till bigotry, superstition, will-worship, and devil-worship, are alike driven back into the darkness from whence they have been imported by superstitious and ignorant teachers of theology. May our gracious and covenant God hasten the day when His word shall shine on the world in all its orginal glory, and the demons of the night be driven from the earth.

No one who is not steeped in bigotry and superstition can study this work of Judge HALSTED's without profit. If they are not profited by an honest examination of it, we have no hope that the light of truth will ever overcome the darkness they love. "Men love darkness rather than light" when "their deeds are evil;" and the attempt to sustain and spread a theology which has so long dishonored God and blighted His fair heritage by its inherent immortality doctrine, dragging along with it its blasphemous notions of a future life of temporary or eternal torments, we trust will "die the death" which Heaven seems to have decreed. We hail with joy "the day-spring from on high" that "hath visited us." May the LORD prosper it in its course.

P. S.—Since writing the foregoing we have received a copy of the above work from Judge HALSTED, with his promised INDEX prefixed, which is a valuable help to the study of the book, and especially for reference. Accompanying the work, he sent us the copy of a letter from one of our most highly esteemed friends, long known among us, and who was formerly an elder in the Presbyterian church. We are permitted to give the letter in part, but not to use the writer's name. We thank Judge HALSTED for the copy of his work just sent us, and also for the privilege of giving so much of the letter referred to. It is as follows:—

"—— ——, MARCH, 4, 1867.

"DEAR SIR:—In the last two numbers of the HERALD OF LIFE, a weekly paper published in New York, by the Rev. GEORGE STORRS, I have seen some notices of a new Theological Work, of which you are the Author; entitled 'THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE; Itself the teacher and its own interpreter.'

"My attention was first drawn to the question of man's inherent immortality, about ten years ago, by some of Archbishop WHATELY's writings, in which to my great astonishment, I found the Archbishop was a believer in the non-immortality of man, and that literal death was the penalty of sin. Being at the time an exceeding orthodox Presbyterian, I was quite shocked to find Bishop WHATELY holding such views, inasmuch as he had been for many years, in my estimation, one of the greatest and best of men living. I took the first opportunity of speaking to my Pastor, Rev. Doctor R., on the subject. The doctor is one of the most prominent men in the Presbyterian church, having been not very long before Moderator of the General Assembly: a fine scholar, and a gentleman of varied and extensive learning, and of universally acknowledged excellence and piety. No man in the city of ——, where I then resided, stood higher in the estimation of christians of all denominations than he did.

"To my very great surprise, when I expressed my regret to him, that Bishop WHATELY should have avowed himself a believer in such heterodox views, the Dr. informed me that he himself had been for several years fully convinced of their truth, and that they were plainly taught in the Bible. [He] also informed me that Rev. Doctor P., one of the very best of men, and the oldest and most highly esteemed Episcopal Minister in the city, was also a full believer in the same doctrine.

"The result was, that I was led to investigate, and eventually became convinced of their truth' myself. During the last three or four years I have been devoting my attention, chiefly, to the subject of the Resurrection, and especially to the question as to whether the wicked are to have a resurrection, or quickening into life again. It is only lately that I have come to the full persuasion that they are not; that when they die, they remain forever under the dominion of death. Having none but an animal nature, 'The spirit which raised Christ from the dead' not dwelling in them, there is no power by which they can be raised. The subject is one of great interest and importance, and I am greatly pleased to learn that you have devoted your learning and talents to its elucidation, and given the results to the public. I enclose three dollars, for which please send a copy to

"To JUDGE HALSTED,
Newark, N. J."

Such testimony, from such a quarter, is cheering: our only regret is, that the "two Rev. Doctors," spoken of, should have failed to show themselves more publicly on the side of what they believe to be the truth. We hope they will gain strength to come out boldly on the Lord's side against a corrupted and corrupting theology, which has so long been baptized "Orthodox," when, in fact, it is the greatest of all heresies.

JUDGE HALSTED refers us to p. 626–7 of his work for an interesting account of the manner in which a clergyman of New Orleans was brought to the truth on the same subject. It is as follows:

The Rev. Dr. Theodore Clapp, in his autobiography, says, he had preached, at New Orleans, a zealous sermon for endless punishment: that after the sermon, Judge W., who, says he, was an eminent scholar, and had studied for the ministry, but relinquished his purpose because he could not find the doctrine of endless punishment and kindred dogmas, asked him to make out a list of texts in the Hebrew and Greek on which he relied for the doctrine. The doctor then gives a detailed account of his studies in search of texts to give to the Judge. That he began with the Old Testament in the Hebrew; and prosecuted his study during that and the succeeding year; and yet that he was unable to find therein so much as an allusion to any suffering after death. That in the dictionary of the Hebrew language he could not discern a word signifying hell, or a place of punishment in a future state. That he could not find a single text, in any form of phraseology, which holds out threats of retribution beyond the grave. That to his utter astonishment it turned out that Orthodox critics of the greatest celebrity were perfectly familiar with these facts. That he was compelled to confess to the Judge that he could not produce any Hebrew text. But that still he was sanguine that the New Testament would furnish what he had sought for without success in Moses and the prophets. That he prosecuted his study of the Greek of the New Testament eight years. That the result was, that he could not name a portion of it, from the first verse in Matt. to the last of Rev., which, fairly interpreted, affirms that a part of mankind will be eternally miserable. The doctor concludes by saying, It is an important, most instructive fact, that he was brought into his present state of mind (the repudiation of the dogma) by the Bible only,—a state of mind running counter to all the prejudices of his early life, of parental precept, of school, Theological Seminary, and professional caste. [How could the doctor expect to find any such teaching in the New Testament after he discovered that it was not found either in Moses or in any other of the prophets? And if he could have found any passage in his Greek of the New Testament which might seem to teach what he could not find on so fundamental a matter in Moses and the prophets, would he have accepted it as genuine?]

"There is no Death"—"There is no God."

Reader, do you think a minister of Christ would take either of the above as the motto for his sermon? If he should, isolated, would you not think him an idiot or an atheist? Yet a professed minister, not long since, did actually take the words, "There is no death," Prov. xii. 28, to be used as a leader in proof of "the immortality of the soul!" So far as he is reported, he neither hinted at the connection of his text, or quoted another text of scripture in support of inherent immortality. The text entire reads thus—"In the way of righteousness is life; and in the pathway thereof there is no death."

This is a clear statement how life may be secured and death avoided; and clearly asserts, out of the pathway of righteousness there is death. The wise man adds, in the next chapter, "Wickedness overthroweth the sinner".... "the lamp of the wicked shall be put out".... "whoso despiseth the word shall be destroyed." Verses 6, 9, 13. The minister speaks as follows:

"My proposition is simply this—A belief in another life is a natural property of the soul."....Now God made that soul, and he is responsible for all its parts. I have dissected all my faculties, and I find no craving which cannot be satisfied. If I would eat, there is food somewhere which I may get; and if I would drink, there is water somewhere for me to find. If I would love, there is something to love; if I would acquire, there is something to get. Every natural longing has its satisfaction. It would have been cruel in God to have given me an unquenchable thirst, or to have planted a racking pain in my body which nothing could allay.

"It is utterly impossible that a being who has been proved a thousand times over and over again, to be supremely good, should have put into the human soul the irrepressible instinct of immortality, and then denied it the object of its craving."

The fallacy of this statement has been exposed so often, we do not see how any intelligent man could urge it again. The "craving" God has implanted in us for immortality proves no more than it is attainable; which we maintain is the fact. But it does not follow, because a man craves an object, that he has it, or ever will possess it. Thousands have an irrepressible craving for objects they can never obtain. The Creator designed men for a higher life than that with which he endowed them at creation, and that life was attainable; but the Lord saw fit, in his wisdom, to make the bestowment of it to depend on a moral development in harmony with himself. Without such development a higher life would be no blessing, but a positive curse. While, then, the craving for immortality should operate as a stimulus to well doing, that the proffered life might be secured, Jehovah doubly fortified man against yielding to temptation by announcing to him the fact, death would certainly follow transgression. Thus desire for immortality, and dread of coming short of it, were both made to bear on man to aid him in the pursuit of the glorious boon.

This minister talks about as sensibly as the laborer who is emyloyed to do an important work, with the promise of the bestowment of a large estate when the work is completed, and he says, "I have an irrepressible craving for that estate, therefore it is mine, for my employer would have been cruel to have given me this thrist and then not allay it: so whether I do the work or not the estate is mine."

What would our theologian think of such reasoning! Would he not conclude the craving must fail of being allayed unless the work was done? And would he not think the laborer was very illogical in his conclusions? Immortality is attainable; but it will be bestowed on none but such as "seek for" it "by a patient continuance in well doing;" Rom. ii. 7. And bestowed only at the resurrection, "at the last day." See 1 Corth. xv. 17, 18, 51–54; and John vi. 40.

National Judgments.

Geo. Duffield, in his "Fast Day" sermon, Philadelphia, after enumerating our various national sins, notices the national judgments down to 1850, to the death of President Taylor. He then adds:

"Since that period the judgment trumpets have been blowing, and the vials of God's wrath have been pouring out upon us as a nation almost continually. Blighted harvests, destructive storms at sea, tremendous tornadoes on land, the inexplicable financial panic of 1857, droughts unprecedented as to extent and continuance, and signs in the heavens, which rarely occur without equally remarkable events on earth; and now, last and worst of all, the great political panic; all these things show us this day, that when 'the judgments of the Lord are abroad in the land, the inhabitants thereof (should) learn righteousness.' Having lost faith in God, to so great an extent, no wonder that we have lost faith in each other, both financially and politically."

Surely one would think Mr. Duffield and others might see, in his statements, "signs there is no mistaking," that the end of this age is near: for the Saviour said, "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars;" ["in the heavens;"] "and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven" (ruling powers) "shall be shaken; and then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." Can any unbiased mind fail to see that we are in a proximate state to the last mentioned event? Let us then look up for deliverance, and not trust in man, but make JEHOVAH our hope.

Debates with Eld. Preble.

In an article lately published in the Crisis, headed "Discussion in Salem, Mass.," Elder Preble writes as follows:—

In regard to the results of my late discussion with Elder Rufus Wendell, in Salem, it becomes me to speak with modesty, as I am one of the parties interested, and I may be somewhat blinded with self-conceit. I may, however, with safety give a few facts, and leave others to judge for themselves in relation to this matter. The following extract from my opening speech, will give some idea of how the debate commenced.

The question was this:—"Does the Bible teach that the wicked dead will not be made alive?" In my first speech I said: "It will be seen on a moment's reflection, that my brother Wendell is really in the negative of this question, as the word 'not' is an adverb of negation. Webster says the word not is a 'word that expresses negation, denial, or refusal.' If my brother had condescended to a suggestion of mine in a note of the 19th inst., asking his consent to have the word not dropped from the question, then I should have been in the Affirmative properly. But he considered it would very much embarrass him to do this, and so wrote me a most singular letter of four pages, refusing me any such thing. And now, since he chooses to call what is really the negative, the affirmative, and thus go ahead in the debate, I do not object, but accommodate my brother agreeably to his choice. But is not this negative form of the question rather suggestive? God and truth are always in the affirmative. But the devil and error always in the negative. And thus the old 'liar' began his negative doctrine when he said: 'Ye shall not surely die.' And we ask, Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen, that you pay particular attention to this point during this debate, and see if my opponent's position does not drive him to deny the word of God."

REPLY TO THE FOREGOING.

1. It will be seen that Eld. P. assumed at the outset of his work in the Salem debate that the view of the non-revival of dead sinners would drive his opponent "to deny the word of God." The more than questionable taste of such a style of address, in an introductory speech, we pass without comment. The remark is noticed at all because its author ventures to assert a necessary connection between hostility to Holy Writ and a negative attitude in controversial matters pertaining to theology. Supremely childish as is this position viewed in any possible light, it becomes in the mouth of Eld. P. positively ridiculous the moment its self-stultifying character is perceived. The reader will presently understand the bearing of this remark.

2. As Eld. P. alludes to what he styles "a most singular letter" as coming from us, we propose to gratify any curiosity that may be felt concerning said letter, by giving it entire. But first we wish definitely to exhibit the facts bearing upon the matter of fixing the form of question which was debated at Alton and in this city. These facts were given to the audience by the writer during the late discussion, and they completely spiked the Elder's gun. It is hard to believe that he could have forgotten this when he decided to favor the Crisis with a glimpse of his "opening speech," but a very treacherous memory is the only possible plea whereby he can acquit himself of superlative folly in giving the matter publicity outside of this community. Let the facts speak for themselves. Here they are:

The discussion at Alton, in the autumn of 1865, was, as is well known, invited by the undersigned. But it is less generally known that the point of being on the affirmative or on the negative was left by us wholly with Eld. Preble. An extract from our letter to him, dated July 7, 1865, will nail this thing effectually. We said: "I am not in the least tenacious as [to] the form of the question, provided that it clearly state the matter to be investigated and make the issue a Bible one. If I am to be on the affirmative, this would suit me: Does the Bible teach that the wicked dead will not be made alive? If you are to affirm, it would be the same with the word not omitted. I leave it with you to suggest any other form, and also to say whether I shall affirm or deny. I have a preference, but prefer that you shall have your choice."

From the above it will be seen that, before Eld. P. and we debated at all, with him solely rested the question whether he would affirm or deny. We purposely refrained from hinting our preference, such was our desire that he should not have it to say that any advantage had been conceded to us by himself. The Elder, in his Crisis report, speaks of having 'sought to "have the word not dropped from the question." This it will be seen is what he could originally have accomplished by merely saying the word. But how did the matter strike him then? In his letter of July 10, 1865, he said: "I accept also the form of the question as you propose, viz:—'Does the Bible teach that the wicked dead will not be made alive?' I consider it your place 'to be on the affirmative' of this question. Mine to 'deny.' Therefore, I have no desire to change the order from that of your own suggestion as first appears in your letter."

Behold now the utterly ridiculous posture in which he places himself in the Crisis "Extract" from his "opening speech." He calls "this negative form of the question rather suggestive," and, lest it might not suggest to the audience the precise thing he desired, he makes haste to declare that "the devil and error are always in the negative." Which being interpreted and applied amounts to this, that Thomas M. Preble, in 1865, when offered the privilege of choosing "God and truth," deliberately assumed the "negative" in debate, and thus took sides with "the devil and error!" If the "old liar" rejoiced in Bro. P.'s folly then, he must now feel a special satisfaction in seeing the latter publish his shame through the columns of a religious paper.

We are now prepared to reproduce our "most singular letter of four pages," and we venture the prediction that the "most singular" feature of the affair is that our opponent should ever have cared to refer to the letter at all. On the Tuesday evening preceding the Salem debate the mail brought us the following note from Eld. Preble:

"DOVER, N. H., Nov. 19, 1866.

"Dear Bro. Wendell:—I have had but little time to reflect upon our contemplated discussion until to-day. And in thinking the matter over, I am of the opinion that you will agree with me that the 'Affirmative' of the question belongs to me this time, as I had the 'Negative' last fall at Alton. If, therefore, you will consent to have the little word 'not' dropped from the question, then it will give me the Affirmative. You will oblige me if you will do so. Hope to hear from you by return mail. Yours truly,

T. M. PREBLE."

To this letter we replied "by return mail" as follows:

SALEM, Nov. 21, 1866.

Dear Bro. Preble:—Availing myself of the first opportunity to reply to your note of the 19th, which I found awaiting my return home last evening, I have to inform you that I cannot at all consent to your proposed change of the form of question that has been agreed upon between us—that has been given to the public now for two weeks in both the Crisis and HERALD OF LIFE—that has been repeatedly advertised from my pulpit here in Salem—and that has been the basis of whatever planning I have done with reference to the mode of conducting the discussion. The interest felt in the debate by many persons (some of whom are coming from New Hampshire to attend it) arises from the fact that your position will be such as to require you to answer, if you can, the arguments from God's Word for the non-revival of the wicked dead. By no concurrence of mine shall they at this, eleventh hour, be invited to an entertainment other than the one they have been so long looking for! and which has been so much talked about. If a little sober reflection on your part causes you to shrink from your self-assigned task, I do not at all wonder at it, for I do believe in my heart that your discomfiture in argument will stand out glaringly from the commencement of our work to its close. But if you are not yourself sufficiently apprehensive of this result to decline the discussion altogether, you will have to go ahead according to contract. It would not be right for me, as I view duty in the matter, to relieve you from any embarrassment in which you may find yourself. If you are willing to stand by your agreement and leave the question precisely as it was at Alton, then I am unwilling that the precious cause of Life only in Christ shall, by any ill-judged courtesy of mine, be deprived of the advantage that will acure from your failure to unsettle the foundations on which that cause rests. If, on the other hand, you shall deem it necessary to decline assuming the negative in our debate, then I am quite desirous that the Life view shall have, throughout the Advent ranks, the full benefit of your refusal. The report came to me from the last Alton Bay Camp-meeting that you were eager for the discussion, and that you had expressed fears that Bro. Wendell would back out. I never dreamed of doing that, and I earnestly hope that you will not give any of your friends cause to suspect that their champion was piping to keep his own courage up. To me the proposal of your present letter certainly has a suspicious look. But I may misconstrue its purport.

Originally (i. e., before we debated last year) you were offered the choice of sides, and in your letter to me of July 10, 1865, your said, "I consider it your place 'to be on the affirmative' of this question. Mine to 'deny.' Therefore I have no desire to change the order from that of your own suggestion as first appears in your letter." In your letter of June 21, 1866, you intimated your willingness "to meet (me) 'again in debate on the question we controverted last fall,' as soon," etc., etc. (The italics are mine.) On the 26th of Oct. you wrote me to give you the form of the question "we abated at Alton," which I did in my reply of Nov. 6, wherein I stated that I would prepare notices of our debate for the Crisis and HERALD OF LIFE. In the light of these facts and dates, together with the circumstances named in the beginning of this note, I am confident that public sentiment will sustain me in refusing assent to your plan of placing me in the Negative. My decision on this point you will please regard as final.

If I hear nothing from you in reply to this, I shall conclude that (the Lord permitting)

you will be with us next Tuesday, and that our discussion will commence that evening. I shall look for you in the train that leaves Lawrence for Salem at 12:40. Do not risk the evening train, as that could not get you hear seasonably. If you determine (which I hope you will not) that you must have the Affirmative or nothing, then I want you to notify me instanter, so that I may give notice accordingly, i. e., that the debate has fallen through. I shall rely upon your promptness in this matter.

After our approaching debate is closed, I shall be most happy to arrange with you for one or more discussions of the wicked dead question in which you shall have the Affirmative. Both in Boston and Springfield I think we would be welcome. And, besides, we can in due time have another here in Salem, if the idea pleases you.

I write in great haste; you will therefore make due allowance for anything in my letter that more deliberation would improve. With love to Mrs. Preble, I remain, truly yours,

RUFUS WENDELL.

The reader has now the means of judging from our "most singular letter" whether or not we were justified in refusing at the eleventh hour to let Eld. P. abandon the form of question which he had agreed to discuss. We now call on him to set this matter right through the Crisis. Since he asserts that "God and truth are always in the affirmative," let him frankly tell the public how it came to pass that he compelled an advocate of Life only in Christ to occupy so honorable a position. Bro. P.! dare you do the fair and manly thing in this matter? If so, delay not to forward a revised report to your chosen organ at "the hub." Your compliance with this suggestion shall not pass unchronicled in these columns. More anon.

R. W.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—Common honesty demands that both the Crisis and the Voice of the West should copy, in full, the foregoing statements in their columns, as they have allowed Eld. P. to utter what we regard as slander. Will these papers show their regard for honesty and fair dealing? We shall see.

That one Article.

With thankful hearts we read Br. S. W. Bishop's letter to Sr. B. Matthewson. Certainly she will receive it kindly, for there is not an unkind, overbearing expression in it, but compacted argument instead. How plain, how Godlike the plan of salvation is made to look.

There is another subject I wish Br. Bishop might feel moved to write on; that is the mortal resurrection. We have had it preached to us recently. But when I compare this man-made theory (the father of it yet lives, and confesses to be its parent) with the scripture testimony concerning the re-living of dead men, there is much confusion manifested. Says man, "Saint and sinner shall be raised mortal, the saints changed to immortality after their resurrection." Says Paul, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." Speaking of the degrees of glory in the sun, and other heavenly bodies, he says, "So also is the resurrection of the dead." "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. IT IS SOWN A NATURAL BODY, IT IS RAISED A SPIRITUAL BODY." Thus we see that as the stars differ in glory, so will the resurrected body differ from the natural body. A poor, emaciated body, long racked with pain, pinched by poverty, distressed with disease, old, bowed and infirm, went down into death; but when God speaks, it shall spring to life eternal. Not with the wasted mortal frame of mortality, but it shall "awake in thy likeness," O Lord. These mortal resurrectionists claim that we are "begotten by the incorruptible seed" in this life, but are not born till the resurrection. So much of truth is refreshing; but how inconsistent the idea of the "incorruptible seed" producing corruptible fruit. Being begotten through the first man (of the earth, earthy) brought us to death; but being begotten through faith in "the last Adam" (who was made a quickening spirit) will bring us into life. The life that Christ gives is superior to the life we get through Adam. And the idea that saints are to be brought out of the grave with the corruptible natures they carried there with them, is dishonoring to the Redeemer that brings them from the grave, and it also contradicts his word.

This limping argument is said to be powerful in overthrowing the doctrine of the non-resurrection of wicked men. Yes, and in its power it overthrows the resurrection of all men. Such arguments have driven me where I am, and the opposers of truth can do much for truth by preaching such inconsistencies. There are thinking minds in the land; minds that look on both sides of such questions. And just as sure as such minds commence the investigation of truth, the blessed doctrine of FUTURE LIFE THROUGH CHRIST ALONE is embraced by them.

Brethren, be not discouraged. Our enemies say, "The non-resurrection doctrine is dying out." I know it is spreading! Five intelligent persons have come into the truth in our midst within a few months. God can work and none can hinder. Several others are interested and searching the scriptures to see "if these things be so."

The secret of success in laboring for the Lord is being possessed by his spirit. It teaches how to speak, when and where, and with it we "speak the truth in love." May grace be given to all saints sufficient for these times. Amen.

The Situation of the Pope.

STATEMENT BY CARDINAL CULLEN.

At a levee held last fall, by Cardinal Cullen, at Holycross College, near Dublin, when his newly created Eminence had taken his seat on the throne, a number of congratulatory addresses were presented to him. In reply to the one from the Irish Roman clergy he said:

"Ireland has done a great deal for the Holy See, but her exertions are now required more than ever. The spirit of revolution is triumphant in almost every country in Europe, and has destroyed the power of the Catholic States. There is no friendly Power now capable of supporting the head of the Church, or of maintaining the doctrines and practices of our holy religion. Austria was the last able to do so, and Austria is now overthrown. The condition, then, of the Pope is this, that his territory has been reduced to a very small spot in Italy. Nearly everything has been taken from him. The Emperor of the French very kindly held the hands of the Pope while his enemies were stripping him of the patrimony of St. Peter; and now, having reduced the Holy Father to a state of temporal weakness, and all the Catholic Powers willing to assist him being either revolutionized or weakened, the Emperor of the French abandons Rome and leaves the people to the mercy of the Italian revolutionists, to the mercy of men who avow the deadliest hatred to the Pope and to religion, and who will not hesitate, on the first opportunity, notwithstanding the convention, to seize upon Rome and destroy the Pope's authority. It is very probable that within six months this crisis may come, and His Holiness be reduced to such a condition that he may not know where to turn his steps. In these circumstances our attachment to him must be increased. His Holiness knows—and we all know—that he is suffering for the cause of truth; and we all know, moreover, that he will never sacrifice that cause—that he will never sacrifice principle; but will, as he has done, maintain truth, and justice, and equity to the last. We must endeavor to assist our Holy Father by our prayers, to do everything to uphold him in his position. He is now a very old man. We should pray that God may look with mercy upon the Holy See, and preserve it from the dangers which are impending over it."

HIS HOLINESS'S OWN STATEMENT.

In addressing the officers of the retiring French troops, the Pope is reported to have remarked:

"I am here, my dear children, to bid you farewell. Your flag left France with the mission to uphold the rights of the Holy See. To-day it is going back. I wish that it may be received with the same feeling that it left. I am informed that all Catholic hearts are moved; they tremble in thinking of the difficulties in which they see the Vicar of our Lord Jesus Christ, the head of the Catholic Church. There must be no illusion—the revolution will come here. It is proclaimed, it has been said, and it has been repeated. An Italian in high position has said that Italy was constituted, but not complete. Italy would be undone if there still remained here a corner of the land where order, justice and tranquillity reigned. They desire to display their flag from the Capitol. You know, as well as I, that the Tarpeian rock is not far distant. But I fear the revolution. What am I to do? What am I to say? I have no resources. Yet I am tranquil, for the mightiest power, God, gives me strength and constancy."

Some would say, that the Pope, as a temporal sovereign, is "played out."

Be Ready.

"Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

Thus saith our Lord and Master in Matthew xxv. 13. A true christian is to bethink himself every day, with all solemnity, of the day of judgment, that he may have a clear account with his God and Lord—for the Son of man shall come as a thief in the night—and that he may be able to stand, cleansed in the blood of Christ, before the face of him whose eyes are as a flame of fire. Our times, God's fearful judgments, the growing prevalence of unrighteousness, the general self-security and indifference towards God's word, the powerful errors that are abroad, the darkening of moral sensibility, the unbelief and outrageous sinfulness of men; all these testify to us that the day of judgment is at hand. It, therefore, pertains to us, with entire and particular earnestness, to prepare ourselves, that we may be able to stand when the Lord cometh to judge the quick and the dead. The day of judgment may come any day, and it is for us to expect it every day.

Let each one, therefore, who values his salvation, set his house in order. With all earnestness and holy conscientiousness will I do it, for I have much to answer for, and much to break off from, and much to reform, and much to repent in sackcloth and ashes. Do thou also the same, and as many as read this paper. To many it is a jest to have anything said about a day of judgment. Many take the matter lightly, and think that day yet far away. Few there be who daily judge themselves, that they may not fall into the hands of the living God. Woe to them that deny the Lord Jesus! Woe to them that do violence and deal unrighteously! Threefold woe to them that are called to open their mouths, and to give testimony to the truth, and keep silent as dumb dogs!

Let each one see to it that he keep his conscience clear and unblamable, through the blood of Christ, as an innocent and unspotted lamb, with reference to that day. Praise and glory be to God that he is a righteous Judge! To him we entrust everything. He will judge righteously, who never yet has mistaken or overlooked anything in his government. But it is our duty and allotment, in hearty and holy earnestness, to repent, to strengthen ourselves in the faith, and to walk in righteousness, as God's word directs, however it may cross or displease stubborn and cowering hearts.

Should it, however, please the Lord yet for a little time to delay his second coming, let no one thereby deceive himself, as though everything were secure, and that great peace and the golden age are about to dawn. The Lord has merely permitted us to survive the beginning of his judgment, and something very different is ordained to come. Wars and pestilences will not cease, one people shall continue to rise against another, and subjects to revolt gainst their rulers; for fidelity and faith are flickering to extinction. But, let come what may, the day of redemption cometh also; and let each one who is set to be true to his Saviour, joyfully lift up his head. Amen.—Selected.

Reflections.

How hard it is to believe in God! not hard to reason and talk about the christian religion; to defend it intellectually, to show that it is suited to the wants of men, that all who practice its precepts are good and kind: no, this is not hard. But how exceedingly difficult to believe that Jesus is ever near to shield and protect, to believe that his care and goodness will be with us in all dangers, and all trials; to realize as a present fact that in life or death, joy or sorrow, He is our Guardian, Guide, Protector, and Friend; to feel as we pass along each day that our Saviour is with us, and commit ourselves to his care. How hard to commit ourselves to God, and feel assured that all things are well! Doubts throng the mind. Who is Christ? Have we seen him? May not the Bible be an error? What if there be no Christ? What if we have no hope, and all the future is darkness? Who can dispel doubts? Who can believe? O Lord! Help thou mine unbelief? Let me believe in Thee! Let my dark understanding be illumined by thy divine light! Let me trust in Christ, not as far distant, but as present with me! Let me cast all my care upon him, knowing that he careth for all. Renew my half skeptic soul with thy presence. O, let me remember, in faith, that Christ died for sinners, and with my whole heart trust in his mercy. Aid me in thought to look to Jesus as the only hope of a future life; to cast my burdens on him, and feel, that though undeserving the least of God's mercies, I yet may come and cast all my cares upon him. Grant me a faith that works by love and purifies the heart. Separate my sins far from me, that Christ may dwell in my heart. Let me not be ashamed of Jesus. In me there is no hope. "Nothing but sin have I to give." It seems not possible that God can regard me. But Christ died for the ungodly. Therein is the only hope. O God, help thou mine unbelief. Aid me to believe in Christ, and trust him, "Though my sins have like a mountain risen." Thy mercy alone can save. O, let me seek thy mercy. Cast me not quite away, though ignorant, sinful, and faithless; for such has Christ died. Grant me thy favor, which is better than life.

A HELPLESS ONE.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. C. L. Percival.

MASSAWIPPI, C. E.

BR. STORRS:—I have not been so long silent because I have not felt as earnest and as lively an interest in you and your work as ever. On the contrary, I feel an ever increasing interest in the rich and sublime subject to which your pen and time are devoted; and daily do I thank God that I have learned at this late day, the real truth that makes my Bible almost a new book and shows the whole plan of human redemption in a light that a child can comprehend it all. Thank God for the "simplicity of the gospel."

I do thank you, my brother, and all my brethren in the Lord who help to bear the burdens for the HERALD; yet I was afraid you could not continue it to me, and I did hope to be able to pay for it, but I cannot yet. The Lord keeps me still in a strait place, but he knows what is best for me. I will not murmur. He gives me plenty to do and I try to do it faithfully, and trust that in the end I shall find my labor has not been in vain.

The church have made a determined effort of late to prevent the preaching of "this stuff" in the meeting house any more; but, though neither I nor any of the "little flock" made any resistance, either by word or deed, I yet continue to occupy the desk half the time, as before; and I shall continue to do so as long as the Lord wants me to. Truth must and will triumph. The Lord bless and support you in all your labor, is my prayer.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

MODE, ILLS., Feb. 20, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—This is truly a time that tries one's soul (life, or self) for we are here shut in on every side by reason of the incessant rains, in consequence of which the creeks are overflowing the banks, so that we have had no mail for four weeks up to the present; when, by an extra trip, we got our papers and letters, and glad indeed were we to get the dear HERALD OF LIFE once more; for we always find something within the folding wings of the little angel (messenger) that cheers our drooping spirits, and gladdens our hearts as we journey along through this state of trial and judgment.

We have not heard from Br. Walter for some five weeks. Hope he is well and doing well. We are doing all we can in the cause; but we want more books and tracts, as we are entirely out. We would like some of the Essential Baptism, feeling confident the arguments contained therein are the truth, and cannot be set aside. Some make water the way into Christ, instead of the Spirit.

But we bear with one another and love as brethren. But one thing to our mind is certain, that water baptism doesn't belong to the christian dispensation. Could all see it, sectarianism would get a mighty fall. But it is all the cry with a certain party, "Fire, fire;" and with another, "Water, water," &c.

From La Fayette Norris.

CAMPTON, IOWA, Mar. 2, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—We have had a great revival of religion among the orthodox in this place; mostly among the Baptists. Nearly everybody in the neighborhood has joined. They have come forward to the "mourners' bench" by scores. I have been led to rejoice that so many of my neighbors have made a profession of faith in Christ, for I have no doubt that many of them will try to lead christian lives. My prayer is, that they may not become bigoted and superstitious. But I confess that I feel more lonely than ever, and I sigh for christian fellowship. Feeling this desire for christian fellowship, I went to Manchester, last Sunday, to meet with the Advent believers. I enjoyed myself very well, but, alas, I had got a little too far ahead for most of them. The preacher tried to prove the resurrection of the wicked dead from the passage which says, "You shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," &c. As liberty was given I replied in a short speech, which I can but believe will result in good. The preacher merely quoted the text that speaks of "a better resurrection" in reply. I thought it not best to make any more remarks; but, after meeting, I showed this brother, and a number of others, that there were two resurrections spoken of in the text; one was sundry resurrections in the past, when they were only raised to mortal life; and the better resurrection was the one when this mortal shall put on immortality, &c. I feel certain that brother will never use that text again as proof of the resurrection of the wicked. The best of feeling prevailed.

I hope all the brethren of the HERALD OF LIFE will pray for me, that I may not injure the cause of truth. Br. Robb and I have agreed to meet with all the brethren at Manchester who feel disposed to meet with us on the day of the passover, and observe the anniversary of the sufferings of our Lord and Master. And I desire that you would publish the time in the next paper. Br. Robb thinks he can get Br. Chandler to meet with us. Br. Robb is in the front ranks of truth. I felt while conversing with him that I had met with at least one kindred spirit. T. W. Smith and wife have joined the Mormons. He was turned out of the Advent church that he tried to conciliate. Your exposure was what did it. Truly the way of the transgressor is hard.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We understand the true time of the passover is at the full moon next after the spring equinox, and is therefore April 18th, this year.

We think if "T. W. Smith" has a spark of honesty left, he should return the horse we bought for him. That animal was not stupid enough to become a Mormon, if its rider was.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

The plan adopted finally for the reconstruction of the late insurgent States, radically as it affects the political and social prejudices of the Southern people, is being acquiesced in more generally than was anticipated. It opens the way for the immediate re-establishment of State governments if the people so desire. If the majority of the whites do not accept the conditions, the blacks will be sustained by the military power in effecting an organization. But the leading politicians now see many ways of turning things to account to build up the country, and at the same time control it, by accepting the inevitable fate to which they are bound up. This is just the result expected, and if taken hold of in good faith, even the extremists will gain in the end, as their section of the country becomes prosperous and great under the workings of just laws. Generals Thomas, Sheridan, Schofield, Sickles and Hancock are likely to be the commanders in the five Military Departments into which the South is to be divided and governed until the organization of State governents in accordance with the Congressional Reconstruction Bill. This gives the late slaves an equal voice in the government with their former white masters. When the plan gets into perfect operation its benefits will be such as to forever prevent any return to the old order of things if such is ever possible. In several local elections South, colored men have already voted, in one instance securing the election of a Republican Mayor.

The business of the country continues dull; speculation, or rather gambling, is as active as ever. Recently there have come to light many sad evidences of this fell spirit in the defalcations in banks and other moneyed institutions, by their officers, which has brought ruin on themselves and others. Long lists of such roberies, by men considered among the highest in the community, have been weekly published in the newspapers for some time past.

Congress has made little progress since it organized the new session. All of the States are not represented—several having to elect their Representatives this spring. Several bills are to be acted on to perfect the bill to reconstruct the South, when it will adjourn for a season. The tariff question and the impeachment of the President are all the important matters to be acted on. The indications now are that nothing will be done on either until next fall. The President is so tied up by the action of the late Congress that the object of keeping the present Congress together to control his actions is rendered unnecessary.

FOREIGN.

Ireland has been the scene of tragic events at last, growing out of the Fenian movement This time the arrangements were more complete and better carried out than the last. While but little that is definite is as yet known about the affair, it is certain that fighting took place in the four quarters of Ireland at once, as many as 3,000 insurgents being together in some instances. The attempt seems to be a desperately hopeless one, and yet the friends of the movement are sanguine of accomplishing their purpose.

Napoleon is entirely absorbed in his great industrial Exhibition, which is to open early in May, but his military and naval preparation are going on in a gigantic style as if peace was not the only thought of the emperor.

The Eastern difficulties are as troublous as ever. The Cretans are stoutly struggling against their hated oppressors the Turks, and are receiving direct and indirect aid from the christians of the active world; one or two vessels have already sailed from this country with the provision for that heroic people.

The Paris papers of the 26th of February publish the following telegram from Corfu, dated the 24 of the same month, as emanating from a Greek source:—On the 13 and 14 inst. an engagement took place in the western portion of Crete. Eight thousand Turkish troops from Heraclion were defeated by the Cretans near Gerakari, and fell back, leaving behind two guns, five flags, one hundred mules and many prisoners. The imperialists received re-inforcements from Canea, but they attempted in vain to occupy the provinces of Selino.

In another part of the island a body of Ottoman troops were beaten by the insurgents on the 11 and 12th inst. Since then the combatants retain their positions.

Fresh massacres are announced to have been perpetrated by the Turks.

The Cretan Assembly generally persists in its demand for the annexation of Candia to Greece.

The most trustworthy Greeks say that the revolution will break out in four or five weeks in Epirus and Thessaly, whatever the Great Powers may do. An American Naval officer says that Servia is determined to fight the Turks, and that war in that quarter is almost certain. The war in Crete goes on. Two battles were fought ten days ago, which were favorable to the Cretans. The Turks have come back to Canea quite demoralized.

LONDON, March 11.—All the accounts from the scene of the disturbances in Ireland represent that matters have become quiet, and that order reigns once more. There have been no fresh conflicts between the armed police and the Fenian bands, who are fleeing to the mountains, and hiding from the pursuit of the military.

A terrible earthquake has taken place in the island of Mytilene. All the habitations on the island are in ruins and hundreds of lives have been lost.

It is stated that the leading powers of Europe have united in urging upon the Ottoman government the immediate enforcement of the provisions of the treaties of 1856, and the granting of liberal concessions to its Christian subjects.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,

Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

LINES,

SUGGESTED BY THE DEATH OF GEORGE F. STORRS.

"If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him."

O blessed hope! when death's cold hand
Has touched the frame, and closed the eye,
To feel that in that better land
We'll meet the lov'd in Christ who die;
And with them swell the conqueror's song,
As countless ages roll along.

No sorrow there, nor pain, nor woe,
Shall e'er again afflict the heart,
That bore its heavy load below,
Yet murmured not beneath the smart;
But meekly bowed beneath the rod,
And owned the goodness of its God.

"Bless'd Jesus! Everlasting Life!"
These were the dying words of One,
Who suffered long, yet through the strife,
Looked forward to a glorious throne,
The throne of Him, with whom we share
In suffering here, but glory there.

He will take care of thee and thine,
Thou sufferer in this vale of tears;
A bright effulgent crown divine
Shall deck thy brow through endless years—
No more to feel the chastening rod,
But dwell eternally with God.

LOVE YOUR ENEMIES.

PART SECOND.

It will be remember that we left Augustin in his new forest home with his sailor friend Natty and the Indian guide as his only companions. Dacotah, the guide, had just returned from a visit to the chief of the Delaware tribe, from whom he had brought an invitation from Augustin to make him a visit. During Dacotah's absence we have seen how Wenonda became the enemy of the white visitors, yet Augustin refused to destroy him even to secure his own safety. We shall see how this noble young man maintained his determination to obey the command of Christ, "Love your enemies," and how he was rewarded for it, as all are rewarded—if not in this life, in the life hereafter.

When they reached the Indian town, the women and children were at the doors of the wigwams, watching them curiously, and the warriors, all in their full dress, were hanging round, evidently waiting for them. They all followed them to the large tent to which Dacotah led the way—the council house of the tribe—in the centre of which blazed a large fire and around it they all seated themselves; Uncas, the noble old chief, beckoning them to seats beside him. After a silence of some moments, the chief arose and said: "The Delawares are generous? Has my brother come to ask a gift?" Augustin at once made known his business and showed the map: it was passed round, and after a little talk, the old chief again spoke: "My brother is welcome! The land is his; he shall have maize and meat and the Delawares will be his friends." Then the pipe of peace was lighted: Uncas took the first whiff, passed it to Augustin, and thence it went round the circle. The business was now over, and the warriors were going out, when Augustin begged to give them the presents he had brought; and taking from his pockets the bright and gay trifles with which he had filled them, he distributed them to the Indians, and thus forever secured their favor. This was just over when Wenonda made his appearance; he looked angry and full of hate when he saw what had happened; but he could not help it then; and the speech of his father—for he was the son of the noble old Uncas—"My son, the pale-faces are my friends!" took from him all power to injure them openly. But he refused to become, himself, a friend, and left no chance untried to destroy them. "The enemy of the pale-faces is mine!" said Uncas, when he saw his hatred, and Wenonda dared go no further.

One day, while hunting, the young men discovered Wenonda not far from them, and a huge panther making ready to spring upon him. "Now at least," thought Natty, "we shall be rid of him!" But Augustin's well-aimed shot laid the monster dead at the feet of the young savage, who just learned his danger when he found himself saved. But instead of softening his hatred towards the strangers, the idea of being under this favor only seemed to increase it, and the single cry, "Ugh!" when he first saw the panther drop, was all the notice he took of it. With all the rest of the tribe, the skill Augustin showed in hunting, and the stories of the Great Spirit, as they call God, that he told them when seated around their fires, made him a great favorite.

In the midst of all this, a dreadful fever broke out among the Delawares, and Uncas was the first to take it. It had raged among them before, and believing of it, as they do of all sickness, that it was an evil spirit that was tormenting them, not only their greatest medicine man, but their wisest witch-doctors had been called to drive it out, in vain. Augustin had seen it often at home, and knew that the herbs there used to cure it grew in the forest. Gathering them and preparing from them a drink, he gave it to the old chief, and in a short time he was quite well. One after another, all the warriors of the tribe were taken ill and cured; and to his great fame as a hunter was now added their admiration of him as a mighty medicine man who knew how to drive away the terrible fever-devil.

Among the rest, Wenonda became very ill, and once more Natty begged him to leave the spiteful savage to die, since he would not consent to let him be killed. "No," said Augustin, "God has forbidden us to return evil for evil. We must win him by kindness. He thinks we have wronged him, and he does only what we ourselves would do in his place;" and he nursed and watched over his enemy, night and day, until the fever was cured and Wenonda again went into the forest. When he found him still so bitterly his enemy, it must be confessed that even Augustin began to despair; but he called to mind that he was acting as God commanded, and so would not give up.

Some time after the fever had disappeared from among the Delawares, a company of warriors arrived from the Pequods, a neighboring tribe, to say that the fever-devil had come into their wigwams, and their chief, Mahtoree, had sent to beg the white medicine man of the Delawares to come and drive him away. Leaving Natty with their friends, Augustin went with them, and soon had the pleasure of seeing the disease disappearing from among the Pequods too. When it had entirely gone, he made ready to return to his old friends. The Pequods held a grand council, to express their gratitude and promise friendship and protection to all white men who came from him; they took off, too, their most valuable ornaments and offered them to him; but he refused to accept them, and was just passing out, when Natty, pale and bleeding, rushed among them and showed a wound made by Wenonda's tomahawk on his shoulder. Turning back, Augustin at once explained to the assembled tribe the state of affairs and asked their protection. This they readily granted, and before daybreak the next morning, the whole tribe set out on a war-path to the Delawares to avenge him. Augustin was much distressed lest all his kind friends should suffer for his sake; but Mahtoree assured him that due notice had been sent; and that the Delawares had their fate in their own hands. In a short time he was surprised to meet all the Delaware warriors, with Uncas at the head, and "the Nimble Wolf," bound and unarmed, in their midst. The two chiefs met. Uncas demanded why the Pequods had opened the war-path and dug up the tomahawk. "The Delawares," he said, "were brave and did not fear battle, but they did not want to shed innocent blood."

"The Wolf," replied Mahtoree, "has bitten the friend of the Pequods. He must be found. The Delawares are brave and just."

The lip of Uncas trembled, but his voice was calm as he answered: "The Nimble Wolf has been caught! The Pequods must take him!" and he gave up his only son to what he knew he must suffer. Natty was overjoyed, for now he was sure that they would be rid of him; but poor Augustin, almost beside himself that poor old Uncas, who had been like a father to him, should lose his only son for his sake, and determined to save the young Delaware, after tossing all night on his bed of furs, got up before daybreak, and was astonished to find every hut open and empty.

Following a sound he heard in the distance, he came to an open space, and saw Wenonda, bound hand and foot, fastened to a tree, at which the young warriors, with shouts of scorn, were amusing themselves by throwing their hatchets, to see how near they could come without striking their prisoner. Mahtoree welcomed him with a smile, and told him to see how the Pequods avenged their friends, but to Augustin's earnest entreaties to let him go, he would not' listen.

"The Pequods are brave and just; they must revenge their friends? The pale-face is too kind," they said.

Again and again Augustin entreated and used every argument he could think of; at last a new idea struck him. "The Nimble Wolf is mine!" he exclaimed. "The Pequods will make their name smell bad in the land? Men will say, they are great warriors, but they do not know how to be grateful. The white medicine man came and drove away the fever-devil from their wigwams, and would not take their precious things for a reward; but when he asked them to give him his enemy, they shut their ears, because they loved their sport."

The cry that went up from the whole company told that he had succeeded: and Mahtoree arose and said: "The pale-face is right! The Nimble Wolf is his!"

Wenonda was at once unbound, and Augustin told him that he was free; but he did not stir. Throwing his arm around the young stranger, he exclaimed: "Wenonda must speak! He must tell the Delawares his wickedness!" Then he told of the injustice he had seen among the white traders, and the opinion he had formed accordingly of Augustin and Natty: of his hatred, his fears for his tribe, and his efforts to get rid of them; but he was sorry now, he said, and professed the warmest friendship.

Augustin had conquered! The whole tribe escorted back Wenonda to his old father; and having no longer reason for delay, Augustin returned home for his family, first telling Natty where to build their log house and make the garden. When he had made ready his mother, and the children, and again went to Bremen to take passage, he found that the still grateful Herr Stootsof had made ready for him one of his best ships; filled it with everything that could be needed for at least two years; and sent out beside six industrious German families to settle on his land; the rent for which would more than support him. Captain Steding took the command, and when he saw the lovely spot, he declared that he should only take the vessel back, and then come and end his days there. So he did.

The Indians were so delighted to see their white friend again that they did for him everything in their power; and never did Wenonda give reason to doubt the excellence of God's command: "Love your enemies!"—The Methodist.

ALONE.

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

That it is not good for man to be alone, we have from the highest authority. The charms of solitude are of such a nature that we do not want too much of them: we are soon satisfied, if not satiated, with being left alone by those we love. Man is a social animal, and the hermit and recluse is a perversion of his nature. It is hard to stand alone in this cold world; yet not a few of God's people have been called upon to endure this great privation for the love of truth. This is often the price we are called upon to pay for advocating some unpopular truth, and many in the hour of trial think the price too high, and had rather sell than buy. This is often the trial, the test of our faith and love to Christ, and his cause. Are we willing to leave all and follow him? If not, whatever our profession, we cannot be his disciples—he that loveth father or mother, son or daughter, husband or wife more than me, is not worthy of me. The ties of nature are strong and hard to sever; the right hand and the right eye are not more dear and precious than the friend whose heart-strings are twined round our own. To be left alone and forsaken in time of need by such an one, can only be understood by those who have had the trial. Yet not a few of God's faithful children have passed through this fiery furnance for the love of truth, to be purified as gold. Of this we have many examples in the word of God. Noah was left alone in a deluged world; he sought comfort in his solitude, as too many have done subsequently, in the wine cup; but he found the remedy worse than the disease, as all others will do who try the experiment. Abram left his native land, and went out, not knowing whither he went, a stranger and a pilgrim in the land of promise. David, when he fled from his unnatural son, was forsaken by some of his dearest friends with whom he had once enjoyed sweet communion in the house of God. Job had his patience more severely tried by his fretful wife and his pretended friends, than by the loss of all his worldly substance. He was worse than left alone by his miserable comforters. Elijah, the prophet of Israel, hunted by Ahab, and fed by ravens, was an outcast from all human society, literally alone; while the four hundred prophets of Baal were feasted at Jezebel's table. There are some in our day who, like Elijah, espouse an unpopular faith, and find themselves in the same predicament; while those who sacrifice truth for popularity, live on the fat of the land, and bask in the sunshine of worldly prosperity. They have their reward prior to the resurrection of the just. But what are all these privations in comparison with his, who, though he was rich, for our sakes became poor, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, had not where to lay his head; betrayed by Judas; denied by Peter; forsaken by all but those devoted ones who were last at the cross, and first at the sepulchre; led as a lamb to the slaughter, he opened not his mouth, till the hiding of his Father's face constrained him to cry, Eli, Eli, lama sabacthani? My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Christ did indeed "finish his journey alone!" In all ages of the world some have been called to make this sacrifice; all reformers of long-cherished errors, have for a time stood alone, to shun the tide of popular hatred and malice; and not a few have sealed their testimony with their blood. Even now, in these last days of boasted liberty, it is not safe to express a belief in the mortality of the soul, the sleep of the dead, the destruction of the wicked, the speedy personal reign of Christ on the throne of David, to raise his ransomed ones from the grave, and give them to reign with him on the earth. To restore the ancient people of God to the land of promise, and with the left of the nations, joyfully submit to him whose right it is to reign. To espouse these unpopular truths, and to teach men so, will expose us to the ridicule and contempt of an apostate church, and a corrupt and sin-doomed world. It will deprive us of friends, relatives, reputation, and confidence in the church and community: to sum up all in one word, it will leave us alone!

Brethren, are we willing to bear all this for Christ and his truth, or is the cost too heavy? This is the test of the present day: who has stamina enough to abide it? Many, alas! have failed in the day of trial, and after having tasted of the good word of God, and the power of the world to come, have made shipwreck of their faith, and of a good conscience; and are now ruminating in Doubting Castle, full of perplexity, uncertainty and distrust; they have sold their birth-right for a mess of pottage, have buried their talent in their earth; hidden their light under a bushel; and if they are now in darkness, and their talent is taken from them, they are only reaping the just reward of their cowardice and want of faith. Whosoever, therefore, shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels. Mark viii. 38.

No, blessed Saviour, this must not be; let us resolve in hope of the promises, like Joshua of old, as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord, cost what it will. Let friends forsake us and cast out our name as evil; let the church cut us off from its fellowship, call us fools, infidels, and apostates; let the world accuse of garrulous dotage, and imbecility. Welcome reproach and shame; the servant is not greater than his Lord; to follow in the footsteps of our Master, to be baptized with the baptism that he was baptized with, to suffer with him; this will make amends for all, even in this present life; and in the life to come, to see his face, to hear his voice in loving accents say to us, Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord! No more weeping the loss of friends and kindred; no more forsaken and desolate in a cold and selfish world; no more deceived and betrayed by those we loved and trusted but too well; no more alone. The goodly fellowship of the apostles and prophets; the noble army of martyrs; the good and faithful of all ages, nations, and tongues, will constitute that blessed society. Above all, Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER, our prophet, priest, and King, our all in all, will be there, on the throne of David, ruling in righteousness and peace, over a renovated earth; when all nations, kindreds, tongues and people shall joyfully submit to his righteous government, and lay their glory and honor at his feet. Let all the earth and heaven respond the long and loud—Amen.

THE SOURCE OF TEMPTATION.

BY S. E. HOFFMAN.

"Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed."—James i. 13, 14.

If the theology of the present days be true, that there is an invisible, personal, angelic devil, that can and does tempt men to evil, on all sides of the earth at the same instant of time, how strange it is that the apostle James did not tell us something about that being; and that, too, when he was so definitely describing the source of temptation.

He first warns us not to ascribe our temptations to God. If a preacher of the present day's theology was preaching on the subject of temptation, would he not think of telling the people that the devil was all the time insinuating evil in their hearts? Yes, that would be the mainspring of his subject. How different the apostle's doctrine. He tells us that every man, no matter who he is, whether high or low, rich or poor, when he is tempted, is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Lust is inordinate desire, covetousness, vain wantonness, gratifying self-appetite, pride, worldly honors, unrighteous gain, &c. and the enticement is the hope of attaining these unhallowed things. It is no sin to be tempted with any of these things; but the sin lies in yielding to them. For, "when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."

Here, then, man is tempted in a way that we can understand. No mysteries about the matter.

Let the reader now mark one thing, and he will forever be satisfied on this subject. There never was a temptation to do wrong, but there was a moving, visible cause for that temptation. What tempts you to get angry? Why, some one has told a lie about me, or tried to injure my character, or injured my property, or my work is going wrong. Incidents, almost without number, are daily passing to tempt us to anger; all visible and plain to be seen. What tempts one to cheat or defraud another? The love of money; his lust. And so it is with every temptation: not some unseen being insinuating these things into our minds; but "Thou art the man," and there is no blame that you can lay on any other being but thyself.

"From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts, that war in your members? From whence came the war and fightings of the South? Was it not the lusts (not from an angel, but) that war in your members; an insatiable thirst to keep the colored people in bondage, that they might satiate all their lusts in the wealth of pleasure? Perhaps some one may say, Does not James say, "Resist the devil and he will flee from you"? Most certainly he does. Can any one tell how to undertake to resist a being, a force, a power, or an enemy, that he doesn't know where he is, and that no information has ever been given about that being, and that he doesn't know what he is like, nor what his forces are? Suppose when the declaration of war against the South was made, that we had been ordered to resist the South, and we did not know where the South was, nor what the South was like, would we not look like fools, or consider the order a fool order? To resist an enemy successfully, we want to know that enemy's power, his place of abode, and all about his forces. If you don't know all about this, you are as "one beating the air."

O, but, says one, we are "not ignorant of satan's devices." Let me ask you, Did you ever talk with satan [i. e., satan, a spirit]? Did you ever see him? Can you tell whether he is material or immaterial? At all events, you never saw him; and there is no revelation that tells where his habitation is. So your resisting such a devil is but, as I said before, "beating the air." But, dear reader, I will tell you what kind of a devil you can resist; and that you have every promise in the Bible that you will be successful in making him flee from you, if you only wield the sword of the Spirit aright.

The devil, in the singular, is one thing all over the world, and through all dispensations of time. In the plural, devils, there are as different grades of them as there are different leaves on the trees, or spires of grass. The human propensities and passions, which flow from mortality, or the animal nature, when uncontrolled, unsubdued, and let loose to all their gratifications, are, in the singular, the devil, or enemy, or demon. That devil is a visible devil. You know now just how to go to work to oppose, or resist him. "Him," so often personified in the Bible.

You can meet this devil every day; you can talk with him; and in this way you need not be ignorant of satan's devices. In the plural, devils, it is the different spirits, or dispositions. Hence, Mary Magdalene had seven devils [dispositions] cast out of her.

An orthodox once asked me the question, what I thought of this passage of scripture—"When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places seeking rest, and finding none, he saith unto himself, I will return unto my house from whence I came out; and when he cometh he findeth it swept and garnished. Then goeth he and taketh seven other spirits, more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there," &c. Now, the question was, Who is this that is here personified?—"he." Is it the man, or is it the unclean spirit? I answered, I take it just as it reads—an "unclean," impure "spirit," or disposition. From this fact, I take it to be that, because it is utterly impossible that it, [he] could be your kind of a devil. For, "he goeth and taketh to himself seven other spirits, more wicked than himself." It is impossible that there could be seven other spirits more wicked than the devil, in your sense of that word. This closed the question, and my orthodox friend said do more.

THE TWO COVENANTS.

The two covenants are a part of the great plan of salvation; so great, man could not comprehend it without a diagram or pattern. Also, his affections had become so alienated that this present state, contrasted with what God had prepared for him in the future, is necessary as an incentive to faith, love, and obedience, whereby man is begotten again, by the word of truth, and God can be just, and yet justify those that believe in Jesus. God planned, and so perfected it, that man can be saved from, or continuing in, actual death. St. Paul calls it a great salvation. It is great, and broad enough to save all that are interested, and willing to be saved by it; not only the Jew, but through Abraham the blessing is to extend to all the nations of earth. St. Paul says, The scriptures, forseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blest. This good news unto Abraham was an inheritance in the land of Canaan; therefore the idea of going away from earth to enjoy heaven, at death, is another gospel.

First: The gospel was preached unto Abraham, which was a promise unto him and his seed of an everlasting possession on this mundane sphere. At this point the great plan began to be revealed; for Abraham understood the promise to point to a future inheritance; for Paul says, By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise; for he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. First, then; the promise. Second: The commencement of action on the part of God in fulfilling the promise, by laying out the work and submitting it to the inspection and government of the descendants of Abraham, in the shape of a pattern, that delineated the form, manner, and purity of the promised inheritance. From Adam to Moses death reigned, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression; who is the figure of him that was to come. Rom. v. 14. That is, Moses was the figure of Christ, the Son of God, who was to come; constituted a plenary leader, as the visible head over the house of Israel; being a servant, his commission to reign over the house of God represented, or pre-figured, the reign of Christ as a Son over his own house.

The first covenant was figurative of the second. The first was made with Israel and Judah under the reign of Moses. The second is to be made with Israel and Judah under the reign of Christ. If the first covenant is a pattern, it is necessary to understand what constitutes it, to a consistent understanding of what the new will be. In the investigation of this subject, we find that when Moses had led Israel out of the house of bondage and arrived at mount Sinai, God there met with them and gave unto them his commands, statutes, and judgments; they agreed, or covenanted, to obey. Death had reigned up to this time, because there had been no action. The typical, yearly atonement had not been given. The description of the meeting is given in these words, "And mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke because the LORD descended upon it in fire; and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly." Ex. xix. 18. The Lord talked with them face to face in the mount, out of the midst of the fire. Deut. v. 4. After rehearsing the ten commands, the 22d v. says, "These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount, with a great voice; and he added no more."

Now, the question arises, Was the giving of the law, statutes, and judgments, the covenant styled the old covenant? or, was the law, statutes, and judgments the covenant? Or, again, Was the law aside from the statutes and judgments the covenant spoken of? I am inclined to think the perpetuating of the law on two tables of stone is what is meant; for they prepared the stone, and God engraved the law on the two tables, as he promised Moses. The tables are called, the tables of the covenant; and the new covenant is the law of God written on the heart; the old, was the law perpetuated on stone. Under the old, was the dispensation of types and shadows, reaching down to the coming of Christ and the atonement. Rom. v. 11. From thence on, the tarrying time; the time of grace to the Gentiles, under the dispensation of the Holy Spirit, our schoolmaster; being conceived, or begotten again by the word of truth, are to grow up into him as new born babes, by faith; looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour, Jesus Christ, Titus ii. 13, whom he raised from the dead; even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come. 1 Thes. i. 10. Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Tit. ii. 14.

Again he says, For our conversation is in heaven; from whence, also, we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself. Phil. iii. 20, 21.

This is our present state; occupying a space of time between the two covenants, and by the signs that were to precede the coming and kingdom, the day star will soon appear. The two-horned beast, a separate and distinct nationality from all others, is to be further developed, and then comes the end of those things that precede the coming of Christ and the 144,000, as John saw. Then comes the resurrection: the setting up of the kingdom, and the visible reign of Christ over the church, which constitutes the kingdom phase; and the apostles will be judges over the 12 tribes of Israel. When Christ reigns and the apostles are judges, there will be rules and law, and it will be the law of God written on the heart; then none will have need to say to his neighbor, Know ye the Lord; for all shall know him from the least to the greatest. God has once proclaimed his law to Israel. Will it be another law that he writes on the heart? I do not see anything to point me to such a conclusion. Is this fiction? To me it appears to be truth.

INSTRUCTED CHRISTIANS.

"Are there not good christians in the churches?" I have never heard it disputed. There have been good philosophers, good pagans, and Romanists; possibly, good deists. That is, circumspect, moral, kind, obliging, philanthropic, and so on. Good, but ignorant of the way of eternal life.

It is supposed, by those making this inquiry, that goodness (such as they have in their minds) will qualify for heaven; "heaven" being the place, in their fancy, for good people.

I would not discourage people from being good; but will say, goodness only, will not save, or ensure eternal life. A good man might go to sea in a very bad ship; but she is not the less liable to be wrecked because he is on board, except we suppose special divine interposition. A good man might take a wrong road to a certain destination. His being good does not make it less certain that he is going wrong, and increasing the distance between himself and his desired resting place.

According to the scriptures, one must be a believer, and a confessor. As Paul prescribes, "That if thou shalt with thy mouth, confess the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Rom. x.

The nominal churches receive their communicants on profession of faith. True. But what do they profess? To be converted. Doubtless some of them are. From what I know of the good people of the sects, in an experience of more than 40 years, the conversions have not been according to Paul's receipt, just quoted above.

Penitents are encouraged to believe in Christ without the reasons for it, or the whys, and wherefores. They come up to this place in their experience all wrong. "Not having their senses exercised," their convictions are created from misrepresentations of God and their own case. They are taught that God's law demands the eternal torment of the impenitent; and they fear it: when, in truth, they are in danger of no such doom. Also, their solicitude is for their souls—a supposed independent entity—and not for a pledge of resurrection after the pattern of our risen Lord. Their convictions, exercises, fears, hope, faith, and whatever else in the matter, are all superinduced by a false alarm. This false notion, that has happened to christendom, supposes, also, that Christ can be appropriated, and be available to the saving of an abstraction of a man, that leaves him at death. But Paul's receipt for conversion makes the whole virtue of faith depend upon its connection with the belief in the resurrection of the man—the saint; because Christ rose from the dead; thereby illustrating the whole question: "Brought life and immortality to light."

In another place, Paul says, If this is not so, we have been false witnesses; and your faith is vain; and ye are yet in your sins. What a tremendous doctrine! No penitence or pardon, if there is no resurrection. If this is so, can there be true penitence and pardons but for the sake of the resurrection? but for this, "we are of all men the most miserable." Going into all the expense and outlay of religion, and never get the returns. Suffer, but never reign; sow, but never reap; plant, but never eat of the fruits.

Another text. "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so also them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "For this end Christ both died and rose."

It must be, therefore, that independent immortality, so universally preached and insisted upon, is grossly untrue, dishonorable to God, and a fraud upon Jesus. Who could have invented the subtelty, but a savage, or a pagan, who had never heard of Jesus and his triumphant resurrection? Moreover, how can a professor of christianity believe in immortality through Adam, the "earthy man," and not ignore Jesus, the "quickening Spirit." If a man has a religion with no resurrection in it, he has a show of excuse for trying to believe in his own native immortality. The notion may befit a blank heathen; but is most unbecoming, if not scandalous, for a christian to entertain.

Any person of fair discrimination ought to see that a religious faith with two ways of immortality in it, must be a cumbrous thing, and not a little embarrassing to manage, having in it the seeds of eternal conflict.

If either of the two ways, or the two kinds of immortality, is necessary, then the other is not. If natural immortality is the right thing, why did not God know it, and reserve that most precious and expensive gift, his beloved Son to die the just for the unjust? who abolished death by his resurrection, and brought life and immortality to light.

If this gift of God was necessary, as it proves to be, then all this parade about immortality through Adam goes for nothing. He could not keep himself alive, being shut out from the tree of life; doomed to be all mortal, despite any contingency.

Now if the good christian people, of whom we speak, persist in harmonizing these two ways, they will "fall between two stools," and very soon be nowhere.

"But, there are good people." Pity they will not grow in knowledge. They are supposed to live near to God; pray much; are faithful to the means of grace; pay divine honors to Jesus; but unwittingly rob him of the exclusive honor of giving eternal life to his friends. But there is a mystery in this matter; in these close walkers with God. It is in this: If they are so intimate at court, why are they not better informed of doctrines? If the Bible is profitable for doctrine, they ought to have this benefit. But they seem to read with the "evil on their hearts, unto this day." Jesus declares, "I give eternal life to my sheep;".... and "I will raise them up at the last day." But these good christians believe that they, and all mankind, would not, and could not, do any thing else but live forever, if Jesus had not been.

The Bible teaches, that God has given the earth to the children of man, but they insist that it is heaven that was given. The Lord rewards christians in the last day, when Jesus comes in his kingdom, according to the word. But they teach it is at death. The Bible teaches that the righteous live for ever in glory on earth, under the reign of Jesus their elder brother; while the wicked are everlastingly destroyed; that they die, perish, and shall be consumed out of the earth.

In these doctrines they differ from God and his word. In their ignorance, or stupidity, or something else not very creditable to them, they think God's word can be broken; that he can defer or break his promise to the patriarchs and saints for the sake of their purile enterprise for converting the world.

The word teaches that the restitution of all things, the coming of Jesus, the kingdom, and the resurrection of the saints, is of the first consequence with God. He has given his word and oath, "that by these two immutable things, whereby it is impossible for God to lie, the heirs of promise might have strong consolation," &c. He has set the whole creation groaning for that day. He has given an intimation of his own feelings in reference to it, in that every intelligent believer groans in himself, "waiting for the adoption; to wit the redemption of our body."

As I have no design or wish to doubt the goodness of many members of the sects, notwithstanding the prevading barbarous ignorance of scripture doctrines among them, I will suggest a few gentle hints, after saying one word more. Goodness will go for all it is worth with the supreme judge.

1. It is duty to know, as well as to be innocent, or justified. The scriptures are profitable for doctrine, &c., that the man of God may be perfect, &c. Cornelius was a good man. It was not enough in his case. Two visions were given for his sake; and perhaps a train of providences, beside, to have Peter at Joppa at the right time. See the account, Acts x. Apollos was mighty in the scriptures and eloquent, yet he needed further instruction; "Whom, when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him unto them and expounded the word of God more perfectly." And he did not think he compromised his dignity by accepting these teachers.

2. If then these good christians are willing, like Cornelius and Apollos to be better informed, they give evidence that they are disciples. If not, then let them take care of the rest. To their own Master they stand or fall."

3. There are serious defects in their likings and longings, that require a little notice, which is manifest in their indifference to the second coming of our Lord, with all his saints. A perilous indifference! It puts them out of sympathy with God, Jesus, angels, and the best and wisest kind of good men, and the whole creation thrown in, ALL IN AN AGONY FOR THE NEW BIRTH OF CREATION.

Furthermore, Paul says, crowns are to be given in that day, "To all them that love his appearing." The Rheimish Testament reads, 1 Cor. xv. 23, "But every one in his own order; the first fruits Christ; then they who have believed in his coming." It seems necessary to speak beforehand for a resurrection. We have examples of this on record. Job is one case. "Appoint me a set time, and remember me." The famous thief, whatever his crime, apprehended the hope, and understood the work of Jesus. He, like Job, prayed to be remembered. His words are, "when thou comest into thy kingdom." Jesus prayed for a resurrection. "Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard, in that he feared." Heb. v. 7.

David also spoke a word for Jesus in the Psalms, according to Peter's testimony, "He being a prophet"—"Therefore did my heart rejoice," &c.... "Moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope, because thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption. Thou hast made known to me the ways of life." No doubt David spoke a word for himself, also, of which he will receive the benefit, at the time! The following is of the same faith. "I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." David once more: "But wilt deliver my soul from the power of the grave; for he shall receive me." Psa. xlix. 15. Stephen also spoke for a resurrection when dying, saying, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Paul says, "Your life is hid with Christ in God." Peter, speaking for us all, says, "We are begotten again to a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible."

It is comfortable to know that the "Judge of all the earth will do right." But we will do well to remember, that probation is our school time; and we ought to be ambitious to earn a fair literary fame; graduate with honors like men, and not as whining babes. It would be awkward, indeed, for men of opportunity in this world, to be ushered into the society of that cloud of witnesses, of whom Paul wrote, Heb. xi. These were well educated, and left a good report. To come into the new earth without ever having believed in it; to sit at the Lord's table and eat the supper of the Lamb; a thing they used to think too gross for heaven. To build, to sow, and plant, they now think is too much like work. Every thing else will be peculiar and strange to them. But I suppose they can adjust themselves to the situation.

B. MATTHIAS.

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

There are some who make their main objection to the important inculcation of "No life out of Christ," the view, so long held, of a "general judgment." This is considered sacred from its age. It supposes that there will be an assembly of all men who have ever lived before a Judge—upon a literal judgment-seat—to pass an examination, and receive sentence. This doctrine is a part of the theory that men are dead and alive at the same time; that they are in torments or in happiness, as the case may be, till the resurrection; which is only necessary to such a judgment; and the judgment is necessary, only as a demonstration! No difference being found in the condition of the individual, afterwards, and no new fact elicited by the trial; for God knew the whole before.

To such I wish to offer a few considerations. I do not like to see any part of the gospel, or of the divine administration, presented as a farce. It will be easy to harmonize the Bible, in its testimony on this subject, with quite another view.

The judgment is classified, in scripture, and from this simple fact may be easily understood.

There is a judgment of nations.
There is a judgment of individuals.
There is a judgment of the living.
There is a judgment of the dead.
There is a judgment at Christ's coming.
There is a day of judgment spoken of in the gospel, which is past.
There is a judgment of all men.
There is a declaration that we must all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ.
There is an administrative, or judicial judgment, and there is an executive judgment.

We will take up some of these points, and we hope enlighten the reader.

This text, Matt. xxv. 31, 32, is often quoted in proof of a future general judgment of all men who have ever lived; i. e., their trial and sentence.

"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them, one from another, as the shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats."

This is, manifestly the judgment of the living. "All nations" should be thus understood. By what rule of language or principle of interpretation can "all nations" be made to mean, all men who have ever lived, as well as all the living? Poets may talk of the "pale nations of the dead," but I know of nothing in scripture that would thus denominate the dead. Nor is there anything in the usages of language which can, by any possibility, make the dead, literally, nations. The very idea of nations would be destroyed by it. Nations signifies not only living men but men organized in governments.

Again, he refers the different classes before him, in this instance, to the action on which his regard for them, and consequently their future condition, is based; and thus, while it may present the individual, looks strongly to the idea of a collective or national relation.

He manifestly speaks to those, in either class, who have not known him or his condition in the flesh. This, of itself, is sufficient proof that it is not of the dead that he speaks; nor does he address those who have been dead. Besides, the dead are to be judged without the least intimation being given that they reply at the time they are judged. The judgment of the dead is a distinct exhibition. The judgments of the living and dead are distinct operations. If the dead and the living are alive in the judgment, and together, where is the difference? What would be thought of a man's sense who should say that, all men must die to be judged, because it is said, "the dead stood before God; and the dead were judged"?

Is it any better sense to say that, all the dead must be made alive to be judged; because he is the judge of the living? and this judgment is illustrated by his separating one from another—of the nations—which is certainly executive.

This is the especial instance in which, by a striking figure of speech, the Lord of man has shown how he will judge the living nations at his coming.

The condition may be the same, in point of fact, morally, of the righteous and the wicked, individually, and the award the same, as with the dead; but he is not talking of the dead here. The more strking manifestation is exhibited in this case, because of the time in which they are considered, the coming of the Lord in his glory; which, in view of the time in which they live, involves greater blessings and responsibilities.

Furthermore; it is agreed that he speaks of the destruction of the wicked, by a strong figure. Hence we claim that, by the figure of a judgment throne he shows the justification of the righteous and the destruction of the wicked.

The wicked who are dead need not be raised from the dead to be declared in that condition of the dead called destruction, in the "final issue;" any more than the righteous need to die that they may be declared in the resurrection state.

The living will be judged when he comes by a special manifestation; to say nothing of the judgment of God upon men, in the knowledge of men's actions, that is now going on.

If God takes knowledge of the actions of men, then he is cognizant of the character of each: and hence, every man must be in the judgment (trial), for his knowledge is the judgment. We cannot remove one fact, namely; God's knowledge of all things. Nor can we ignore the character of men's actions, the relation to God, and the kingdom of God, being determined by position. No formal examination is needed.

All this is true, because "every man must give an account of himself to God."

On this point we offer, also, the fact of a recognition of the condition, now in the divine plan. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth, who is he that condemneth?" Here is a condition already existing. Does it need the form of an examination to show it? Nay, verily. If it be objected that this is spoken of a class, collectively, I may argue a sufficient reply in that the "Nations" are spoken of, and not, necessarily, individuals, in the text.

"Who art thou that judgeth another man's servant? To his own master he standeth or falleth." I am of opinion that this is a strong proof that the judgment is now passing upon individual character, by the great Judge, the great God, to whom we are come; God, the Judge of all. The judgment-seat of Christ is the one thing that some will insist upon. Well, the question is as to the seat. The very figure, for it must be a figure, "the throne of his glory." Christ is to occupy David's throne. It must be a figure of judgment, unless God shall endow all men, good and bad, with the faculty of immortality before they are tried; for how could the living all stand before a seat at once? How could the dead, unless infinite, be there? But the idea in a figure, is a beautiful one. All stand before the judgment-seat of Christ. And he is the judge of the quick as well as the dead; for he declares the Father hath committed all judgment to the Son. And the "word [or law] shall judge you at the last day."

The judgment-seat signifies the law; as the judge on the bench signifies the law. The law of Christ is the test, and that, by figure of speech, is called the judgment-seat of Christ. So that throne of his glory is a figure, showing his majesty and power in the execution of the judgments written.

I will enlarge here by introducing a passage that all our opposers are fond of quoting in support of the doctrine of an individual examination, at a future time of assize. "Every one of us must give an account of himself to God." This passage, like many others, is most sadly perverted. Instead of the mind being directed to a point in the future, when all men shall be examined, the great point is, manifestly this—the accountability of each to God, the judge of all. The form of the verb makes the passage emphatic. Every one must give an account. Now it is much more emphatic. It shows certainty. It presents obligations which we cannot avoid. Besides, it is more strictly correct, if a future idea is given, as being accountability under the gospel, for the great proportion of those who were to be judged, under the gospel economy, were to live after this language was uttered.

"If our heart condemn us not, then have we fellowship with one another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." How could the believers be justified more fully?

"But if our heart condemn us, God is greater than our heart." Is not this judgment final, and decisive? If the faith is justifying, God knows and declares the acceptable state of the "just by faith." It is enough.

If the heart condemns, God's condemnation is more complete and definitive; for he is greater in his knowledge of us than we are of ourselves. This gives the idea of completeness of condition in either case. The judgment upon all such could not, then, be examination. Here is the judgment itself. He will manifest his judgments.

THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION.

BY CHARLES C. TUCK.

"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand,") &c.—Matt. xxiv. 15.

In my former article, I endeavored to show from the explanation of the angel to Daniel, what was meant by the term "abomination of desolation," as referred to by Christ in the above quotation; and in doing so, I was under the necessity of examining at some length, the testimony of the angel concerning the power to whom the term "abomination of desolation" is applied. I found that the "little horn," spoken of in Daniel viii. (which "magnified himself against the prince of the host," took away the daily sacrifice, and cast down the sanctuary) was explained by the angel to be "a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," who should, among other things, "stand up against the prince of princes." But as Daniel, after the angel had thus explained the vision, did not understand it, the angel was sent a second time, as recorded in chapter ix. 21, to give him an understanding of the vision; when he gave him to understand that "the king of fierce countenance," &c., represented a certain power which was to desolate Jerusalem; that the "prince of princes," against whom he was to "stand up," represented the "Messiah the prince." We found that the Roman civil power was the one which desolated Jerusalem, and crucified "the Messiah, the prince," or Christ. Consequently that was the power symbolized by the little horn of chapter viii.

Another distinctive feature of the little horn was this: it was said to represent a king (or kingdom) of "fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences." By referring to Deut. xxviii. 49, 50, we see a kingdom brought to view having the same distinctive features, and which also was to do the same work, as the little horn, viz., desolate Jerusalem. The same power which was to "take away the daily sacrifice," was also to "place (or set up) the abomination that maketh desolate." (See Daniel xi. 31.) What power took away the daily sacrifice? I have already shown that it was the Roman civil power. Consequently it was the Roman civil power which placed (or set up) the abomination that maketh desolate. How vain, then, is the attempt which is made to apply that term to the papal power?

Thus we find, by examining Daniel, that the daily sacrifice spoken of by him was taken away at the destruction of Jerusalem, by the Romans under Titus; and the abomination of desolation was set up, or stood "in the holy place," at that same time. Now let us examine the testimony of Christ concerning the matter, as recorded by Matthew. He says, "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeath, let him understand), then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains." But why this admonition to those disciples who should chance to be in Judea and not a word of warning for those in other countries? For the simple reason that, Judea was the place where that abomination of desolation was to stand and operate. I will give the operations of that desolating power as wide scope as Christ did, and no wider.

If Christ referred to the papal power, whose operations extended over all nations, why did he not give a single word of warning to those in any other country except Judea? But we see by the record that he gave warning to none but those in Judea, therefore we are under the necessity of letting it stand just as it is written in the Book. But many think that the term "abomination of desolation" could not apply to the Roman army around Jerusalem, because it was said to stand in the "holy place;" and Jerusalem, they say, could not be called holy, after the Jews had rejected Christ, and he himself had told them their house was left unto them desolate. But I find that the prophets, and the evangelists, applied the word "holy" to Jerusalem, as wicked and rebellious as the Jews were. In Daniel ix. 16, I read as follows: "O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city, Jerusalem, thy holy mountain; because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us." Here, we see that, although they had become a reproach to all about them, on account of their sin and rebellion; and although the curse, that was written in the law of Moses, had been poured upon them, yet Daniel, in speaking of Jerusalem, calls it the Lord's holy mountain. Also in chapter ix. 24, the angel Gabriel, in speaking of Jerusalem, which was then desolate, and under the curse, calls it the holy city. In Matt. iv. 5 we also read as follows: "Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city (referring to Jerusalem), and setteth him on a pinnacle of of the temple," &c. Also in Matt. xxvii. 52, 53, we read that, at the crucifixion of Christ, "the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many," &c. This was after the Jewish nation had utterly rejected Christ, and had been the means of his death; and yet their city is called by the evangelist the holy city. Thus we see that the objection that is raised to the abomination of desolation being the Roman army around Jerusalem, because of the term holy place, falls to the ground.

In Mark, the abomination of desolation is spoken of as "standing where it ought not." Says the objector, "If the term abomination of desolation referred to the Roman army around Jerusalem, how could it be said that it was standing where it ought not, when it was there as an instrument in the hands of God to punish the Jews for their wickedness?" I answer: The reason why the Roman army ought not to stand around Jerusalem was, because that was their holy city, and the presence of an army of Gentiles, pagans, was considered a pollution, a defilement of the land. For proof, read Ezek. vii. 21, 22. There the prophet, speaking of the desolation of the land of Israel, because of their sins, says: "And I will give it into the hands of the strangers for a prey; and to the wicked of the earth for a spoil; and they shall pollute it. My face will I turn also from them, and they shall pollute my secret place; for the robbers shall enter into it and defile it." Also in Daniel xi. 31, the angel, speaking of that power symbolized in chapter viii. by the little horn which was to take away the daily sacrifice, cast down the sanctuary, and "for the overspreading of abominations" make Jerusalem desolate, says: "And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." Thus it is seen that the Roman army was a cause of pollution to the land of Israel, and for that reason ought not to stand there; and would not have been suffered to stand there, had it not been as a punishment to the Jews for their sins.

Thus it will be seen that the expressions "stand in the holy place," (Matt. xxiv. 15), and "standing where it ought not" (Mark xiii. 14), are no proof that the "abomination of desolation," spoken of there, does not refer to the Roman army around Jerusalem, and any argument founded upon those two expressions, on the ground that they are objections to my theory, must fall to the ground.

Jesus said to his disciples, when they came to him to show him the buildings of the temple, "See ye not all these things? Verily, I say unto you, there shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." The disciples saw that he predicted some great calamity that was coming upon the Jews, and associating the destruction of the temple with the end of the world, as they evidently did, they asked him, saying, "Tell us when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" Mark: here are two questions—one concerning when those stones should be thrown down, and the other concerning the sign of his coming and the end of the world. I see no reason why Jesus should not answer one of those questions as well as the other; and we see that he did answer them both; for he not only told them the signs which were to precede his coming, but also told them when those things should be, viz., when they saw the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place. Mat. xxiv. contains an answer to both questions.

Last summer, after listening to a discourse on the abomination of desolation, by one of the ablest time brethren, I rose and asked some questions, and made a few remarks, and spoke of those two questions propounded to Jesus by the disciples, saying, I thought it nothing more than reasonable to expect that Jesus should answer one question as well as the other. The brother, seeing that if Jesus did answer the question concerning the stones being thrown down, it must be when he spoke about the abomination of desolation, in the 15th verse (and that would overthrow the definite time argument), said that Jesus did not answer that question, for those stones had not been thrown down yet, and would not be thrown down till the end of the world; and as proof that they were not thrown down at the destruction of Jerusalem, he said the missionaries or travellers in Palestine had reported that there were stones now lyiny there, one upon another. I did not consider the reports of missionaries or travellers in Palestine of sufficient weight to invalidate the word of God, therefore, upon going home from the meeting, I looked up some more of Christ's predictions, which had slipped my mind, which read as follows: "And when he was come near, he beheld the city (Jerusalem), and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes; for the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side, and shall lay thee even with ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another, because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation."

In my next I shall examine the subject further, and also notice some of the objections which are brought against my position.

Who is a Christian?

BY S. E. HOFFMAN.

"Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man." Who then? "But for the lawless, and disobedient; for the ungodly, and for sinners," &c. 1 Tim. i. 9, 10.

"Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

It is a doubt in many minds whether we can tell who a christian is, or not. If such is the case, why this exhortation, to come out from among them, and to be separate? But the question is, Can we, and how can we know a genuine, true, sincere christian from a formal professor, or one that has put on the garb of religion, for the sake of appearance, or for any other motive? I hear one say that he who has strong faith, and earnestly contends for the faith that was once delivered to the saints, has a mark sufficient to prove him a christian. There are as various ideas in the christian world about the true christian character as there are different denominations and different opinions. But I ask the solemn question, Is there not a line drawn in the Bible by which we may know who are real christians? I will state a few things that are not evidence that a man is christian. A person may have all the theoretical wisdom, and understand it, too, and yet be no christian. Hear Paul's testimony on this, 1 Cor. xiii. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not charity (or love), I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. And though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge, and have not charity, I am nothing." But how much further may a person go in attainments and still not be a vital christian? Hear Paul—"Though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." But still further than this a man may go in services, and not be the efficient means of salting the world so that they may be saved to life eternal. Hear Paul again. "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."

How plain then it is, that none of the above mentioned things are positive evidence of a real christian. Where, then, says one, is the line of distinction? "By their faith ye shall know them." Hold, friend. Is that the way to read it? No. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Now for what the fruits are. Gal. v. 19–24. The apostle first describes the evil fruits. Hear him. "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like: of the which, I tell you, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Now for the dividing line that makes a separation, as unmistakable as the finger-board that points the way to a city, or the letters on a soldier's cap, which tell what company or regiment he belongs to. Hear Paul—"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law; and they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts."

The Saviour says, "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit; neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit; therefore, by their fruits ye shall know them." O, may the Spirit of God stir up the professed people of God to the inmost soul to live out these heaven-born principles, that God's people may be known and read of all men, is the prayer of your isolated friend.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will est where it ought.

ARTICLES "TO BE CONTINUED."—Our usual course has been to require that all such articles shall be sent to us completed before we commence to publish them; or else we use our discretion on the several parts as they are sent, without saying they are "to be continued;" for we cannot promise that parts shall appear in our columns that we have not seen, and coming from those with whom we, perhaps, have no personal acquaintance. To this course we must adhere, otherwise we become the mere tool of those who choose to write things entirely foreign to the objects for which this paper was established. The first "ARTICLE" of the Constitution of "THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION" expresses the object we have in view, viz., "To promulgate the dotrines of Life only in Christ, the proximate advent of Lord Jesus," etc.

To suppose we shall turn aside from these objects to discuss the question whether the second advent did not occur eighteen hundred years ago, or whether the New Jerusalem was not then established on the earth, in some spiritual manner, and kindred subjects, we judge to be entirely aside from our object and work, and is making a claim on the paper not demanded. We must and we shall use our best judgment in reference to articles sent us, while we continue to occupy our present position as Editor. If any are not satisfied with this course, we are sorry, and regret to disoblige them: but "better one suffer than many." We consider the point settled, beyond all rational controversy, that the second advent of our Lord is yet future, and the New Jerusalem, also. We have examined the opposite views till we are satisfied all controversy in that direction is useless and uncalled for. If others think differently, we judge them not, but they must excuse us for declining to discuss these subjects in our columns.

TO JAMES BORTHWICK, ENGLAND.—DEAR SIR: Your note of the 28 ult., has just come to hand. There are none of the works in our Catalogue of Books, &c., to be had in England, that we are aware of. A draft on New York is the only means we know, to remit money here. Books and Pamphlets weighing over eight ounces are subject to letter postage. Pamphlets weighing less than eight ounces and over two are subject to a charge of four cents per ounce. This rate amounts nearly to a prohibition from the mail. The only way to send such works is to do it through some forwarding house in this city.

The Truth Advancing.

LETTER FROM HON. O. S. HALSTED.

NEWARK, N. J., Mar. 17, 1867.

REV. GEORGE STORRS:—Dear Sir:—I received yesterday from a clergyman who had before written for and obtained a copy of "The Theology of the Bible," a letter dated Mar. 14, from which I make the following extracts:

"For the short time I have owned your very valuable work I have perused it with much interest.

"I have, for some years, attributed the, I might almost say, jargon of Theological teaching to a want of an honest investigation of the original Scriptures. THE BIBLE THEOLOGY commences an era in this particular which will do much good by way of creating a stronger desire to know what the Word of God really does say.

"I now write especially to enquire whether you have seen a work by Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D., professor in Chicago Theological Seminary, published by the American Tract Society. It is written especally to overthrow the position you have [since] taken in your THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE. The two works are antipodes, at least in object or teaching. I look upon them as representative works of their respective views. Doct. Bartlett's work was called out by the necessity of the times (in the estimation of those holding his views), and to meet that want it was prepared and published. It is looked upon by some as completely overthrowing the dogma (the word used by those some) of the unconscious state of the dead and non-resurrection of the wicked. No doubt many would like to see a review of that work from your pen—at any rate I should like to know your estimation of the work."

To the enquiry made in the above letter, I answer, through your paper, that I have it to say that I had never heard or known of the existence of Doctor Bartlett's work until I received that letter.

In answer to the writer's suggestion I will only say now, that "The Theology of the Bible," attentively read, will, I have no doubt, be the best review of Doctor Bartlett's work; inasmuch as it gives the Theoslogos—God-word—Theology—of the Bible. And I am very much of the opinion of another gentleman who wrote for a copy, expressed thus: "I have hoped, for years, to see some one, duly qualified by a knowledge of the originals, give to the world a correct and unbiased version of the Bible; but I had about given up the expectation. I think such a work will never issue from the theological schools."

From remarks of like nature, in many of the letters requesting copies, I have been made wiser than I was. I was not at all aware how extensively the doctrines established by "The Theology of the Bible" had become prevalent in the land. The American Tract Society and Doctor Bartlett were much wiser in that respect than I was. Hence they felt "the necessity of the times."

I am, Sir, faithfully, your fellow servant.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We perfectly agree with Judge HALSTED that the best refutation of all such works as Prof. Bartlett's is a thorough study of THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE. It roots up the last vestige of the immortal-soul theory, and of the future-torment system, whether temporary or eternal. It leaves the wicked dead where the Bible leaves them: they "shall remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi. 16. That is their eternal doom

"The Theology of the Bible."

JUDGE HALSTED, in this work after introducing remarks from Milton, Locke, and Archbishop Whately, showing that these eminent men did not believe in inherent immortality, says:

"From other parts of these writings of Milton and Locke, and Whately, I am disposed to think that they believed in the resurrection of both just and unjust. Now I ask: For what purpose? They all reject the notion of inherent immortality. They all hold that the whole man dies, is mortal. It is as mortal, therefore, that man sins, and as a mortal being that he dies. Is he to be raised from the grave a different kind of being, an immortal being; to have immortality thrust upon him, that he may be able to suffer eternal conscious misery for sins he committed as a mortal being? Certainly neither of them could hold this. The only other idea they could entertain would be this: that all, good and bad, will be raised up to be judged, and that the wicked will be again subjected to death. But death is the wages, that is, the penalty, punishment of sin. We are all condemned already, scripture saith; condemned to death; under sentence of death: and death is the execution of the penalty; from which executed penalty they who die in Christ will be redeemed. Are the wicked to be raised up after the execution of the penalty, to be subjected to a second execution of the penalty? The idea is absurd, and has no foundation whatever in the true scriptures, the Hebrew of the old Testament and the Greek of the New. If either of these writers entertain any such idea, it must have been because their other voluminous writings occupied so much of their life that they had not time to prepare themselves to consult properly the original scriptures; and so never got rid of the effect of early instructions as to Resurrection."

Judge HALSTED, speaking of Dean Alford's remarks on John v., says:

"When he comes to v. 28, 29, his orthodoxy impels him to the use of language nowhere to be found in the Bible, 'the general resurrection;' and he says, the general resurrection must be meant in these verses, because 'they who have heard, or, who hear,' is not given in them! He has the candor to tell us, that Olshausen says this verse 29, and Acts xxiv. 15, are the 'only direct declaration in the New Testament of a bodily resurrection of the unjust as well as of the just.' Alford then says, 'It is implied in some places, e. g., Matt. x. 28, and less plainly in Matt. xxv. 34, and the verses following that; Rev. xx. 5, 12; and directly asserted in the Old Testament, Dan. xii. 2. In 1 Cor. xv,—as the object was to convince believers in Christ of the truth of the resurrection of their bodies—no allusion is made to those who are not believers.' The words in Italics, as well those given from Olshausen as those of Alford, are in Italics in Alford's note. Here then we have from the Orthodox Doctor Olshausen, 'that this, and Acts xxiv. 15,' are 'the only direct declaration in the New Testament of a bodily resurrection of the unjust as well as of the just.' Well, Doctor, your term direct seems to imply that you think there are indirect declarations in the New Testamennt of a bodily resurrection of the unjust. If that is your meaning, where do you find what you call an indirect declaration of it? By indirect, do you mean what Alford means by 'It is implied?' And do you for this refer to the same passages Alford refers to? Again, Doctor, you say, 'that this and Acts xxiv. 15 are 'the only direct declaration in the New Testament of a bodily resurrection of the unjust.' Do you mean that we shall understand you to say, that there is some such declaration in the Old Testament, direct or indirect? If you do, do you rely, as does Alford, on Dan. xii. 2? And do you say, as does Alford, that the resurrection of the unjust is there directly asserted? Do you, as does he, and other Orthodoxists, read all for many in that verse, and read the rest of that verse to suit your word all? Did you or Alford ever read the Old Testament in the original? If you had done that, instead of expending so much labor, and so much of what you and he, no doubt, think to be learning, in attempts to chisel and square scripture to a theory, and that a theory prepared to your hand by the Romish church, you would have learned, that the Old Testament is full of direct declarations that the unjust will not be raised from the dead. And that would have taught you, that your reading all for many in Dan. xii. 2, and your reading the rest of that verse so as to suit your word all and to suit your theory, is a boldness of interpretation which you might not have been willing to exhibit. You would hardly have had the boldness to attempt, by such a reading as you give that verse, to make it contradict all scripture. Is it that you, Doctors, and all Orthodoxists, are so inflexibly bent on immortal-soulism and the resurrection of the unjust to eternal conscious misery, that you insist on reading this verse Dan. xii. 2, in the way you read it? Do you really, from a single passage in the Old Testament, and that from the way in which you would have us read it, mean to say that the Old Testament teaches the resurrection of the unjust, and that to eternal conscious suffering? Again, Dr. Olshausen, what do you mean by 'bodily resurrection of the unjust?' There is no such language in the Bible as the resurrection of the body. Of course your language 'bodily resurrection' is used to match your immortal-soulism.

"Alford does not tell us whether Olshausen reads the chapter xv. of 1 Cor. as he, Alford does. Very likely he does; for I heard, very lately, a distinguished Orthodox D. D., (with whom I had never before conversed) say, that Paul's argument in that chapter was not an argument on the general subject of resurrection, but only an argument to prove that the just would be raised!

"I now repeat what Alford says of that chapter: 'The object was to convince believers in Christ of the truth of the resurrection of their bodies,—no allusion is made to those who are not believers,' Italicising the words above Italicised.

"The overwhelming argument of the logical Paul in that chapter, both for the resurrection of the just and the non-resurrection of the unjust, must be got rid of by orthodoxy in some way or other. When we come to that chapter we shall see the puerility of the effort made to evade it. And when we come to Acts xxiv. 15, we shall see that the effort made to derive the notion of the resurrection of the unjust from that verse is equally puerile. And equally so is the effort to derive that notion from John v. 29, given above. It is well for us, reader, thus to have driven orthodoxy to its cover, its fancied but easily penetrated fastness: well for us thus to have learned that on these two verses last mentioned, and in the face of all scripture as we have now learned it from the originals, orthodoxy builds its erroneous theory: attempting, indeed to bolster it by a bold mis-reading of Dan. xii 2, and an utter misconception, or misteaching, as to the scope of Paul's argument in chapter xv. of first Corinthians."

On the text John v. 28, 29, Judge HALSTED speaks as follows:

"Gr., Do not wonder at this: for shall come (an) hour in he, which hoi, those, in tois, those, mnemeiois, secure places where precious things are stored up and preserved, shall hear the word, or voice, of him, v. 29, And shall be caused to go out of, or emanate from, hoi those, the good having done, eis in, (a) resurrection of life: those but the bad having done in (a) resurrection of krisis, final issue: Lat., of judicium judgment, doom: Rheims, unto the resurrection of judgment: Ital., in resurrection of condemnation: E. V., unto the resurrection of damnation. [This verse cannot, and was not intended by the Christ to show that the wicked will be raised: it would overturn the uniform and unbroken testimony of scripture to the contrary. The word mnemeiois used by him disproves any such intention. Again: It will not be known to whom the grave is the final issue, the condemnation, but by their not rising: hence, it is not the wicked who will rise, but their condemnation, final issue: and the text in the Gr. is in entire accordance with the Christ's usus loquendi—mode of speaking.

Adam vs. Albert; or, Which Misinterprets?

In his work, "Life from the Dead," the Editor of this paper starts out with the "principle" that "Punishment cannot justly exceed the Threatening." An obvious application of this would be to say, that, if endless misery was not affixed to the Edenic prohibition as the penalty of its violation, the infliction of so dire a punishment upon our sinning first parents would have been an infringement of justice. Theologians, however, affirm that this terrible penalty was comprehended in the primitive menace, "thou shalt surely die." But, in assuming this ground, there is one point to which they do not seem very generally to have given their close attention. It is this: How may we suppose the threat was probably understood by Adam himself? To believers in immortality only through Christ the answer to this question seems a plain one; and right here, we may add, they plant themselves with unbounded confidence in their warfare upon the penal code of a creed-bound, traditional theology. "Unto dust shalt thou return" they maintain is an explicit refutation of the post-mortem torment dogmas of the Church. They cannot conceive that the Supreme Lawgiver would say unto Adam, "Because thou hast done this thing" thus and so it shall be, unless He designed to announce the highest consequences of disobedience. And while they are unable to conceive this, they at the same time know, beyond the possibility of mistake, that in the announcement of consequences which was actually made, torment in an after life was not included. To them, therefore, the conclusion is inevitable that the first sin did not involve the peril of suffering beyond the grave.

But we designed merely to offer an introductory word. We wish to lay before the reader the remarks of the eminent commentator, Albert Barnes, on the point respecting Adam's interpretation of the original Death penalty. Mr. Barnes believes that said penalty, in its actual intent, did include eternal misery; the proof that he thus believes appears more fully in remarks of his which we do not now transcribe. But he is clear in the opinion that Adam did not so understand the matter. As between Adam and Albert, therefore, we ask, Which misinterprets? The following is from Mr. Barnes's Notes on Romans v. 12. R. W.

"And death by sin." Death was the consequence of sin; or was introduced because man sinned. This is a simple statement of an obvious and well known fact. It is repeating simply what is said in Gen. iii. 19, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return into the ground, for out of it wast thou taken, for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." The threatening was (Gen. ii. 17), "Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." If an inquiry be made here, how Adam would understand this; I reply, that we have no reason to think he would understand it as refering to any thing more than the loss of life as an expression of the displeasure of God. Moses does not intimate that he was learned in the nature of laws and penalties; and his narrative would lead us to suppose that this was all that would occur to Adam. And indeed, there is the highest evidence that the case admits of; that this was his understanding of it. For in the account of the infliction of the penalty after the law was violated; in God's own interpretation of it, in Gen. iii. 19, there is still no reference to any thing further. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Now it is incredible that Adam should have understood this as referring to what has been called "spiritual death," and to "eternal death," when neither in the threatening, nor in the account of the infliction of the sentence, is there the slightest recorded reference to it. Men have done great injury in the cause of correct interpretation by carrying their notions of doctrinal subjects to the explanation of words and phrases in the Old Testament. They have usually described Adam as endowed with all the refinement, and possessed of all the knowledge, and adorned with all the metaphysical acumen and subtlety of a modern theologian. They have deemed him qualified, in the very infancy of the world, to understand and discuss questions, which under all the light of christian revelation, still perplex and embarrass the human mind. After these accounts of the endowments of Adam, which occupy so large a space in books of theology, one is surprised, on opening the Bible, to find how unlike all this is the simple statement in Genesis. And the wonder cannot be suppressed that men should describe the obvious infancy of the race as superior to its highest advancement; or that the first man, just looking upon a world of wonders, imperfectly acquainted with law, and moral relations, and the effects of transgression, should be represented as endowed with knowledge which four thousand years afterwards it required the advent of the Son of God to communicate! The account in Moses is simple. Created man was told not to violate a simple law, on pain of death. He did it, and God announced to him that the sentence would be inflicted, and that he should return to the dust whence he was taken. What else this might involve; what other consequences sin might introduce, might be the subject of future developments and revelations. It is absurd to suppose that all the consequences of the violation of a law can be foreseen, or must necessarily be foreseen, in order to make the law and the penalty just. It is sufficient that the law be known; that its violation be forbidden; and what the consequences of that violation will be, must be left in great part to future developments. Even we, yet know not half the results of violating the law of God. The murderer knows not the results fully of taking a man's life. He breaks a just law, and exposes himself to the numberless unseen woes which may flow from it.

From a Leaf of my Diary.

Sept. 16, 1865. Thoughts turn on a scene in the winter of 1815, Feb. 20. There seemed to be a voice that said "Step lightly over the threshold, for the inmates' hearts are full of grief." Why? In the habiliments of death lay our infant boy; hushed is the tiny wail; closed was the speaking eye; but beautiful in death was the image, with its high, placid brow, its lily whiteness, its dreamless repose. O my Saviour, when I contemplate this incident in my life, my tears will flow. When I look back over half a century, and feel that then I was but a child, and standing by the grave of our second child, our darling William H., my mind is overflowing with the events of the years that have wheeled their rounds since then, and have gone with all their sorrows, their darkness, and sin; and their light, and joy, and faith, with all the years that have been since creation. But bless God, my hope, my faith, my joy remains; and the bright side of the picture is so glorious by the reason of the glory God has shed upon it, that it has given to the dark side a borrowed light that makes the contrast beautiful. O, it is Thy hand dealing with us, and the mercy to us through Jesus Christ our Lord, that makes all time reflect thy goodness. Give me a thankful heart for this life, for in it I see many way-marks to glory; many an Ebenezer that I have raised, because thus far the Lord has helped me. Thou hast given me long life, almost 71 years. Yes, it seems very long. O, how much has been crowded into that 71 years! When I look over the thousand things that are laid up on memory's shelves, perhaps carelessly, I often disturb many little things, and down they come like falling leaves, claiming a passing notice. To-night one leaf demands more than a passing glance. Why? Because there is a name written upon it that touches a chord in the sweet music of our hearts, that no other earthly name can; it is "My mother." O, how many will in the end bless God for a praying, godly mother. O how full of meaning are those beautiful lines,

ROCK ME TO SLEEP, MOTHER.

Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight;
Make me a child again just for to-night.
Mother, come back from the echoless shore,
Take me again to your heart, as of yore;
Kiss from my forehead the furrows of care,
Smooth all the silver threads out of my hair;
Over my slumbers your loving watch keep,
Rock me to sleep, mother, rock me to sleep.

POLLY G. PITTS.

"The Atonement."

TO ELD. C. B. TURNER, BY MRS. L. R. K. BISHOP.

DEAR BR.:—The Crisis of Feb. 20th contains an interesting article from your pen on the "Atonement," which doctrine you justly style "The great sun or centre around which other doctrines revolve." In reading your article I was more than pleased to see that one step at least, and that an important one, had been taken in the right direction; and especially so as it presented such a striking contrast to the "babel of confused tongues" that has seemed to pervade the columns of that paper, on the Adamic penalty, and consequently on the atonement.

After an effort, kindly and gently put forth, to clear away some of the rubbish that had accumulated, you planted your feet on the foundation which a Greater than human hands had laid, in these emphatic words, "I affirm it (the penalty for Adamic sin) to be an eternal forfeiture of Adamic or blood life." This is a solid foundation on which to build, but in rearing the superstructure, permit me to say, I thought you made use of considerable "wood, hay, and stubble," which greatly marred the beauty of the edifice. The object of this article is to remove, if possible, some of these materials (which being light, even weak hands may suffice to do) and see if the building will not thereby be improved. It should be an enduring structure—built on such a foundation. And I look with "infinite yearnings," to see it go up as though every stone had been hewn in the mountain by the hand of the great Architect; and so fitted as to come together without the sound of a hammer.

The first point I will notice is contained in the following paragraph:

"If it (the Adamic penalty) was an eternal forfeiture, and Christ did not design to bring back the forfeited life, but only to give another kind of life (or eternal life), then there is no need of Christ dying, for he could give the dead another kind of life (eternal life) without dying, and let the law eternally hold the Adamic or blood life. The dead would have as good a right to accept another kind of life, as you would have to accept another farm, after you had lost your own by forfeiture, and could not redeem it."

That "the dead have a right to accept another kind of life" (eternal life) I freely admit; and if pressed for the proof, should urge the fact that just that kind of life, and no other, has been offered for their acceptance. "This is the record that God hath given us eternal life, and this life (not blood life) is in his Son. Every one that taketh hold of the Son, taketh hold of" this very kind of life. Again. "The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven and giveth life to the world." What kind of life does this bread give? "If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." "This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die." ("Not die" in the sense in which the maid was "not dead, but sleepeth.") "Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life;" and as a result of having this kind of life, "I will raise him up at the last day." From these, and a multitude of other texts, we learn that it was "eternal life" which Christ came to bring to that perishing race, whose only life is eternally forfeited to the law. But does it therefore follow that "there is no need of Christ dying"? I think not. In the second paragraph of your article, you truly say, "The Adamic life is a forfeited life, whether it be found in Daniel, David, Job, or any of the posterity." Christ "was made of the seed of David according to the flesh." "He took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham." "The children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part in the same," or in other words, was made "in the likeness of sinful flesh."

Now the moment that Christ, for benevolent purposes toward us, took on him our nature, and was made in the likeness of sinful flesh, that moment he virtually laid down his life for us, and might well say, "No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself:" for the life of that nature being forfeited, the law will surely claim it, "whether it be found in Daniel, David, Job," the infant, or in the Son of Mary! But more on this by and by. In your remarks on the atonement you say:

"The Adamic life being in the blood, and that being lost forever, how can Christ make an atonement or reconciliation? By giving his (blood) life a ransom for the life of the world. And as Christ makes a voluntary sacrifice of his blood life, he does it 'once for all;' and, as the result, purchases the Adamic family. The law takes hold of the life of Christ, and lets go of the life of the race of Adam. The law is satisfied, and every one in the Adamic family is justified to life by Jesus Christ. Therefore the Adamic or blood life, and that alone, stands redeemed....And as Christ only makes a sacrifice of a blood life, his Father has a right to give, and Christ has a right to receive, another kind of life; therefore his Father raises him to life, to die no more."....As the penalty was the eternal forfeiture of the Adamic or blood life, and Christ having met the claims of law for man by the eternal sacrifice of his own life blood, all men have a right to a blood life through Christ, as a free gift."

Now I must object to the idea that "the law takes hold of the life of Christ, and lets go of the life of the race of Adam;" being thereby satisfied. You maintain, and it is vital to your argument, that the life of Christ is not forfeited to the law. Now the law demands not merely a blood life, but the blood life OF THE OFFENDER: and any arrangement that lets the blood life of the offender slip through the fingers of the law, can never satisfy its demands. Neither could it "declare"—make manifest or apparent—God's "righteousness; that he might be just, and the justifier [not of the whole Adamic family, but] of him which believeth in Jesus."

Another objection. With this view, Christ makes an eternal surrender of his blood life, and receives from his Father another kind of life; while the church have their blood life restored to them; which would present the strange anomaly of a head quickened and vitalized by another life principle than that which flows through the body!

One point more I will notice. You say:

"As forgiven sins are never punished, therefore none will die the second death but the unrepenting sinner."

If you mean by this that forgiveness always implies a remission of penalty, I must demur. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you," is doubtless as applicable to parents in dealing with disobedient children, as to others; and yet who shall say there are not instances, where the majesty of parental law absolutely demands a faithful execution of the penalty of disobedience? Again: the case of Moses is in point. God was angry with him at the waters of strife, and refused to let him go over Jordan, as a punishment for his sin; and no amount of pleading, on the part of Moses, could change his purpose or cause him to remit the penalty. But I have got to learn that Moses died an unforgiven sinner.

Once more. "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, her iniquity is pardoned; for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." The idea of pardon, then, or forgiveness, does not necessarily imply a remission of penalty; but may relate to certain feelings and dispositions of the heart which the offended party entertains toward the offender.

I will now cease trying to pull down, and endeavor to build up. We have seen that the race of Adam is a condemned race; a race of sinners in the eyes of the law. "We are by nature," says the apostle, "children of wrath, even as others:" and the penalty of that law under which the race was tried and condemned, in the person of their head and representative, is the eternal forfeiture of blood life; which is the only life man possesses by virtue of his creation. What a lost, hopeless, perishing condition is this; and the question before us is, How "can these dry bones live"? or, in other words, How can this race, or any portion of it, ever be brought again from the dust of death, where the law leaves it when it claims its own, and thus be saved from perishing; and yet God be just? The problem is solved—the answer given. He whose justice is infinite, is infinite also in his resources; and "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The Son himself thus announces the object of his mission. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have that which is excellent." (Syriac.)

The better to bring this "excellent," "everlasting life," within the reach of man, Christ was sent into the world. He came—a light—that believers might not walk in darkness. He came as an example, that we should follow in his steps. Destined to bring "many sons to glory," through scenes of "suffering," he refused not to be "made perfect" as "the Captain of their salvation," by taking lessons in the same school. He knew our griefs by experience. He took upon him our sorrows with our nature. He could "be touched with the feeling of our infirmities," because "he was tempted in all points like as we are." He overcame by virtue of that divine nature which he possessed. That nature the plan of redemption designs making us partakers of, thereby enabling us to perfect a character like his, to overcome as he overcame, and with the same results.

Thus we have before us, in the life of Christ while here in the flesh, a perfect illustration of the practical working of the only plan ever devised to save perishing man. But every reason above hinted at, yea, every reason that exists in the economy of God, why Christ should take upon him our nature, are just so many reasons why he should die. "The blood life of the offender" animates that nature; and consequently flowed in the veins of him" who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." Therefore, though he came to give "another kind of life," even "eternal life;" and "the dead have a right to accept" it; yet there is a necessity for his death.

But if the law had a claim on the life of Christ, how are we "justified by his blood?" Clearly, "through faith in his blood," and through faith only. Faith is the medium through which "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus" must come to us; if it comes at all. The second Adam, like the first, was the representative of a race. The first Adam represented a race of animal beings only; the second, a race of animal beings after a spiritual element has been introduced. When we believe in Christ, and accept him as our Saviour, we are thereby "made partakers of the divine nature:" and he becomes not only our example in his life, but our representative in his death and resurrection. And when on the cross of Calvary he magnifies the law by giving it just what is its due, we, in a sense, are crucified with him: that is, his blood poured out not only satisfies the law's claims on him, but becomes a standing pledge that its claims on those he represents shall eventually be met; so that the law looks as kindly on us who believe as though its demands were already satisfied. Thus we are "justified by his blood;" and "being justified by faith (in his blood) we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

But we must not forget that the resurrection of Christ occupies as important a place in the divine scheme of justification as does his death; inasmuch as, though his death were a certainty, yet had he failed of a resurrection we had been "yet in our sins," and they also that had fallen asleep in Christ had perished. "He rose AGAIN for our justification." But how so? His resurrection becomes the pledge of ours, and demonstrates its practibility; if we sustain a given relation to the divine arrangement; if, like him, we are partakers of the divine nature, and are possessed of a principle of spiritual life, he becomes truly our representative; and like him we can give the law its just due, and yet "not perish," but be raised to immortality by virtue of that divine life-principle on which the law never had any claim. Thus God is just, even while he justifies to life "him that believeth in Jesus."

Here we have harmony; a fitness of things, not only as respects the agent employed in bringing "again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ," and those who are his followers, but also as respects the state into which a resurrection shall usher them. He was "put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit;"—while to them it is said, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

The Head being raised from the dead, "dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." The body being "accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead....neither can they die any more, but are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

But what can be said of those who have failed to secure the life proffered in the plan, by refusing to comply with the clearly revealed conditions? Those who have not believed on him "who was lifted up," nor eaten "the bread which came down from heaven?" What can be said of them, only that they have "no life in them"? no principle of life to bring them again from the dead when the law shall claim its own; and they must utterly, absolutely, and eternally perish. "THEY SHALL NEVER SEE LIFE, but the wrath of God abideth on them."

Thus the building is reared in harmony with its foundation, and "the cap-stone" (Christ, our only source of life) has been brought forth "with shoutings of grace unto it!"

All of which is submitted for the truth's sake, by MRS. L. R. K. BISHOP.

The Catacombs: Their Testimony.

In Judge HALSTED'S work on "The Theology of the Bible," pages 628–630, we find the following remarks:

A short time since, a gentleman showed me a notice in a newspaper of a book entitled, The Resurrection of the Dead, by Rev. H. Mattison, D. D. I procured it. It was published in 1866. Bishop Simpson, in an Introduction, highly recommends it. I have read it. I soon found that the author was only an E. V. scholar, and that he was loaded with the dogma—the immortal soul. But the first part of his third chap. afforded me great satisfaction. It gave me a third witness to the testimony which the Catacombs of Rome give of what primitive christianity was. He says: These Catacombs are the burial place of the early christian martyrs during the first three centuries of the christian church. He then gives Bishop Kip's account of his visit to them. He quotes the Bishop as saying: We were wandering among the dead in Christ: in that subterranean city where are deposited the ashes of hundreds of thousands who died in the faith of Christ, and whose remains were deposited there by their friends and brethren of like precious faith. Upon the slabs or the adjoining rock are numerous inscriptions and symbols indicative as well of the faith of those who were buried as those who buried them. That some of these inscriptions date back to less than 40 years after the crucifixion. That these inscriptions furnish conclusive evidence, not only that the christians of that period believed in a resurrection, but that they looked for a resurrection of the identical bodies laid in the tomb. Hence the Phœnix, fabled as rising to life from its own ashes, is one of the common symbols upon their tombs. That the cock, suggesting the morning of the resurrection; and a fish, or sea-monster, ejecting a man from his stomach, are often to be met with; the latter an allusion to Jonas, says the Bishop. That another symbol is, a sculptured representation of the resurrection of Lazarus. That though many of the inscriptions speak of the "rest," or "sleep" of the dead, they also speak of their future resurrection. "You will arise; a temporary rest is granted you." That a number of the symbols represented the resurrection of Christ.

This witness,—Bishop Kip, like the other two witnesses whose testimony we have before had, did not find a single inscription or symbol that gives any countenance to the dogma—the immortal soul, or the resurrection of the unjust. If he had, we may be sure he would not have omitted to give it. The Bishop seems to have seen the effect of the absence of any such inscription or symbol: for he takes care afterwards to say: "So full was the hope of the martyrs of the first three centuries of the christian church with the idea of immortality for the body as well as the soul, that, &c." The Bishop's word soul means, of course, Orthodoxy's immortal soul. Thank you, Bishop. We don't want your orthodoxy. You have given us the testimony of the Catacombs: no word from you can affect that.

The idea pervading Scripture is, restoration of mankind to the state before the fall, in a repaired, renewed, earth and heavens. Whately, p. 192, says: "The eternal habitation of the blest is described by the Apostle as 'new heavens and a new earth,' meaning by 'heavens' the air we breathe and sky over our heads, as he means by 'earth' the place on which we dwell." In 2 Pet. iii: 13, Peter says: "We look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth [shall dwell, present for future,] righteousness:" [i. e., a righteous mankind]; where the Christ, or that righteousness of which he was the pre-eminent example, shall reign. Orthodoxdy's system is, a touch for an instant on this planet, and thereby a change into another kind of creature, to go to some other orb or place; some to the orthodox hell, and some to the orthodox heaven.

A single further remark as to the testimony of the Catacombs: All know the character of the inscriptions put on tombstones of dead by immortal-soul believers. If the christianity of the primitive christians had been that which afterwards came to prevail and now prevails, their inscriptions would necessarily have been of the same character. That they are what they are, is conclusive proof that their christianity was:

"The just by Faith, shall live again."

Is it true?

Poets, by general consent, are allowed a license denied to others! A popular preacher or lecturer can say about as much as they please, how they please, and when they please. A man head and shoulders taller, intellectually, than his fellows, it makes no difference in what his superior talent consists, nor how used, his sentiments may be adverse to religion or good morals, or they may have high sound, and more than pass muster in a religious point of view; but how many among men stop and consider as to the truthfulness of the sentiments sung by poets or declaimed by orators? For a moment let us deal with some of the religious poetry, which passes current; is gulped and sung by the tens of thousands calling themselves christian; and with what ecstasy of feeling we who have sung it know.

Vital spark of heavenly flame!
Quit, O quit this mortal frame.
Trembling, hoping, lingering flying,
O the pain, the bliss of dying!
Cease fond nature, cease the strife,
And let me languish into life.

Hark! they whisper: angels say,
"Sister spirit, come away."
—What is this absorbs me quite,—
Steals my senses, shuts my sight,
Drowns my spirit, draws my breath?
Tell me, my soul, can this be death!
The world recedes: it disappears!
Heaven opens to my eyes; my ears
With sound seraphic ring.
Lord, lend your wings! I mount! I fly!
O grave! where is thy victory?
O Death! where is thy sting?

Alexander Pope wrote this, and how many have questioned the truthfulness of it? It is doubtless good poetry, but a shameful perversion of the Bible account of death. Surely no such language is found in God's Book.

Another, and still another, and more yet can be offered on this subject:

My soul, be on thy guard;
Ten thousand foes arise;
The hosts of sin are pressing hard
To draw thee from the skies.
* * * * * * * *
Fight on my soul, till death
Shall bring thee to thy God;
He'll take thee, at thy parting breath,
To his divine abode.

Heath, wrote this, and in it expresses the sentiments of the masses. The question is, Is it true? For one, I contend against all such heathenism. Yes, worse than heathenism! Why, and how do you know it is untrue?

"To the law and the testimony; if they"—any—"speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light" (margin, morning) "in them."

"How readest thou?" is the question; not so much, What do you hear? In my reading of the lively oracles, I find nothing therein about "vital spark of heavenly flame," nor about "sister spirits," nor "drowning of spirits," nor of the borrowing of wings in order this drowning spirit may mount and fly; nor that when death—which the scripture styles "the last enemy"—takes hold on its victim, then we sing,

"O grave! where is thy victory?
O death! where is thy sting?"

Nay, verily, the apostle Paul intimated no such thing when he quoted Hosea xiii. 14. He says, 1 Cor. xv. 51, "Behold I show you a mystery, we shall not all sleep (die), but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump"—not at death—"for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead"—NOT the "vital spark"—"shall be raised incorruptible. and we shall be changed"....."So, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, THEN shall be brought to pass the saying that is written" (in Isaiah xxv. 8,) "Death is swallowed up in victory." And Paul closes his admirable argument by giving God—not death—the thanks for deliverance and victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

If the Bible is true—I believe it is—then Pope, Heath, Wesley, and others who have written poetry, have done much harm in giving the mind a bias for that which is not true, thereby leading poor mortals into all kinds of vagaries about "deathless spirits"—"undying worms"—"immortal souls"—"death that never dies," and all such expressions, none of which are contained in God's Book. Having referred to C. Wesley, I will quote from:

A charge to keep I have;
A God to glorify;
A never dying soul to save,
And fit it for the sky;
* * * * * * * * *
Help me to watch and pray
And on thyself rely;
Assured if I my trust betray
I shall forever die.

How a "never dying soul," can yet "forever die," puzzle me; and were it not that the word of the Lord discountenances all such trash, and offers a clearer view of what the soul is, and when the reward is given, then might we attach such importance as the foregoing poetry claims. Thanks be to God for a happy deliverance from orthodoxy—so-called—on this subject, and also from spiritualism, the outgrowth of the fable of the soul's inherent immortality.

Obituary.

FELL ASLEEP IN JESUS, Feb. 28, Emily, wife of DAVID W. WHITE, Philadelphia. She had been a great sufferer for many years, and often seemingly at the point of death, but endured as seeing Him who is invisible. We first became acquainted with Br. WHITE'S family about 1842. At that time we hardly supposed Sister WHITE could live but a short time; but the Lord prolonged her life till the present year. Her sufferings were terrible when the crisis arrived; but when informed that they would soon end, she received the tidings calmly and resignedly. She said, she knew in whom she had trusted, and that she loved her Saviour, and that all things work together for good to them that love him. She called her children—an only son and daughter—and her husband around her and gave them loving messages, hoping she might meet them all in the better land. She specially desired that "Br. Storrs" should speak at her funeral. We regret that we felt unable to go at that time.

Br. White had written us a letter of sympathy, on the death of our Son, dated Feb. 27th, and in a P. S. added, "Mrs. White was taken suddenly and seriously ill day before yesterday." This letter was detained till March 1st, and then his son added to it the intelligence of his mother's death and the few facts stated above. We have waited to hear from some one in Philadelphia before giving this notice, but have received no new information for the public.

Br. White's letter of sympathy, to us, contains the best we could say to him, and shows that he understands where true consolation is to be found. May our gracious and covenant God grant him and his bereaved children that divine support which their sore trial calls for.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

Congress has been busy closing up its labors preparatory to adjournment to next fall. A bill has passed to provide for the more careful carrying out the great Reconstruction measure to restore the South back to the Union. A resolution has been adopted to have a survey made for a ship canal between Lakes Erie and Ontario.

The wisdom of the Reconstruction plan, stringent as its provisions are, and so offensive to the old prejudices of the Southern whites, is amply justified by the great success it has already met with all over that long disturbed and suffering portion of our country. Instead of breeding increased discord and contention between the two races, it has had directly the opposite tendency. South Carolina, always regarded the most ultra in its prejudices against conceding anything like social or political equality to the blacks, not only acquiesces in the plan adopted by Congress, but is heartily engaged in giving it effect in accordance with its spirit and intent. We give elsewhere an account of a meeting held in the capital of that State, to show how cordially the leading fire-eaters and their late slaves can fraternize.

COLUMBIA, S. C., March 18.—One of the most remarkable meetings ever held in South Carolina took place to-day, the occasion being a celebration by the negroes of the passage of the bill enfranchising the black race. By invitation Gen. Wade Hampton, ex-U. S. Senator; W. F. Desaussure, Edward Arthur, the Hon. W. J. Talley, and James G. Gibbs addreseed the meeting; also, the Rev. David Pickett, and Beverly Nash, both colored. Sentiments were expressed highly honorable to both sides. The negroes are gratified with the spirit of political affiliation with which they have been met, and the citizens are equally pleased to find the colored men identified with the true interests of the State. Should a Convention be called, the latter will probably nominate and support the best men in the country, and, as declared by Mr. Nash, will urge Congress to repeal the disfranchising clause.

SAVANNAH, GA., March 18.—A meeting was held here to-day, at which about 3,000 negroes were present. Three white and five colored speakers addressed the assmblage. The speeches were confined to the topics of Universal Suffrage and the right to sit on juries. The affair passed off very quietly.

FOREIGN.

The Fenian troubles in Ireland continue as fierce as ever. No sooner is one insurrection put down than another breaks out, often in the same quarter as the previous one. A number of lives have been sacrificed, but no stand has been made where the insurgents can concentrate to organize their forces. The heroic efforts of the down-trodden people of Ireland against their oppressors is awakening a sympathy all over the world kindred to that felt for the struggling Cretans in Candia.

No one who watches the course of political events in Europe can fail to be struck with the strong revolutionary tendency which it manifests. Even the so-called constitutional governments are afflicted by it. The progress of education and the influence of newspapers, the electrice telegraph, railroads of steam navigation are unsettling all the old political ideas and originating new ones.

The later advices from Mexico do not yet bring us the expected news of the great battle at or near Queretaro. But the concentration of Imperial and Republican forces about that city continued, and Maximilian in particular seemed disposed to stake his all on the issue of the approaching battle. Should he be defeated, the whole Empire will collapse at once. A defeat of the Liberals might prolong the war, without, however, adding in the least to the Emperor's prospects of ultimate success.

It would not be surprising if—as a Cable dispatch states—Austria had joined Russia in advising the Porte to cede Crete to Greece. The present Ministry of Austria has abandoned the past policy of the Empire in the Eastern as well as in many other questions. But the alliance of France in this affair with Russia and Austria would take the world by surprise, for the utterances of the Moniteur have until recently pointed in a quite different direction.

The shame of selling intoxicating liquors in the country's Capitol is now definitely prohibited by a joint resolution, which has passed the Senate and the House. Congress has thus shown its self-respect.

An Inquiry.

PAWLING, N. Y., March 11, 1867.

If any of the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE will forward the address of John L. Bassett, formerly of Bridgeport, Conn. (Greenfield Hill), they will greatly oblige Charles S. Dodge, Pawling, Dutchess Co., New York, as all our efforts to hear from him have thus far been useless.

Yours most respectfully,
CHARLES S. DODGE.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by DR. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each: MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

THE OLD AND NEW EARTH.

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

A perfect church, or perfect state,
Will not in this world vegetate.
Whatever seed we mean to sow,
The wheat and tares together grow.
'Twixt good and bad, a constant strife,
That only terminates with life.
Six thousand years their course have run,
And still the battle's but begun.
It rages still, from age to age;
In spite of prophet, priest, or sage.
Every year, some new invention,
Much to tedious to mention,
The product of some addled brain,
Now promises the goal to gain.
It starts with expectation high,
Only to wither, blast, and die.
Lies buried in the vasty deep,
Where all its predecessors sleep.
Such are the efforts men devise,
To gain the long expected prize.
The ignis fatuus of the brain,
That proves its votaries insane;
And leads them into pits and bogs,
The domicile of croaking frogs.
Man's history, since the days of Cain,
Is one of sorrow, guilt, and shame.
His glory buried deep in mud,
Written in characters of blood.
War and commotion, strife and wrong,
Have been the burden of his song.
He is the greatest hero still,
The greatest number who can kill.
While he who only kills one man,
Is branded as a villain.
The little sinner all despise;
The big one carries off the prize.
One is exalted with a rope,
The other worshiped like the Pope.
When darkness men mistake for light,
When day is turned into night,
The good and noble we despise;
And raise the guilty to the skies.
Can such a state as this be bless'd,
Or ever lead to peace or rest?
While coming storms portentous roar,
And earth is rotten to the core.
No healing balm has yet been found,
To cure this deep and dangerous wound.
No human skill, no earthly power,
Can long protract the fatal hour,
When sleeping vengance shall awake,
And all the powers of nature shake:
The King in flaming fire decends,
To judge his foes, and save his friends,
Who shall abide that dreadful day,
When earth and heaven shall flee away;
And perish in the depth profound,
Where they can never more be found?
But a new heaven and earth shall rise,
To cheer the heart, and bless the eyes,
Of those who worthy shall be found,
To tread that holy, happy ground.
May you and I, dear friend, be there,
That blissful paradise to share
With Christ our Lord, our Life divine;
And in his likeness ever shine.
Let those who choose enjoy a race,
"Beyond the realms of time and space:"
And give their gassy fancy vent,
Heathenish fables to invent.
Immaterial phantom sprites;
Borrowed from the Arabian Nights,
Floating in the ambient air,
Of body, parts, and substance bare.

All these visions die away,
In the light of coming day:
In the resurrection morn,
From the grave, the saints are born,
Live forever, on the earth,
Subjects of the second birth,
In the new Jerusalem,
They with Christ for ever dwell.
This is heaven enough for me:
May I soon that glory see.

THE LOST PURSE.

A friend related to me a simple story, not long since, which I think is worth telling over. The parties of whom he spoke were near by, and it was the presence of the hero that called the circumstance to mind.

Abel Morton was a youth about seventeen. His mother was a widow and he an only child. They lived in a small hut in the outskirts of the village, and were very poor. During the long winter the widow had been quite sick, so that Abel had been obliged to spend most of his time with her. The youth had never learned any trade, as various circumstances had combined to prevent his leaving home. He worked whenever he could get work to do, and thus far had managed to find food enough to keep himself and mother alive, though they suffered much with cold.

As the spring opened, Abel tried to find work, but was not successful. He picked up a few odd jobs now and then, but the proceeds were barely sufficient to purchase enough of the coarsest, cheapest food. Clothing they could not buy, and poor Abel began to fear that he must beg a suit of clothes, or, what was worse, leave his mother. But the latter he could not do.

One afternoon he went into the village and spent several hours in hunting for work, but he found nothing to do. Some seemed to turn him away because he looked so ragged, while others said they never employed any one outside of their own households.

Faint and sick at heart, Abel turned his steps homeward. He left the village, and was turning into the narrow lane that led to his home, when he detected something peculiar upon the roadside. He picked it up, and found it to be a small knit purse. It was quite heavy, and the jingle of the contents was too sharp and clear for copper.

The poor youth did not stop to open it then, for it was already dusk, and he knew his mother would be anxious. So with strangely beating heart he hastened homeward. He entered the little room in which his mother was sitting, and sank down in a chair.

"Alas! no work," the widow murmured, as she saw the cloud upon the boy's face.

"No," he replied, "I tried all round, but it was of no use."

"Never mind, Abel. God is good. We shall not suffer as those who do not trust in him."

"But how does he help us, mother?" asked Abel, in a faltering voice.

"In many ways, my son. He has preserved us in many trials, and has given us hope and courage. He has preserved to me a true and virtuous chid, and held us clear of many sufferings which afflict our fellows. Look at Mrs. Tyndal: see her with all her wealth suffering what I would not suffer for worlds. See her only son, a poor, miserable inebriate, and in prison for a drunken crime. For what would we exchange our humble consciousness of right and honor?"

Abel made no reply. There had been something bearing down heavily upon his soul, something that lay in his pocket, and sent forth a serpent song of plenty. But the load was removed. He drew the purse forth from his pocket and laid it on the table by his side.

"What is that?" said the widow, as she heard the sharp clink of the coin.

"A purse—I found it on the road."

"Found it! Oh! did you find it?"

"Yes, my mother—in the road just at the turn of our lane. It lay on the footpath."

A candle was lighted and the purse emptied. It contained twenty silver half dollars.

"Ten dollars," whispered Abel. "Perhaps we can find who lost it."

"Isn't there some name to the purse?" asked the mother.

She took it as she spoke, and upon the inside of the clasp, which was lined with red morocco, she read, "John Thompson."

John Thompson was one of the wealthiest men of the place. He owned a very large farm, and besides supplying a large amount of milk to customers, he raised large quantities of garden sauce and fine fruit, which he sent to a neighboring city.

"Ah, how easily he could spare it?" whispered Abel. "It would be no loss to him."

"That is so in a measure, my son," said the widow, solemnly. "His would not be the loss, but we should lose—oh, how much!"

"We, mother?"

"Ah! my boy, should you keep this—should we keep it—where would our honor be? The next time you met Mr. Thompson, you'd fear to look him in the face. You could not look at him with the happy consciousness of your own innocence. There would be a taint upon your character, a sting in your soul. Oh, would you keep it, Abel?"

"No, my mother, I would not. No, no—I'll carry it back this very night."

"You might wait till morning; you must get some wood now."

The purse was laid away in a place of safety, and on the following morning Abel set out bright and early, and walked with a buoyant step, for he was satisfied with the work he was doing.

Mr. Thompson lived in a large mansion on the top of a gentle eminence, at a short distance from the road, which was surrounded by a park of noble trees. Abel took his way up the neatly gravelled walk, and met the owner upon the broad piazza.

"Do you wish to see me, sir?" said the host. He was a kind, generous-looking man, stout and corpulent, with a face full of health and good humor.

"Yes, sir," answered Abel, promptly, at the same time ascending the piazza. "I found a purse last evening, and, on opening it, we found your name upon it."

"And who are we?"

"My mother and I, sir."

"Then you did not think you needed the money?"

"Sir?" said the youth, with inquiring gaze.

"Seeing that you bring the money to me, I suppose you had no use for it?"

"Use for it, sir?" repeated Abel, at a loss how to understand the man. "Oh, God knows we had use for it, but not so much as we had for our honor and truth."

"Were you afraid to keep it?" pursued Mr. Thompson, in the same peculiar tone.

"Afraid! what do you mean? Do I love my mother because I am afraid to hate her? I brought your money back because it was yours, and not mine."

Thus speaking, Abel handed the gentleman the purse and turned away. Mr. Thompson did not say a word, and the youth kept on, feeling glad that he had done right; yet at the moment almost ready to cry at the reception he met.

When he reached home he sank into a chair and leaned his head upon his hand.

"Why, what's the matter, Abel?" asked his mother, in alarm.

But before he could answer they were both startled by hearing a horse trot up to the door. It was Mr. Thompson. He dismounted and, as the door was open, entered without ceremony. He bade the widow a cheerful good morning, and then took a seat.

"I've come on business, and I may as well proceed at once." Then turning to Abel, he asked:

"Are you engaged at present?"

"No, sir," replied the youth eagerly, for the man spoke very kindly.

"Wouldn't you like something to do?"

"Oh, yes, sir. I spent all day yesterday in looking for work. My mother is not well, and I must earn something."

"Can you write?"

"Yes, sir."

"Pretty well?"

"Yes, sir. My mother has taught me more than I should have learned at school."

"Can you cipher, then?"

"Yes, sir; I have been pretty thorough as far as cube root."

"Can you drive two horses?"

"Yes, sir. I drove the stage coach from here to Grantborough a good many times last winter."

"Then I think you are just the man I want. In a few days I shall send some sauce to the city, and as yet I have no one to take charge of that department. For the last ten years I have lost considerably by dishonest men. The man who carries my produce to market has considerable money to collect; sometimes it will average a hundred dollars a day, for a week at a time. When I buy up fruits and berries to send to the city, the receipts are considerable. How should you like the place?"

"I could be with my mother at nights, sir?"

"Yes."

"Then I should like it very much—very much, sir. And if I serve you I shall serve you faithfully."

"I have no fears on that account," said Mr. Thompson, with a peculiar look. "I am fully satisfied of your honesty. I saw you pick up my purse."

There was a slight shudder passing through the youth's soul, for he could not help thinking what would have been the result had he kept the money.

"You are not the first one I have tried," resumed the gentleman. "First, I looked upon Samuel Stephens. He is poor, and I thought him capable. I dropped my purse, with my name plainly written upon it. He did find it, and he kept it. Next I tried Lot Poole, and he did the same. Some might say I had no business to place temptation in a poor youth's way; but I would give employment to those who most needed it, and as there is ample temptation in the work I must have done, I thought I had a right to try them. But you have proved yourself trustworthy, and I am glad of it. And now, if upon trial you suit me, I will pay you forty dollars a month and board you. What say you to that?"

But poor Abel knew not what to say. The sum named was enormous to him. He had wondered if he should get as much as fifteen.

"Forty!" he whispered, fearful that he had misunderstood him.

"Yes, forty dollars a month. Will not that answer?"

"Oh, yes, sir. It is more than I expected—much more."

"Then you will be better satisfied. I like to have those who work for me satisfied, and then if they do wrong, I am not to blame. So, suppose you come up and look around; we commence the first month to-day."

The poor widow felt it her duty to say something before the kind man left, so she turned towards him and opened her mouth, and then—began to cry. Mr. Thompson understood it, took her by the hand, and bade her be of good cheer, and then hastened away.

Until the sound of the horse's tramp had died away in the distance, both mother and son sat in perfect silence. At last the widow rose and sank upon her son's bosom.

"O, Abel! God has blessed us wondrously."

"Suppose I had kept the money," whispered the youth.

"Not that—not that, my son. O, it was not the money; though the money, like the mirror, reflected yourself. It was the stern integrity of your soul. You couldn't have kept it. The simple carrying back of ten dollars was little to be compared with the principles to be involved. He saw your honor—your truth—and for what you are he has hired you."

Abel went up to the great house and soon found something to do. When he returned home at night, Mrs. Thompson sent a covered basket for his mother, and Mr. Thompson gave him an order on the tailor for a new suit of clothes.

The busy season came on, and Mr. Thompson was not long in discovering that he had won a treasure in his new hand. Abel sold more produce than had been sold before; at least, he returned more money, which was far better. That was not all. The business was kept square to the fraction of a penny every day, so that at any moment Mr. Thompson could tell just how he stood.

But there was one difficulty.

The producer often wished for the assistance of his agent in the evening, especially when he had accounts to make out. So he talked with his wife, and it was soon arranged that the widow Morton should come and find a home beneath their roof. She had grown stronger, and the flush of health was upon her cheek, since her son had afforded her the many comforts that she needed, and she accepted the offer with pleasure. Abel could now spend all his time in his employer's interest, and the happiness of all concerned was greatly enhanced thereby.

I saw a wealthy man walk to his house, and as he stood and gazed around upon his broad acres, half a dozen children broke away from an old lady who had been playing with them, and bounded to his side; and I could hear the happy cries of "Papa."

It was Abel Morton, and the old lady was his mother. He was an honest, happy man, for strict honor and truth had been his guide through life.—Christian Advocate and Journal.

Hannah More says, "Idleness among children, as among men, is the root of all evil, and leads to no other evil more certainly than to ill-temper." Little Willie seemed to know this, for whenever he had nothing to do, he would say, "Now, mamma, I have nothing to do; I am on Satan's ground, you know."

"IS ELIJAH YET TO COME?"

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

I write with reference to an article under this head of Feb. 20. I do not believe that any person who believes Elijah is yet to come, but what also believes in the "speedy redemption at the appearing of Jesus Christ." If there be such an one, I have no knowledge of it. All that is said of Elijah's work may be done in a very short time, and will be, as I think. "Paulo" says that John fulfilled Mal. iv. 5. If so, then John did all that is said of Elijah's work; and that occupied about six months. Surely this is not a long time. Or, does "Paulo" see that it must require a long time for Elijah to do what Malachi says he will do, and so conclude that John did not do it all; and hence a part of Elijah's work will never be done? There have been some who have called themselves Elijah, who were not; and whose influence, in all respects, may not have been good. But if this is an objection to the belief that Elijah is yet to come, then do we have an objection to our Saviour's future coming; for there have been at least twenty-four men, since Christ went away, who said they were Christ, and drew many disciples after them. It has not been shown that John just as much denied being a prophet as he denied being Elijah. John did not say that he was not a prophet. They did not ask him if he was a prophet? That question is not in the Greek text. The question there is definite, referring to some one prophet, and not *in*definite, a prophet. They did ask, art thou that prophet, or the prophet? which would be the same thing. Before "Paulo" solemnly avers again, will he be ready to give one competent man who says the Greek text should be rendered a prophet? Besides, the Jews wanted to know who John was, and they sent to him the question in John i. that they might know definitely. If they had said, Art thou a prophet, it would have been like asking him if he were a Jew. If he had said, he was not a prophet, it would have been an indefinite answer to the definite object they had in view. It was not to find out whether he was a man, a Jew or a prophet; but to ascertain who he was definitely. No reference was made in the question, nor in John's answer, to any but those the prophets said should come. He was not the Christ that was promised, nor the Elijah who was promised; nor that prophet or the prophet. There need be no question that they referred to the prophet of which Moses spake. To us, it is evident that Moses referred to Christ, while the Jews made a distinction between that prophet and Christ. So after John said he was not Christ, they asked their questions. But suppose John did say he was not a prophet, then John did deny what Christ affirmed; for Jesus did say that John was a prophet. Luke vii. 26.

We are not aware that Gabriel ever said that John was Elijah. If "Paulo" can find it he may make out that John contradicted him. If by "darling theory, and preconceived opinions and theories," is meant, that a person has an opinion, before he writes it, we don't know who has not got a preconceived opinion. But if "Paulo" means an opinion long cherished, I would say to him, that my preconceived opinion has always been, until recently, that John fulfilled Malachi. iv. 5; and hence I am not expressing such an opinion when I say, in the language of Jesus, that "Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things." This is not saying that any one else has a "darling, preconceived opinion" to sustain, neither would I say this; for I have observed that some, when they are hard pushed in argument, will, in order to sustain themselves implicate the motives of those who oppose them. My reasons, in short, for believing that Elijah is yet to come, are the following: There is no statement in the Bible more positively and unqualifiedly stated than this. The Lord may have directed the prophets to say things that would not be understood at the time. But to move them to say things which, if believed, the people would necessarily be deceived, is quite another thing. The promise in Malachi iv. 5, is as plain as any promise in the Bible of the coming of Christ, either the first or second time. If this was all fulfilled in John, then the Jews must necessarily have been deceived for more than four hundred years, while believing that promise was to be fulfilled. They did believe Elijah was to come, and for this reason, they asked John if he were Elijah. John, as a Jew, must know they referred to this promise. John unqualifiedly, and in the most emphatic manner, said he was not Elijah. Jesus sustains the greatness and truthfulness of John by saying, that no greater prophet had been born, and that John was a prophet and more than a prophet. Jesus said, Ye sent unto John and he bare witness unto the truth.

Then what John said to those who were sent unto him was truth, our Saviour's word for it. What John denied referred to statements made by the prophets. He said I am not Christ, I am not Elijah, nor that prophet. John did tell who he was by quoting a passage that pointed out his work. The question put to John, Art thou Elijah? must be the same as if they had said, Are you the one named in Malachi? for no other was promised. As John said, I am not; if Jesus meant, in what he said of John that he was the Elijah promised, in all its fullness, it makes a plain contradiction between John and the Saviour. And more, this view of the subject makes the Saviour contradict himself; for he said, John bare witness to the truth. So John said he was not Elijah; and Jesus said, John spoke the truth. To deny this, is to deny both John and Christ. It will take more than I have yet seen to bring me to this. As John was to do some things that Elijah is to do, and as he had the spirit and power of Elijah, our Saviour could speak of him as he did. It is on this principle that Jesus could say, This bread is my body, and this wine is my blood, and that the apostle could say, that rock was Christ. For the same reason that Jesus could say, no man hath seen the Father, and at the same time say, that he that hath seen me hath seen the Father. Take this view of the subject, and all is simple and plain, removing all apparent contradiction.

These are my reasons for giving up my preconceived opinion, and coming to believe, as I now do, that Elijah surely shall first come, and restore all things, as Jesus has affirmed. This is not affirmed of John.

THE DORCAS MISSION.

The enrolled membership of the Sunday-school is two hundred and twenty-five. These colored boys and girls have been gathered from the worst section of our city. They live in poor tenements in various streets, alleys, and courts. These children are making progress in their studies. Those who can read are in Bible classes: those who cannot are taught the alphabet, to spell, &c. They are sweet singers, and their voices may be heard for a considerable distance from the hall where they meet. They learn readily, and appear to take delight in their lessons.

The day-school in the home numbers seventy. The blackest learn as readily as the lighter colored pupils. We hope to have an evening school for colored men and women, soon. A school held for them last winter by us was quite successful.

Our Home fund has been expended in furnishing the house with bedsteads, mattresses, sheets, cloth for aprons, dresses, pillow cases, undergarments; shoes, crockery, cutlery, tubs, clothes lines, pins; kettles, boilers, and other cooking apparatus; boards for tables, seats, bins, and shelves; rag and straw carpeting, sewing machine, medicine, whitewashing, washing, scouring, and cleaning, and painting; car-hire and express bills; pay of matron, teacher, and missionary; school books, pens, ink, slates, &c.; coal and kindling wood, shovel, and other steel and iron ware, &c. What was left, these purchased, was expended in tinning the roof of cook room, repairing stove and range, and in purchasing a barrel of flour, a barrel of syrup, codfish, potatoes, bread, milk, meal, salt, pork, mutton, liver, beans, etc., etc.

We commenced Home operations last October with four children. We have twenty-four under our care now. The children rise at half past five in the morning, and with the exception of three or four of the larger ones, retire at seven in the evening. Family worship morning and evening. The day-school meets forenoon and afternoon, and is under the care of Sister. S. D. S. Bussier, one who is well qualified for her work.

Our bill of fare is as follows: for breakfast, bread and syrup, warm milk and water; for supper, corn meal mush and milk; for dinner, Sundays and Mondays, baked beans; Tuesdays, fried beef liver and potatoes; Wednesdays, mutton soup; Thursdays, boiled mutton, cold, and potatoes; Fridays, roast mutton and potatoes; Saturdays, codfish and potatoes.

Sr. Rebecca Reeves is matron of the Home. Sr. Malvina Helginson is missionary. Thus with myself, our entire family numbers twenty-eight persons. The average cost of provisioning this family is about twenty-five cents apiece daily. The only difference in living is in my assistants who have tea, coffee, and butter. We have neither cakes, puddings, nor pies, excepting on holidays, when they are given to us.

To carry on this work I look to the Lord for grace. I write concerning the work, and leave the matter of giving between the reader and the Lord. I do not profess to be supported by especial miracles, neither do I think it wrong to ask the brethren for assistance. But there are so many calls for assistance in all directions, that I think it best to do my begging at the throne of grace, and then the brethren can assist as they feel that the Lord would have them. My matron, teacher, and missionary are paid twenty dollars per month each, by me, and have their board, room, and fuel. They earn their money, for all engage heart and hand in the work from morning to night, day after day. Provisions have to be bought constantly, also gas bills to pay, and all other general expenses connected with such an institution. Now I ask for your prayers that I may be kept faithful in all things.

[Br. Burbank here inserted a copy of the "lease" of the house, which we omit.—Ed.]

Our Home will accommodate thirty-six children. We have it now in good condition, and whenever the brethren, sisters and friends are on this way, would be pleased to have them visit our Home, and see what the Lord has done for us.

Yours in hope of the life to come,
F. H. Burbank.

The Jews in Jerusalem.—Rev. E.B. Frankel writes to the Jewish Intelligence, that the missionaries' recent intercourse with the Jews has been most friendly. Many have called upon them; many have been visited in their homes, and there is ground for hope that the seed scattered on all sides, among young and old, will eventually yield an abundant harvest. Nor are there wanting signs that the time to favor Zion draweth nigh, and that the thoughts of Jews throughout the world are directed towards Jerusalem. The Greek Christians are up buying every available plot of ground in the neighborhood of the Holy City, where they are planting olive and fruit trees, and gathering luxuriant crops. The whole city is now paved. The water from the Pools of Solomon is now flowing in different parts of the city, and, through the liberality of Sir Moses Montefiore, the underground work for draining the city has been commenced. These improvements may appear trifles in Europe, but they are of great significance in the east. On the other hand, our missionaries feel, in common with many of the Jews, that Jerusalem is a great stronghold of Satan; that the great enemy is very busy there; that the contest between light and darkness is gaining daily in intensity, and that a crisis is at hand.

VARIETIES.

Under this heading we propose to give such various items of interest to our readers which do not come properly under the heading of news.

The Roman Catholics are busy at the work of religious propagandism, and for this purpose have a religious order, who give themselves to the spread of tracts and large publications. Thus we are told large numbers of the young and fashionable in American families are induced to attend service at the various Catholic churches in this city, at first through curiosity, and then habitually, the magic of the "ceremonial" having its full effect upon the imagination. Societies of this character have long been established in England, and are sufficient to account for the thousands who renounce the Protestant for the Catholic service.

The President has approved the resolution to extend aid and facilities to citizens of the United States engaged in the survey of a route for a ship canal across the Isthums of Darien. It authorizes them to be furnished by the Secretary of the Navy, as far as he may be able to do so without prejudice to the naval service and without additional expense to the government.

Rev. H. A. Sawtelle, a popular Baptist preacher of San Francisco, has thrown a firebrand into the denomination, by openly espousing open communion. He has organized a Church entertaining his views, which is rapidly increasing in strength and numbers.

Reforms in the Society of Friends.—The Friends' Intelligencer has an account of an informal meeting, held last month, of members who were moved to a frank interchange of views on the best means of reviving the interest in the meetings for worship. Quotations from Barclay were read, showing the power with which the spirit moved in the minds of Friends in former days, insomuch that they would break out sometimes in the singing of hymns, as well as other evidences of deep and lively feeling.

Samuel Downing, the last of the noble army of the Revolution, died at his home, near Northville, Saratoga county, New York, on Monday, February 19. He was born in Newburyport, Massachusetts, November 30, 1761. He was, therefore, in the 106th year of his age when he died.

The Pope has two claims for American sympathy in his afflictions. He was the only potentate in the world who acknowledged the Confederacy, and the only one who denies American citizens the right to worship in their own way in his capital.

The prompt action of Congress in passing a joint resolution appropriating one million dollars for the relief of the people in the South, loyal and disloyal alike, will be cordially approved throughout the whole country. It is not merely want in its ordinary forms that exists at the South; it is starvation. The operations of private charity are too slow for the present emergency.

Both Houses of Congress have passed a bill allowing a deduction of one month, in case of good conduct, in each year's imprisonment of persons sentenced for offences against the laws of the United States.

In a recent discourse a clergyman said that Harvard appeared to be the only college in this country where no revivals occurred; that for a quarter of a century past there had not been a single revival or conversion in that institution.

The Cashmere, or more properly, the Angora goat, is being largely introduced in the West. There are now about one thousand in Illinois, as many more in Ohio, and several thousand in Kentucky.

Rev. Thomas Guthrie, D. D., is coming to this country in April, as one of a deputation from the Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland to the Presbyterian Churches of America. Dr. G. is perhaps the ablest and most eloquent of all the Scotch divines.

"MORTAL RESURRECTION."

CONSIDERED BY JACOB GRIM.

I am somewhat surprised that any man who professes to be a bible student should for one moment indulge in such an idea as a mortal resurrection, at the last day.

The first time I heard it indulged in, I could not help smiling; for it came from a man who had always been saying, "Give us one thus saith the Lord, The wicked shall never rise from the dead again, and we will believe it." And yet, this same individual quotes 1 Cor. xv. 44, "There is a natural body: and there is a spiritual body.... Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual," and says Paul is talking about the resurrection, and this animal, natural man comes up first in the resurrection, and then the good are changed into spiritual.

If this is not being pinched hard for a theory, then I do not know what is. For one moment allow us to examine this subject. "It (he) is sown in corruption: he is raised in incorruption." How any man, calling himself a bible student, in the face of such language as this of the apostle, dare change it to read, "it is sown in corruption, he is raised in corruption and then changed to incorruption," is unaccountable, and he is taking a liberty with the apostle's language that I should not like to be guilty of doing. Again, "he (the man) is sown in dishonor, he is raised in glory;" not changed afterwards. "He is sown in weakness, he is raised in power;" not changed to power afterwards. "He is sown an animal man, he is raised a spiritual man;" not changed afterwards. "There is a natural man, and there is a spiritual man; and so it is written, The first man (not body) Adam," (Paul is not speaking of Adam in the resurrection, but Adam in creation; therefore the first Adam) "was made an animal man. The last Adam was made a spiritual man. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual," (that what? Why, evidently, that Adam; or, the spiritual Adam was not first) "but the natural, or animal Adam: and afterwards the spiritual Adam. The first man Adam is of the earth, earthy: the second Adam (or man) will be the heavenly man; and as we have borne the image of the earthy (man), we shall also bear the image of the heavenly (man). Now says Paul, "Behold I show you a mystery:" something which these mortal resurrectionists cannot comprehend. What is it, Paul? "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump.... the dead shall be raised." How? mortal? No, "incorruptible." So says Paul.

Now we will inquire what Jesus says on the same subject. Luke xx. If ever there was an occasion when Jesus should have settled the question of the resurrection of the dead, it was at this time. The Sadducees came to him propounding certain questions touching the resurrection of the dead. And Jesus answered those questions,

First, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection of the dead." Here it is implied that some will not be accounted worthy of a resurrection of the dead.

Second, All that are counted worthy of the resurrection, "Neither can they die any more." Here Jesus stamps all "mortal resurrections," as contrary to God's designs and his teachings, "for, they cannot die any more." Where then is mortality? "For they are equal unto the angels: and are children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Now, if there was no other testimony in the scriptures, this alone is enough to stamp all such teachings as spurious. The children of the resurrection are the children of God; and as such, cannot die any more. All I ask is, like the Apostle Paul, "If by any means I may attain to the resurrection of the dead," I will run all risk of dying again; for Jesus says, "they cannot die any more."

Well, we have Paul saying, they rise incorruptible. The serpent says, according to the old saying, they rise corruptible, and die again!

Jesus says, the children of the resurrection "cannot die any more." The same serpent says, they are mortal and can die again. It seems to me, it savors of the same disposition, of being adverse to God's truth, as it was in the beginning; the only difference is, it was then "Ye shall not die," and now, when God says that they cannot die who attain unto the resurrection, the opposition say, "they shall die." Here then is the same opposing spirit.

The subject seems so foolhardy and devoid of argument that you will excuse me for taking up your time and paper.

Philadelphia, Pa.

A MORTAL RESURRECTION.

In the opening speech of my discussion, two years ago, with Elder Miles Grant, on the question, "Do the scriptures teach the non-resurrection of the wicked?" I started with this proposition: "They that are Christ's at his coming" shall rise from the dead Immortal. In remarking hereupon I proceeded as follows:

The doctrine of this proposition will be seen to have a very important bearing on the main question at issue in this debate. Hence the need of proving it true at the outset. The proposition is denied by the negative, who affirms (Discussion with Curry, p. 68) that the righteous dead "have got to be brought up mortal."

My brother's view is a novelty in the christian world at large and in the Second Advent ranks. More than this, my brother on the negative has held it but a short time. I object to the view, 1. Because no direct scripture proof is offered or can be offered in its support. 2. Because the arguments that have been urged in its behalf by the negative in a former discussion have no force. 3. Because the opposite view—viz., the one stated in my proposition—is sustained by inspired evidence of the plainest and most positive character.

[My remarks on the absence of any direct evidence for a mortal resurrection in the Bible had not been committed to writing, and of course cannot be recalled. Passing this point, I quote as follows from my notes:]

II. Examine the negative's reason for asserting a mortal resurrection of animal life to the saints.

1. Justice demands it. If this be so it follows that the resurrection of the righteous is not an act of grace or favor. So, on the other hand, if the resurrection is an act of grace or favor, it is no longer a debt due to the saint on the score of justice. During the progress of the debate the testimony of God's word will be brought to bear on this point. But to proceed: Why does justice demand that the saint shall have back his animal life in the resurrection? The answer is, because the first death is not for what we have done, but for what Adam did. This reason, then, it will be seen, affects equally both classes of the dead—the wicked as well as the righteous. And this is precisely what my brother on the negative maintains. Bearing this fact in mind, let us consider the matter further. If the dead have a just claim to deliverance from death, their present condition is one by which, so long as it lasts, they are wronged. But if wronged, who has wronged them? If the wrong was self-inflicted—though this is denied by the negative—then of course they can have no claim against any one else. Did Adam inflict the wrong? Then against him, and him alone, is the claim for redress. But from him no help can come. He is dead and since his death was for his own sin, it will be for the negative to show on what principle his animal life is to be restored. In his case, certainly, the demand of justice will not be set up. But suppose him resurrected, he would still be powerless in the matter of rescuing his posterity from the power of the grave. Has the wrong under consideration been inflicted by the devil? If it has been, then the claim for redress is good only against him. But he, too, is powerless to correct the alleged injustice. It only remains, therefore, for the negative to affirm that God himself inflicted the wrong, and that He for that reason is bound to make reparation. But such an imputation against the Most High would be the rankest blasphemy. "Justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne." Ps. lxxxix. 14. "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" Prove that God has been unjust in the past, or is now unjust, and you destroy forever all ground for hoping that right will ever triumph. And here I may ask where in all the Bible is there a hint that God was under obligations, on the score of something due to man, to provide for a resurrection from the dead by sending his Son into the world?

But waiving what has been said, and admitting for a moment that all the dead will be raised because justice demands it, then I ask (and will my brother on the negative note the inquiry?) Does the resurrection come as a blessing, or as a curse? To all the dead it must come in one or the other of these ways. Is it as a curse? The idea is absurd. If the dead have been wronged, that which is a curse can be no remedy for the injustice. All must see this. Well, then, does the asserted restoration of animal life come as a blessing? If this question is answered affirmatively, then I ask,—How are the wicked benefited by it? Will the negative tell us? [This point was pressed further in extemporaneous remarks.] Again, How are the righteous benefited by it? If not benefited, of what avail will it be that the demand of justice is met? If it can do no more for the Lord's children than it does for the impenitent, and if it can bring no advantage to the latter class, it must be worthless, if not worse than worthless, to both.

The truth on this subject we shall find, as the investigation goes on, to be that a life in the future is not a debt which God owes to man. It is a provision of redemption, and comes, through his boundless love and mercy, to those who lay hold of Christ. It comes, moreover, as we shall see, not as a restoration of mortal life but as the bestowment of immortality.

Beyond this point my speech was not written out. I proceeded in the second place to answer the reasoning by which Eld. G. had attempted, on p. 68 of his discussion with Curry, to prop up the notion of a mortal resurrection. In the third place I replied to the following question of Eld. G., found on p. 83 of the G. and C. Disc.: "How are they [the righteous] to come up incorruptible, if mortal and corruptible are not applicable to them while dead?" And lastly, I proved my proposition by an appeal to the testimony of God's word found in 1 Cor. xv. 42–44, 52. It is raised in incorruption—it is raised in glory—it is raised in power—the dead shall be raised incorruptible. Here—said I—is more than one flaming sword of inspiration to guard the glorious truth which utterly overthrows the assumption of a mortal resurrection life for the saints of God.

Night after night, in speech after speech, I sought in every conceivable way to get from my opponent some explanation of these positive declarations of Paul, and the only approach he made to an attempt to harmonize them with his theory was a mere hint that their sense might be, It is raised to be in incorruption—it raised to be in glory—it is raised to be in power—it is raised to be a spiritual body—they shall be raised to be incorruptible! If this is not a most puerile trifling with the word of truth, then I owe Eld. Grant an apology for having in our debate denounced his notion of a mortal resurrection for saints as a "miserable fiction." R. W.

THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION.

BY CHARLES C. TUCK.

"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand,) then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains," &c.—Matt. xxiv. 15, 16.

In my last article I noticed the significant fact that Christ warned those who should be in Judea (and those only) to flee into the mountains, when they should see "the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place." But why must the disciples in Judea flee into the mountains? Let Christ answer. In the 21st verse he gives the reason: "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be." So we see that the reason why he warned those in Judea to flee into the mountains, was because there was coming upon that country great tribulation; and if the disciples remained there, they would be exposed to its dangers; but if they fled to the mountains they would be in comparative safety.

How literally was that prediction of Christ fulfilled in the siege and destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans under Titus! Read the description of that awful tribulation, as given in Deut. xxviii., then read the history of it in Josephus, and in Milman's History of the Jews, and who would wonder that Christ said it would be the greatest tribulation since the beginning of the world to that time, and the greatest that ever should be? But, says the objector, "That tribulation at the siege of Jerusalem could not have been the one Christ referred to, because that only lasted a few years; whereas the papal persecution lasted twelve hundred and sixty years." But I answer that Christ did not say it should be the longest tribulation that ever was or ever should be; but he simply said it should be the greatest—the most intense; and there cannot be found upon the pages of history another tribulation so great, so intense, as the one upon the Jews.

The next verse (the 22d) reads as follows: "And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." What days does he refer to? The days of tribulation upon Jerusalem, when the abomination of desolation should stand in the holy place, and when the disciples in Judea were warned to flee to the mountains.

That tribulation was so great, especially upon Jerusalem, that unless it had been brought to a close just when it was, every soul would have perished in a very short time, so great was the distress on account of the famine and pestilence which raged there. Observe that the term no flesh comprehends only those upon whom the tribulation should come. Upon whom was the tribulation coming? Upon the land of Judea, and especially upon Jerusalem. So says the word of the Lord.

Those who hold that the abomination of desolation refers to the papal power, say that the days of tribulation which were shortened were the 1,290 days of Daniel, shortened to 1,260. Let us look at that idea. It is said that the two periods commenced in A. D. 532; and therefore the 1,290 extended to 1822, while the 1,260 days only reached to 1792. It is also said that the tribulation spoken of by Christ was to be upon the christians during the papal persecution. Consequently, according to that idea, if the papal persecution had continued until the close of the 1,290 days (in 1822), no christians would have been left alive. But that cannot be true, for there were christians in this country, and in other Protestant countries, over which the Pope had no authority, many years before 1822, and even long years before 1792. Therefore that tribulation must have been in connection with the siege of Jerusalem.

But, says one, "Christ said that, immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, &c.; and therefore he could not have referred to the desolotion of Jerusalem, for the sun was not darkened until 1780; and that could not be said to be immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem." I answer, supposing the words "immediately after" were the correct rendering of the original in the text under consideration, even then why make them any more restricted in their application than many other similar expressions of Christ? For instance, in Rev. xxii. 7, after describing the new Jerusalem, Christ is represented as saying, "Behold I come quickly" &c. Also in the 12th verse of the same chapter he is represented as saying the same words again; and yet almost eighteen hundred years have rolled away, and he has not come yet. Which word is the most restricted in its application—"immediately" or "quickly"? But I contend that the word "immediately" is not a correct translation; and I am supported by good authority—unbiased authority. In Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, page 533, is a note of M. Guizot, a French Protestant writer as long ago as 1828, in which he says, speaking of Matt. xxiv. 29, "In verse 29 we read, 'Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, &c. The Greek word....signifies all at once, suddenly, not immediately; so that it signifies only the sudden appearance of the signs which Jesus Christ announces; not the shortness of the interval which was to separate them from the days of tribulation, of which he was speaking."

Thus it is seen that if the word in the Greek had been translated suddenly instead of immediately, it would have made better sense in applying the tribulation where it belongs (on Jerusalem), and would have harmonized with the parallel passage in Mark xiii. 24. In the latter quotation it reads "in those days, after that tribulation," where the phrase "in those days" evidently has the same meaning as is expressed in Matt. iii. 1, where it reads as follows: "In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea," &c. The expression evidently means, in that time.

I will notice one other objection which is often brought up by those who apply the abomination of desolation to the papal power, which objection is considered by them a very important one. It is this: they claim that the predictions recorded in Luke xxi. were uttered at a different time, and in a different place from where those recorded in Matt. xxiv. and Mark xiii. were uttered. It is said that those recorded in Matthew and Mark were uttered on the Mount of Olives, but those recorded in Luke were uttered in the temple. I claim that the predictions recorded by Luke are the same as those recorded by Matthew and Mark, the only difference being that Luke tells the story in plainer language than either Matthew or Mark. While Matthew and Mark speak of the "abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet," Luke speaks out in plainer language, and says, "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies," &c.; which agrees precisely with the angel's explanation to Daniel concerning the abomination of desolation.

The predictions recorded in Matt. xxiv. and Mark xiii. are acknowledged by all to have been uttered on the Mount of Olives, after Christ had been teaching in the temple. I think it can easily be shown that the predictions recorded in Luke xxi. were uttered in the same place, and at the same time. Turn to Matt. xxi. 23, where you will find the commencement of Christ's discourse in the temple. Read on until you finish chapter xxiii., where his discourse ends. Then turn to Mark xi. 27, where that discourse commences, according to Mark, and read onward through chapter xii., to where it ends. Then turn to Luke xx. 1, where the discourse commences according to Luke, and read that chapter through, and four verses of chap. xxi., and any one may see that the three evangelists recorded the same discourse, although they recorded it in slightly different language, and perhaps some of them speak more fully and particularly than the others do concerning certain subjects in that discourse. For example, Matthew speaks in chapter xxiii. at considerable length concerning the Scribes and Pharisees, while Mark and Luke barely allude to that subject. According to Mark and Luke, Christ finished his discourse in the temple by speaking about the poor widow who cast in two mites into the treasury; but Matthew omits that circumstance. After Luke has finished his record of the predictions of Christ, he says, "And in the day time he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the Mount of Olives." Thus it is seen that Luke agrees perfectly with Matthew and Mark concerning where that discourse was delivered. After Christ came out of the temple, he went upon the Mount of Olives, and there spake to his disciples concerning the abomination of desolation (or Jerusalem compassed with armies), and also spake of the signs which should precede his coming.

Thus we see, by examining the testimony of the angel Gabriel, as recorded in Daniel, that the term "abomination of desolation" refers directly to the Roman armies around Jerusalem. Christ also applies that term to the same object, when he answers the question of the disciples as to when those stones were to be thrown down. Any argument, therefore, founded upon the assumption that the papal power was the "abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet," is built upon a sandy foundation, and consequently cannot stand.

May the Lord enable us to understand and rightly divide his word, and live out the example of our Master, and finally save us in his kingdom.

DEFINITE TIME.

We have received two communications in relation to our remarks on the meeting held at Middletown, Conn., at which a discussion on definite time took place between Elders Stewart and Pile, and Dr. Chase.

One of these writers lives in Middletown; he desires now to withdraw his article, which we should otherwise have published. He says that we attacked Brn. Stewart and Pile "in a very unfair and unchristianlike manner." Now we said not one word against these gentlemen or about them other than that they took part in the discussion. And all we said about any who are preaching "definite time" was in these words:

"We have nothing to say against the christian character of any of these teachers of definite time. They have a zeal without knowledge, and we oppose them because their mistaken efforts are calculated to do the cause of truth much harm."

And how such remarks can be tortured into smiting Elders S. and P., against whom we said not one word, we do not understand. He says that it was not contrary to expectation that these brethren preached definite time. We believe now that some did and some did not expect it. But if true, there was nothing wrong on the part of the preachers, as their position on that subject was well known, and they had a right to express their belief. He then gives the points of the discussion to show that the Doctor did not get the best of the argument. He thinks the illiterate and unlearned are more likely to understand the time of the Advent than men of learning and ability. We believe none of the various theories rest on the "inspiration of the Almighty," of which he speaks, but on the labors of men who have with pain and patience waded through profane history, drawing one conclusion from this fact, and another from that, an inference here, and a deduction there, and occasionally drawing on imagination to fill up a gap to make out a connected chain of incidents to bring out their argument to the right point. To go over ground such as is necessary to establish any prophetic date in connection with events of history, does require, as Dr. Chase unanswerably maintained, both learning and ability; and it also requires equal ability to follow out such theories and correctly criticise them. Elder Thurman, who is also a preacher of definite time, has successfully overthrown the argument on which Brn. Stewart and Pile base their belief, by pointing out some dozen fatal errors therein.

Prof. Hudson has likewise pointed out the blunders in Eld. Thurman's argument; and so it goes on through the whole list, simply because these theories rest on human calculations based on profane history and not on the word of God. We admit that whatever is revealed in the Bible God's children, learned or unlearned, may understand, and also teach. But our point is that the definite time of Christ's advent is not there revealed, and no one can cite a single text to show that it is, while there are many to prove the contrary. Our Saviour, in his account of his second coming, after detailing all the signs, thus addresses those who have seen them: "Now learn a parable of the fig-tree. When her branch is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near. So ye, in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors." "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. Take ye heed, watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is." Matt. xxiv. 36 onward. Also Mark xiii. 28, 29, 32, 33.

Such admonitions could not have been intended for those in his presence; they must be meant for us who live at this time. And if we proclaim Christ's coming as close as he there has to us, we shall do well, if we do it not to the exclusion of other teachings.

As to the interest excited by the preaching of definite time, we have our own opinion. We have seen great revivals in churches got up by preaching the hell-fire doctrine; the glories of heaven as the home of the saints; the preciousness of the immortal soul, and kindred fables, under which bad men have been converted. So, too, in the definite time movements of 1843–4, and various other periods, men heard then as they may hear now, something that is not true in itself, and be led to believe in that which is true to their salvation. But more harm than good must result from teaching what is wrong, or else we "may do evil that good may come,"—a fallacy on its face.

As already stated, the preaching of definite time is addressed almost entirely to Adventists, of whose piety there is no question, but who are ever ready to make any sacrifice the cause of Christ may seem to demand; and many are led, in their simplicity and confidence in the opinion of their brethren, to believe in "messages," and do things that work them great mischief. Such an example we have in the unfortunate colony that recently went to Palestine; and others that we know of we could cite, and we fear it will prove true to many who are shutting themselves up to their faith in the present time movement. But the power to awaken interest cannot again become great. In 1843 hundreds of thousands became interested in the preaching of definite time, but in each of the succeeding periods fixed upon the numbers became less with each disappointment, until now, outside of the ranks of Advent believers, but little interest is or can be awakened, notwithstanding the talent engaged, the great names paraded as supporters, and the power of the many prophetic tokens that bespeak the drawing near of the great day.

We agree with our brother in his estimate of the ability of Elders Stewart and Pile. The former has presented the ablest argument on the "Atonement" we ever heard, but we wish he did not mar its conclusions by after disclaimers; and we should rejoice if the latter would employ his brilliant talents in presenting the doctrines of Christ the LIFE-GIVER, and confine himself to the Bible evidence of the Advent, and we doubt not the blessing of God would attend their labors, and perishing men would be awakened and saved. As the case now stands they may awaken some interest by their preaching, but it will be entirely lost when the point of time fixed upon passes, and with it their influence will be impaired, those who have staked everything on their belief will be dismayed if not lost, as occurred in similar previous excitements, and the world will come to look upon the whole subject of the impending judgment day as a foolish delusion, and refuse to listen to anything on the subject.

We do believe and rejoice in the expectation of the second appearing of our Saviour, and that soon; and we are as anxious as any of our brethren that it should be proclaimed in strict accordance with the evidence presented in the Bible. But not to ignore, as some of these brethren have done publicly, the other truths of God's word as of no importance at this juncture. We contend against them as we do against those who believe in the resurrection to life of the wicked to be again destroyed, as we oppose the various fables of the religious sects, and every other error, not to smite those who thus differ from us, nor to deny them a christian character, but that the truth of God may be proclaimed in its purity and simplicity, that men may be enlightened and converted by its power in accordance with our Master's great commission—"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." W. M.

"THE WAGES OF SIN IS DEATH."

What must I understand by wages? If I were seeking work in a distant manufactory, I first ask the proprietor if he wishes to hire me, provided I understood the business? He then asks me, what wages I desire? I would of course understand what he meant. Thus can we understand what the wages of sin is. It is what man receives for sin, viz., death. And what is sin? Sin is the transgression of the law, or disobedience to the command of God. When God placed Adam in Eden he gave him permission to eat of the trees of the garden. But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil he must not eat of it! if he did he must surely die, or forfeit his life. In process of time, Adam transgressed, or disobeyed: sinned. Consequently he had to forfeit his life, or die. This was what God demanded for disobedience, or gave for the wages of sin. As life was given to him, or was to be perpetuated by obedience to God, so it was to be taken from him for disobedience. And what is death? It is the extinction of life, or cessation of life. What is life? It is something that keeps man, animals, trees, &c., from decomposition and decay. Then what is death? It is that which works decomposition and decay in any substance after the principle that preserves it has been taken away. Thus it is clear to the mind that the wages of transgression is decomposition and decay. It is preached in the church pulpits of our civilized and enlightened world, that the wages of sin is eternal life in fire and brimstone. If this be the wages of sin, why was it not made known to Adam? Peradventure he might not have disobeyed on account of the severity of the punishment. And if so be that eternal suffering is the punishment, then why did not Christ make such an atonement or sacrifice for sin? If this had been the penalty, then the human family would have had to suffer eternally, and Christ with them. But thanks be to God, the wages of sin is death only; and Jesus has suffered it freely for us, and has satisfied the demand of the law, that he might redeem us who believe on him from under the dominion of death and give us a life upon which death can have no power or claims.

The Gospel Plan.

O, how I love it; how its simplicity and beauty now shine forth! How easy it is to defend it; how the golden chain connects all its parts together; how its several notes chord, emitting a most beautiful harmony. Love is the key-note and the finishing doxology of the piece.

As never before, we can now declare while we deeply feel its meaning, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." We will notice some points relating to it.

The first man (Adam) is of the earth, earthy; his origin was in dust, he is constituted of perishable material, like all other natural things and animals with which we are surrounded. All things here have one common origin and destiny; springing from dust they return to dust again. This law of nature is constantly being fulfilled before our eyes. Facts everywhere teach the mortality of all created things. False theology, doctors of divinity, traditions, and superstition, headed up by "Thou shalt not surely die," teach immortality as a present possession. But the enlightened christian is satisfied to wait God's time for its bestowment, which is forthcoming in the second Adam. As we have borne the image of the earthly, and subject to the same law, of course death, so we (who are sealed with the Holy Spirit) shall bear the image of the heavenly. "The second man; the Lord from heaven." How intimate is this relationship; "as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly." How plain Paul makes this subject in 1 Cor. xv. How it makes my heart glow with thankfulness and praise to think of God's mercy towards all men; yes, his love, in their destruction, whose course of conduct has rendered them incapable, consequently unfit for a future existence. Even this life is made almost insupportable by their abuse of God's mercies. How good to let them perish forever, sink into the tomb and "never see light."

I am not ashamed of this phase of gospel truth, but am bold to hold up its light; show its consistency and beauty; and it finds some who see a fitness in it not before appreciated. This view takes out all the kinks, makes all whole links, and presents a perfect chain, binding all God's purposes in love divine together.

Haverhill, Mass.

The Justice of God.

An old and celebrated theological lecturer, speaking of a certain class of Christians, says: "They deny the vindictive justice of God, which the heathen, with more sense, admitted. And, indeed, the greatest part of the law of God, as well as the history of Providence, contains little else than a display of God's vindictive justice." VINDICTIVE—why the very word repels us. But what is its meaning? Webster says: "Revengeful; given to revenge." Such a character suits the unjust judge; but not the Judge of all the earth, who will do right. Such language represents the Holy One as possessed of the passions of depraved humanity. We can fear a vindictive man, especially if we are in his power, but it is impossible to repose confidence in him. It is impossible for the heart to love him. Clothe such a character with almighty power, and it is more to be dreaded than any being in the universe, and is the farthest from being the object of love.

But, as has been said, Right is the primary meaning of the word. Justice is that attribute of the Holy One, which leads him invariably to do that which is right, and nothing except what is right. It is his attribute of right-doing.—Am. Presb.

Nothing betrays so much weakness of understanding, as not to perceive the misery of man without God. Nothing is a surer token of extreme baseness of spirit than not to wish for the reality of eternal promises. No man is so truly a coward, as he that acts brave against heaven.—Pascal.

The Herald of Life.

This number completes the first half of the present volume. Those who have paid only to this time should remit for the last half immediately, or they may find a break in their file which cannot be supplied. We hope, also that all our friends will exert themselves to increase the number of subscribers for the remainder of this volume. The subject of "Life only in Christ" is becoming one of deeper interest, continually: the ranks of our opposers are manifestly giving way, and now is the time to push the battle against the walls of Babylon—or the babel of misnamed "Orthodoxy," which has so long dishonored the God of truth and love by its "vain philosophy" about "inherent immortality" and "future tortures," in the world to come, of wicked men." The corruptions of men, who have perverted the word of God, and made it "void by their traditions," have received a check and a wound, from which we trust they never will recover. Let every lover of the glorious truth of life future and eternal only through Christ come up to the work as men ought to do whom God has blessed with such light, and we shall have cause to bless him forever that He was pleased to use us in so noble, so God honoring a work. Our opposers have exhausted their arguments, and only deal in the stale, thread-bare, and worn out traditionary notes, which have sound, but neither sense or scripture to give them substance. Their Babel trembles to its base; and the armies of the truth of "Life only in Christ" have only to stand to their arms and push the battle like christians who have made up their minds to fight with the one cry of, "The Sword of the LORD and of His hosts," to cause the Midianitish army to fall back or surrender. Let our christianity be purged speedily from the shocking abomination of "immortal souls" and "future" useless "torments," whether "temporary" or "eternal:" both, alike, are a reproach on the government of that God who "so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Glory be given to God and the Lamb, "the day star" has arisen "in our hearts," and is shining on the world. May the Sun of glory soon follow its path-way; and the night of superstition and revenge, born in paganism and spunged on to christianity, in the dark ages since the days of the Apostles, soon be known no more, only in history as the blasphemy that so long marred the beautiful countenance of our heaven born religion—CHRIST THE LIFE-GIVER.

Acts xxiv. 14, 15.

This stronghold of those who affirm the wicked dead will have a resurrection is totally demolished by Judge HALSTED in his THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE. His translation of the text confirms the position we have long held and maintained. We could not claim the ability to translate as he has done, but the whole connection, and Paul's universal teaching, shows that he held no such doctrine as a revival from the dead of wicked men. Judge HALSTED sets this text in its true light, with a masterly hand, and crushes to powder the blasphemous idea of a revival into life of dead sinners, either for temporary or eternal torture; or to die again.

He commences his approach to Acts xxiv. 14, 15 by introducing Paul before the council of Sadducees and Pharisees. We give his entire remarks, though somewhat lengthy. They are as follows:

Acts xxiii. 6: Gr., Perceiving but Paul that the one part is of Sadducees, but the other of Pharisees, he cried out in the council: Men brothers, I Pharisee am, son of Pharisee: peri, concerning (a) hope kai, but, or, and, of (a) resurrection nekron, of dead, I krinomai, am criticised, or judged: Rh., concerning the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question: E. V., the same, except of instead of concerning. Ver. 7; Gr., And this of [for, by] him being spoken, there became stasis, (a) discord, dissension, of the Pharisees and the Sadducees, and was spilt the crowd. Ver. 9; E. V., And there arose a great cry: and the scribes (that were) of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, We find no evil in this man. [We thus see that what Paul said in Acts xxiii. 6 had the effect to produce a difference of feeling and opinion in the Pharisees towards him; and he was taken away unharmed: the Pharisees being, for the time satisfied with his words: they no doubt understood from his words that his doctrine of resurrection was the same as theirs.]

Now, in chap. xxiv. 20, 21, Paul, in giving to Felix an account of what passed in the council, says v. 20, Gr., or let these themselves say, whether any they found in me offence, standing me in the council, v. 21, Whether of this one phone, word or speech, which I vociferated, standing en, among, them: That peri, concerning (a) resurrection nekron, of dead, I krinomai: Rh., Except it be for this one voice only, that I cried standing among them, concerning the resurrection of the dead am I judged: E. V., ... the resurrection of the dead.

We now have from Paul, in xxiii. 6, the words "(a) hope of (a) resurrection of the dead;" and in xxiv. 21 these words, "of (a) resurrection of the dead." By his words in xxiv. 21, he means, of course, just what he means by his words in xxiii. 6. Now between these two verses we have the two verses Acts xxiv. 14, 15, this v. 15 being one of the two verses which Olshausen, as before seen, imagines to contain a direct declaration of the resurrection of the unjust. We are now prepared to learn what Paul means in these two verses Acts xxiv. 14, 15: v. 14, Gr., I acknowledge, however, this to thee [Felix], that kata, after, or according to, the way which they count sect, so I serve to the paternal God, believing all those [things] kata, the law, and by the prophets written: v. 15, (A) hope having in God; [What hope? Of course the same hope he had expressed before the council, in xxiii. 6, (a) hope of (a) resurrection of dead; and the same hope which he expresses more shortly in xxiv. 21 by, "of (a) resurrection of dead I krinomai."] In xxiv. 15, after his words, "(A) hope having in God," Paul does not repeat in words what his hope was: it was not at all necessary that he should do so, he having before said what his hope was. He therefore, after his words "A hope having in God," leaves understood what his hope was, namely, the same hope he had before expressed—"of a resurrection of dead." The Gr. word for such leaving to be understood is elleipsis, defined, a leaving behind, a leaving to be understood something that is necessary to complete the sense: we call it ellipsis. This verse, therefore, is to be read and understood just as it would be if Paul had not left an ellipsis, but had spoken thus: A hope having in God of a resurrection of dead; the verse then proceeds, hen [the relative pronoun in the accusative feminine, agreeing with anastasin in the verse, and which two words are therefore to go together] hen anastasin, which resurrection [what resurrection? Certainly the resurrection before mentioned,—a resurrection of dead] even these themselves [the Pharisees] expect to be about to be, expect will be—of just te, indeed, kai, but, or, also, of unjust. And when called before Agrippa to answer the same accusation as to his doctrine of resurrection, Paul says, Acts xxvi. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8; v. 4, E. V., My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews; v. 5; E. V. which knew me from the beginning, (if they would testify) that, after the most straitest sect of our religion, I lived a Pharisee. Ver. 6; Gr., And now concerning (a) hope of the to the fathers promise made by God I stood criticised, or, judged: v. 7; E. V., Unto which (promise) our twelve tribes, instantly serving (God) day and night, hope to come; for which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Ver. 8; Gr., Why incredible krinetai, is judged, by you, that God, nekrous dead, will raise? Rheims, and E. V., that God should raise the dead? [Observe that there is an ellipsis in xxvi. 6; Paul does not there state what his hope is.]

The Lat. in Acts xxiv. 15, is, (A) hope having in God (ellipsis, of a resurrection of dead), quam (accusative, agreeing with resurrectionem in the verse), which resurrection even these themselves expect to be about to be of just, et, also, even, of unjust: Rh., ... look for, in place of expect, Ital., as of just, so of unjust; the which [i. e., of unjust] they likewise expect: E. V., And have hope toward God which they themselves allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. [This E. V. verse is at once condemned by its use of the word allow instead of expect, and its use of "of the dead" instead of "of dead." And we have only to give, for the Gr. kai, but, which the Ital., and E. V., so often give for it, and the verse is still more plain. And the Ital of the v. is perfectly plain: and the Lat. of it sufficiently so. Why did not the E. V. here follow the Ital., which it follows so frequently?] We now read again the Gr. verse with the ellipsis filled: (A) hope having in God of [a] resurrection of dead, which resurrection [of dead,] even these themselves expect to be about to be of dead, of just indeed, but, or, also, of unjust: [i. e., the Pharisees expected a resurrection of dead, &c.] We now see why James's Ecclesiastics used the word allow, instead of expect, which even the three other versions use; the Rheims, look for, being equivalent to the Lat. and Ital. expect. By not filling the ellipsis,—not being willing to have "of a resurrection of dead" expressed or taken as understood, they would have Paul say, he had a hope in God (E. V., hope toward God) of a resurrection of all the dead, unjust as well as just. They thus make the whole verse to be governed and controlled by the first word in the verse, the Gr. (A) hope having. Hence they could not say, And have hope toward God which they (the Pharisees) also expect; to expect hope being absurd language. Therefore, instead of the true word, expect, they substitute the word allow. But it is plain from the two verses, 14 and 15, and the subject on which Paul was speaking, namely resurrection of dead, that the absurd idea, that Paul hoped in God for the resurrection of the unjust as well as of the just, was not the idea that governed the words Paul used in the subseqnent part of v. 15; but that the governing idea was, as shown in v. 14, such a resurrection as the fathers believed in, namely, that resurrection which kata, after, or, according to, the law and by the prophets written. And the language at the end of v. 14 necessarily gives to the words with which v. 15 begins the meaning—such a hope on the subject of resurrection as the law and the prophets taught, and as, consequently, the fathers believed in, namely, a resurrection of the just, and of them only: and we have seen, reader, that no other resurrection is taught in the law or by the prophets.

In v. 13, as the reader has observed, I have put together the relative pronoun hen, which (in the accusative), and the noun anatasin (in the accusative) to which hen relates; and have rendered, which resurrection [i. e., of dead] these themselves, &c. The rules of syntax require that the two be put together. In the Gr. and the Lat. it matters not how words are placed in a clause or sentence; the rules of syntax—agreement and government—determine how the clause or sentence is to be rendered in English. And in one of the very verses above cited from this chap. xxiv, of Acts we have another instance of such collocation of Greek words in a sentence. It is Acts xxiv. 20; where the Gr. is, ... whether any they found in me offence: we should say, whether they found any offence in me. And in Acts xxvi. 6, before given, we have another instance of such collocation in the Greek.

What Paul said before the council, Acts xxiii. 6, was for the ear of the Pharisees, who, he saw, constituted a part of the council, and who, he knew, believed in a resurrection of dead. But Paul does not say that even the Pharisees believed in a resurrection of the dead (i. e., of all the dead, as Orthodoxy would have the word the, in the E. V. of the verse to mean), both of the just and unjust. Paul had been a Pharisee, and knew what their belief was and knew that they believed no such thing. He knew that, contrary to the Sadducees, they believed in a resurrection of dead; and this Paul, too, believed. To this extent Paul and the Pharisees were agreed on the subject of resurrection. But Paul tells us that, beyond this, the Pharisees believed in a resurrection of unjust. Paul does not say that they believed in a resurrection of the unjust (which Orthodoxy would say means all the unjust). He does not impute that to them; nor does Paul say that he believed in such a resurrection as that; but he says they believed in a resurrection of dead, of just indeed, kai, but, or, also, of unjust. Did the Pharisees believe in a resurrection of all the dead, Gentiles and all? Certainly not. They believed that they themselves, by reason of their being of the flesh and blood of Abraham—would all be raised from the dead. Whether they believed from Isa. xlv. 25; lx. 21, and perhaps some other verses, that all Israel would be saved, as being of the flesh and blood of Abraham, I don't know. Did Paul believe that all Israel would be saved, or even that all the Pharisees would be saved,—raised from the dead? He had heard better teaching, and had accepted it; a teaching which his brother Pharisees had refused and still refused to accept. He had learned that flesh and blood, i. e., that being of the flesh and blood of Abraham,—children of Abraham—was not sufficient to entitle one to be a child of resurrection. Read E. V., Matt. v. 20; . . . ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven: Rh., you shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven: the Gr. is, you shall not come into basileian, sovereign rule, and government, of [i. e., proceeding from] the heavens. And at the end of v. 19, where the Rh., and E. V., have, the kingdom of heaven, the Gr. is, basileia of [proceeding from] the heaven: and in all other places where the Rh. and E. V. have the kingdom of heaven, the Gr. is, the basileia, &c. Read in E. V., Matt. ix. 11, 12; xii. 34; xv. 14; xvi. 6, 11, 12; where Jesus tells his disciples to take heed and beware of the leaven—of the doctrine—of the Pharisees, and of the Sadducees: thus condemning the doctrine both of the one and of the other; showing that the Sadducees were wrong in saying there would be no resurrection at all; and that the Pharisees were wrong in saying that unjust would be raised. And Paul was a disciple—a learner—scholar—of the Christ. And yet orthodoxy would have us so read Acts xxiv. 15, as to make Paul say that the Pharisees believed in a resurrection of the dead, i. e., as orthodoxy says, of all the dead, both of the just and unjust; and that he Paul believed just as they did. And the orthodox Olshausen says, as the orthodox Alford tells us, that this verse is "a direct declaration of a bodily resurrection of the unjust as well as of the just." Acts xxii. 8 shows that Paul, before he embraced the Christ, had been a persecutor of him, like his brother Pharisees.

To show that the Pharisees were deadly enemies of Jesus, and of course of the converted Paul who had deserted them, read in E. V. Matt. xii 14; xv. 12; xix. 3; xxi. 45, 46; xxii. 15.

Did Paul, when he stood accused before the council, Acts xxiii. 6, believe that there would be a resurrection of unjust? Not at all; as all his teaching on the subject of resurrection conclusively shows. If he did, why had he left the Pharisees? He left them because he embraced Christianity; that being what he means by "the way," in Acts xxii. 4; and so our Ed. says in the margin.

It is clear, therefore, that when Paul spoke what he said before the council, Acts xxiii 6, there was a point beyond which his doctrine of resurrection did not agree with that of the Pharisees. But what he said, and the way he arranged his words (even if we take it that they were put together as here reported by Luke, as they appear in my copy of the Greek), had the effect of dividing the crowd of his accusers into two opposing parties, Pharisees and Sadducees;—an effect to produce which he was at least excusable for an ellipsis and for the collocation he made of his words in the subsequent part of the verse; if indeed he had any such intention by the ellipsis and such collocation; for they were both perfectly natural and consistent with the usage of the language. Paul was a Hebrew, a learned Hebrew; and ellipses frequently occur in the Hebrew, and also in the Greek.

The Greek, as well as the Hebrew, was written without points. The E. V. verse uses the word allow with a comma after it, and has a resurrection in the nominative case, whereas in the Gr., and in the Lat., resurrection is in the accusative: and so the E. V., by putting a resurrection in the nominative, was compelled to insert that there before its words, shall be a resurrection. Now by inserting the true word expect instead of allow, and putting no comma after expect, and striking out the E. V. word the before dead and before just, and putting which resurrection together (they agreeing with each other in the accusative), the E. V. verse, without filling the ellipsis, will read thus: And have hope toward God, which resurrection they themselves [the Pharisees] expect shall be of dead, both of just and unjust. And this plainly shows that there is an ellipsis after the words toward God. And by filling the ellipsis (as before) and taking out the comma and the improper words used in the E. V. the verse is perfectly plain: And have hope toward God, of a resurrection of dead, which resurrection they themselves expect shall be of dead, both of just and unjust.

THE PASSOVER, OR LORD'S SUPPER.—The friends of Jesus in this city and vicinity, will meet to attend to that Supper, April 18th, probably in the Cooper Institute, where they have met for sevaral years past, corner of 4th Ave. and 8th Street. It will be free for all who choose to unite in it, who love our LIFE-GIVER. While we thus meet, let none suppose it is necessary to leave their own houses to make attention to the Passover Supper valid to them. If Providence prevents your associating with others, for this purpose, you can celebrate it alone to your comfort and to Divine acceptance. The hour, in this city, will be half past seven o'clock in the evening. We trust no believer in this yearly celebration will neglect it for the lack of associates.

The Metaphors of St. Paul.

[Concluded from No. 164.]

One part of the armor remains—the SWORD—"the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God,"—i. e., the sword which the Spirit gives, and which is none other than God's revealed truth. This is the one offensive weapon. We are not sanctioned in the use of any other: all the rest of our armor is defensive; and this is very instructive. Our conflict is not with man, but with sin. We have no angry passions of our own to gratify. Our duty is steadfastly to resist: and when we strike, we must strike only with the weapon which God puts into our hands. All this is made more emphatic, if we observe that one weapon—the most characteristic weapon of the Roman soldier—the great pilum or pike, which Macaulay has introduced with strict truth into one of his "Lays of Rome"—this weapon is entirely omitted. Here the parallel is left incomplete. Can we doubt that this was done purposely? The silence of scripture has its meaning as well as its actual words.

I abstain from further and closer practical comments. These would enter into the regions of christian experience, and would belong to a treatise of a deeper kind. I will only now, through a few remaining paragraphs, follow the same thread of thought, where it conducts us to one or two other places, in which (as I have said) military metaphors are employed, less obviously at first sight, though not less forcibly.

Some of these relate to the long operation of campaigning, rather than the mere putting on of armor. Thus, when Timotheus is admonished to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ," it is added by the apostle: "No man that goeth on a campaign entangleth himself with the common affairs of life, that he may please him that hath chosen him to be a soldier." It is to be regretted that the expression "this life" should have found a place in the English version, inasmuch as it mixes the metaphor with the thing intended, besides stating what is not true. For if one thing above all others belongs peculiarly to this life, it is war. This, however, does not hinder war, in the form of a prolonged campaign, from furnishing most apt illustrations of three things which are expected from the christian—patient endurance, firm separation from those interests which are not compatible with his main purpose, and an earnest desire to please his Commander.

There is again a passage in the early part of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, which involves no difficulty as to its general meaning, but great part of the vividness of which we lose by not noticing how imagery, drawn from the conduct of a campaign, runs through the whole of the context. In the last passage the reference was to an individual soldier; here it is to a commander. St. Paul is speaking in peremptory language of his apostolic power and authority. The military phraseology starts suddenly to view in the third verse—"Though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh." This is clear enough. But in what follows it is not always remarked that every phrase to the end of the sixth verse is appropriate to some part of a campaign, and drawn in fact from the familiar experience of those terrible Roman wars which were well remembered in every region through which the apostle travelled. No one will question this as regards the words "weapons," and "warfare." But the "strongholds" are the rock forts, such as those which once bristled along the coast of his native Cilicia, and of which he must often have heard, when his father told him how they were "pulled down" by the Romans in their war against the pirates. Those "high things that exalt themselves"—those high eminences of the pride of nature—occupied in force by hostile troops—had been a familiar experience in many wars throughout Asia Minor, while one of the grandest of all was the Acropolis that towered over Corinth. But this is not all. Ancient warfare ended with the taking of prisoners who were carried into some safe place [such as this very Acropolis] where obedience would be secure. So the apostle speaks of "bringing into captivity every thought unto [or rather into] the obedience of Christ." And then, further, if in a country that had been conquered on the whole, rebellions were here and there to break out again, it was not the habit of the Romans to desist till complete subordination was established. So the apostle holds himself in readiness to "revenge all disobedience," even when on the whole (for this he will not doubt) the general "obedience" of the Corinthian church is "fulfilled." Here then are a series of phrases which describe the vigorous prosecution of a campaign, and the determined subjugation of the last symptom of rebellion. And who will say that we do not lose by failing to notice this character of the language? Who will say that we do not gain by allowing it to have its natural and close association with what history tells of the course and the consolidation of Roman military conquest?

And more yet remains to be said concerning even this section of the subject. St. Paul pursues the progress of the campaign till it reaches that which, in a Roman's eyes, was the most glorious of all consummations, the progress of the triumphal procession after final victory; and he introduces God himself as the victor and the leader of the triumph Twice we find this image expressed with the technical and classical word which belongs to the subject: once when the great conquest effected through the death of Christ is the topic of the apostle's enthusiastic sentences, and once when the progressive advance of the gospel of Christ is represented in language strictly suitable to the long procession of conqueror and captives by the Sacred Way to the Capitol. In the former case the words are brief and simple which describe the "open display" of the defeat of "principalities and powers." In the latter the description is prolonged and given in detail. The doctrine preached by the apostle "in every place" is compared to the fragrance which filled the streets from clouds of incense, while the fatal doom of the captives contrasted with the exulting joy of the citizens is an expressive image of the awful alternative which separates the hearers of the gospel into "them that are saved," and "them that are lost."

And still the whole subject of the military metaphors of St. Paul is not exhausted. There are other passages where the same expressive imagery occurs; as when he tells us that "without were fightings, within were fears," a description of his own experience which may well give encouragement to us: or as when he speaks of the "law in our members waging war against the law of the mind and taking us captive," and perhaps our own experience is enough to make us aware that no metaphor would be more suitable to the case than one derived from the dreadful realities of war: or as when he assures his most consistent converts that "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall garrison their hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." It is a beautiful instance of holy irony, like that which we noticed before, when we saw that "the preparation of the gospel of peace" was an essential part of the "armor of God." And the natural conclusion of these remarks is an allusion to the Great Resurrection, when "the trumpet shall sound," and every faithful christian warrior shall have his place in his own "order" or "division" of the vast army of the Lord of Hosts. [1 Cor. xv. 23.]

"Alone," By Elder J. Parry.

This is a grand good piece. I feel it so, just now in particular; for it is within a few days of the 2nd anniversary of my son-in-law and my daughter's death. "Nature will mourn departed friends," and cause one to feel lonely. I can truly sympathize with you, Br. and sister, in your bereavement. "Alone," and yet I am not alone; my Saviour is near. He is, I sometimes think, just trying me to see whether I will still cleave to, and trust him or not. "Alone." No, not while I have brothers and sisters such as write for the HERALD OF LIFE. How I would love to meet with those of like precious faith, at the next anniversary of the

he must surely die, or forfeit his life. In process of time, Adam transgressed, or disobeyed: sinned. Consequently he had to forfeit his life, or die. This was what God demanded for disobedience, or gave for the wages of sin. As life was given to him, or was to be perpetuated by obedience to God, so it was to be taken from him for disobedience. And what is death? It is the extinction of life, or cessation of life. What is life? It is something that keeps man, animals, trees, &c., from decomposition and decay. Then what is death? It is that which works decomposition and decay in any substance after the principle that preserves it has been taken away. Thus it is clear to the mind that the wages of transgression is decomposition and decay. It is preached in the church pulpits of our civilized and enlightened world, that the wages of sin is eternal life in fire and brimstone. If this be the wages of sin, why was it not made known to Adam? Peradventure he might not have disobeyed on account of the severity of the punishment. And if so be that eternal suffering is the punishment, then why did not Christ make such an atonement or sacrifice for sin? If this had been the penalty, then the human family would have had to suffer eternally, and Christ with them. But thanks be to God, the wages of sin is death only; and Jesus has suffered it freely for us, and has satisfied the demand of the law, that he might redeem us who believe on him from under the dominion of death and give us a life upon which death can have no power or claims.

The Gospel Plan.

O, how I love it; how its simplicity and beauty now shine forth! How easy it is to defend it; how the golden chain connects all its parts together; how its several notes chord, emitting a most beautiful harmony. Love is the key-note and the finishing doxology of the piece.

As never before, we can now declare while we deeply feel its meaning, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." We will notice some points relating to it.

The first man (Adam) is of the earth, earthy; his origin was in dust, he is constituted of perishable material, like all other natural things and animals with which we are surrounded. All things here have one common origin and destiny; springing from dust they return to dust again. This law of nature is constantly being fulfilled before our eyes. Facts everywhere teach the mortality of all created things. False theology, doctors of divinity, traditions, and superstition, headed up by "Thou shalt not surely die," teach immortality as a present possession. But the enlightened christian is satisfied to wait God's time for its bestowment, which is forthcoming in the second Adam. As we have borne the image of the earthly, and subject to the same law, of course death, so we (who are sealed with the Holy Spirit) shall bear the image of the heavenly. "The second man; the Lord from heaven." How intimate is this relationship; "as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly." How plain Paul makes this subject in 1 Cor. xv. How it makes my heart glow with thankfulness and praise to think of God's mercy towards all men; yes, his love, in their destruction, whose course of conduct has rendered them incapable, consequently unfit for a future existence. Even this life is made almost insupportable by their abuse of God's mercies. How good to let them perish forever, sink into the tomb and "never see light."

I am not ashamed of this phase of gospel truth, but am bold to hold up its light; show its consistency and beauty; and it finds some who see a fitness in it not before appreciated. This view takes out all the kinks, makes all whole links, and presents a perfect chain, binding all God's purposes in love divine together.

The Justice of God.

An old and celebrated theological lecturer, speaking of a certain class of Christians, says: "They deny the vindictive justice of God, which the heathen, with more sense, admitted. And, indeed, the greatest part of the law of God, as well as the history of Providence, contains little else than a display of God's vindictive justice." VINDICTIVE—why the very word repels us. But what is its meaning? Webster says: "Revengeful; given to revenge." Such a character suits the unjust judge; but not the Judge of all the earth, who will do right. Such language represents the Holy One as possessed of the passions of depraved humanity. We can fear a vindictive man, especially if we are in his power, but it is impossible to repose confidence in him. It is impossible for the heart to love him. Clothe such a character with almighty power, and it is more to be dreaded than any being in the universe, and is the farthest from being the object of love.

But, as has been said, Right is the primary meaning of the word. Justice is that attribute of the Holy One, which leads him invariably to do that which is right, and nothing except what is right. It is his attribute of right-doing.—Am. Presb.

Nothing betrays so much weakness of understanding, as not to perceive the misery of man without God. Nothing is a surer token of extreme baseness of spirit than not to wish for the reality of eternal promises. No man is so truly a coward, as he that acts brave against heaven.—Pascal.

The Herald of Life.

This number completes the first half of the present volume. Those who have paid only to this time should remit for the last half immediately, or they may find a break in their file which cannot be supplied. We hope, also that all our friends will exert themselves to increase the number of subscribers for the remainder of this volume. The subject of "Life only in Christ" is becoming one of deeper interest, continually: the ranks of our opposers are manifestly giving way, and now is the time to push the battle against the walls of Babylon—or the babel of misnamed "Orthodoxy," which has so long dishonored the God of truth and love by its "vain philosophy" about "inherent immortality" and "future tortures, in the world to come, of wicked men." The corruptions of men, who have perverted the word of God, and made it "void by their traditions," have received a check and a wound, from which we trust they never will recover. Let every lover of the glorious truth of life future and eternal only through Christ come up to the work as men ought to do whom God has blessed with such light, and we shall have cause to bless him forever that He was pleased to use us in so noble, so God honoring a work. Our opposers have exhausted their arguments, and only deal in the stale, thread-bare, and worn out traditionary notes, which have sound, but neither sense or scripture to give them substance. Their Babel trembles to its base; and the armies of the truth of "Life only in Christ" have only to stand to their arms and push the battle like christians who have made up their minds to fight with the one cry of, "The Sword of the LORD and of His hosts," to cause the Midianitish army to fall back or surrender. Let our christianity be purged speedily from the shocking abomination of "immortal souls" and "future" useless "torments," whether "temporary" or "eternal:" both, alike, are a reproach on the government of that God who "so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Glory be given to God and the Lamb, "the day star" has arisen "in our hearts," and is shining on the world. May the Sun of glory soon follow its path-way; and the night of superstition and revenge, born in paganism and spunged on to christianity, in the dark ages since the days of the Apostles, soon be known no more, only in history as the blasphemy that so long marred the beautiful countenance of our heaven born religion—CHRIST THE LIFE-GIVER.

Acts xxiv. 14, 15.

This stronghold of those who affirm the wicked dead will have a resurrection is totally demolished by Judge HALSTED in his THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE. His translation of the text confirms the position we have long held and maintained. We could not claim the ability to translate as he has done, but the whole connection, and Paul's universal teaching, shows that he held no such doctrine as a revival from the dead of wicked men. Judge HALSTED sets this text in its true light, with a masterly hand, and crushes to powder the blasphemous idea of a revival into life of dead sinners, either for temporary or eternal torture; or to die again.

He commences his approach to Acts xxiv. 14, 15 by introducing Paul before the council of Sadducees and Pharisees. We give his entire remarks, though somewhat lengthy. They are as follows:

Acts xxiii. 6; Gr., Perceiving but Paul that the one part is of Sadducees, but the other of Pharisees, he cried out in the council: Men brothers, I Pharisee am, son of Pharisee: peri, concerning (a) hope kai, but, or, and, of (a) resurrection nekron, of dead, I krinomai, am criticised, or judged: Rh., concerning the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question: E. V., the same, except of instead of concerning. Ver. 7; Gr., And this of [for, by] him being spoken, there became stasis, (a) discord, dissension, of the Pharisees and the Sadducees, and was split the crowd. Ver. 9; E. V., And there arose a great cry: and the scribes (that were) of the Pharisees' part arose, and strove, saying, We find no evil in this man. [We thus see that what Paul said in Acts xxiii. 6 had the effect to produce a difference of feeling and opinion in the Pharisees towards him; and he was taken away unharmed: the Pharisees being, for the time satisfied with his words: they no doubt understood from his words that his doctrine of resurrection was the same as theirs.]

Now, in chap. xxiv. 20, 21, Paul, in giving to Felix an account of what passed in the council, says v. 20, Gr., or let these themselves say, whether any they found in me offence, standing me in the council, v. 21, Whether of this one phone, word or speech, which I vociferated, standing en, among, them: That peri, concerning (a) resurrection nekron, of dead, I krinomai: Rh., Except it be for this one voice only, that I cried standing among them, concerning the resurrection of the dead am I judged: E. V., ... the resurrection of the dead.

We now have from Paul, in xxiii. 6, the words "(a) hope of (a) resurrection of the dead;" and in xxiv. 21 these words, "of (a) resurrection of the dead." By his words in xxiv. 21, he means, of course, just what he means by his words in xxiii. 6. Now between these two verses we have the two verses Acts xxiv. 14, 15, this v. 15 being one of the two verses which Olshausen, as before seen, imagines to contain a direct declaration of the resurrection of the unjust. We are now prepared to learn what Paul means in these two verses Acts xxiv. 14, 15: v. 14, Gr., I acknowledge, however, this to thee [Felix], that kata, after, or according to, the way which they count sect, so I serve to the paternal God, believing all those [things] kata, the law, and by the prophets written: v. 15, (A) hope having in God; [What hope? Of course the same hope he had expressed before the council, in xxiii. 6, (a) hope of (a) resurrection of dead; and the same hope which he expresses more shortly in xxiv. 21 by, "of (a) resurrection of dead I krinomai"] In xxiv. 15, after his words, "(A) hope having in God," Paul does not repeat in words what his hope was: it was not at all necessary that he should do so, he having before said what his hope was. He therefore, after his words "A hope having in God," leaves understood what his hope was, namely, the same hope he had before expressed—"of a resurrection of dead." The Gr. word for such leaving to be understood is elleipsis, defined, a leaving behind, a leaving to be understood something that is necessary to complete the sense: we call it ellipsis. This verse, therefore, is to be read and understood just as it would be if Paul had not left an ellipsis, but had spoken thus: A hope having in God of a resurrection of dead; the verse then proceeds, hen [the relative pronoun in the accusative feminine, agreeing with anastasin in the verse, and which two words are therefore to go together] hen anastasin, which resurrection [what resurrection? Certainly the resurrection before mentioned,—a resurrection of dead] even these themselves [the Pharisees] expect to be about to be, expect will be—of just te, indeed, kai, but, or, also, of unjust. And when called before Agrippa to answer the same accusation as to his doctrine of resurrection, Paul says, Acts xxvi. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8; v. 4, E. V., My manner of life from my youth, which was at the first among mine own nation at Jerusalem, know all the Jews; v. 5; E. V. which knew me from the beginning, (if they would testify) that, after the most straitest sect of our religion, I lived a Pharisee. Ver. 6; Gr., And now concerning (a) hope of the to the fathers promise made by God I stood criticised, or, judged: v. 7; E. V., Unto which (promise) our twelve tribes, instantly serving (God) day and night, hope to come; for which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Ver. 8; Gr., Why incredible krinetai, is judged, by you, that God, nekrous dead, will raise? Rheims, and E. V., that God should raise the dead? [Observe that there is an ellipsis in xxvi. 6; Paul does not there state what his hope is.]

The Lat. in Acts xxiv. 15, is, (A) hope having in God (ellipsis, of a resurrection of dead), quam (accusative, agreeing with resurrectionem in the verse), which resurrection even these themselves expect to be about to be of just, et, also, even, of unjust: Rh., ... look for, in place of expect, Ital., as of just, so of unjust; the which [i. e., of unjust] they likewise expect: E. V., And have hope toward God which they themselves allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. [This E. V. verse is at once condemned by its use of the word allow instead of expect, and its use of "of the dead" instead of "of dead." And we have only to give, for the Gr. kai, but, which the Ital., and E. V., so often give for it, and the verse is still more plain. And the Ital of the v. is perfectly plain: and the Lat. of it sufficiently so. Why did not the E. V. here follow the Ital., which it follows so frequently?] We now read again the Gr. verse with the ellipsis filled: (A) hope having in God of [a] resurrection of dead, which resurrection [of dead,] even these themselves expect to be about to be of dead, of just indeed, but, or, also, of unjust: [i. e., the Pharisees expected a resurrection of dead, &c.] We now see why James's Ecclesiastics used the word allow, instead of expect, which even the three other versions use; the Rheims, look for, being equivalent to the Lat. and Ital. expect. By not filling the ellipsis,—not being willing to have "of a resurrection of dead" expressed or taken as understood, they would have Paul say, he had a hope in God (E. V., hope toward God) of a resurrection of all the dead, unjust as well as just. They thus make the whole verse to be governed and controlled by the first word in the verse, the Gr. (A) hope having. Hence they could not say, And have hope toward God which they (the Pharisees) also expect; to expect hope being absurd language. Therefore, instead of the true word, expect, they substitute the word allow. But it is plain from the two verses, 14 and 15, and the subject on which Paul was speaking, namely resurrection of dead, that the absurd idea, that Paul hoped in God for the resurrection of the unjust as well as of the just, was not the idea that governed the words Paul used in the subsequent part of v. 15; but that the governing idea was, as shown in v. 14, such a resurrection as the fathers believed in, namely, that resurrection which kata, after, or, according to, the law and by the prophets written. And the language at the end of v. 14 necessarily gives to the words with which v. 15 begins the meaning—such a hope on the subject of resurrection as the law and the prophets taught, and as, consequently, the fathers believed in, namely, a resurrection of the just, and of them only: and we have seen, reader, that no other resurrection is taught in the law or by the prophets.

In v. 13, as the reader has observed, I have put together the relative pronoun hen, which (in the accusative), and the noun anatasin (in the accusative) to which hen relates; and have rendered, which resurrection [i. e., of dead] these themselves, &c. The rules of syntax require that the two be put together. In the Gr. and the Lat. it matters not how words are placed in a clause or sentence; the rules of syntax—agreement and government—determine how the clause or sentence is to be rendered in English. And in one of the very verses above cited from this chap. xxiv, of Acts we have another instance of such collocation of Greek words in a sentence. It is Acts xxiv. 20; where the Gr. is, ... whether any they found in me offence: we should say, whether they found any offense in me. And in Acts xxvi. 6, before given, we have another instance of such collocation in the Greek.

What Paul said before the council, Acts xxiii. 6, was for the ear of the Pharisees, who, he saw, constituted a part of the council, and who, he knew, believed in a resurrection of dead. But Paul does not say that even the Pharisees believed in a resurrection of the dead (i. e., of all the dead, as Orthodoxy would have the word the, in the E. V. of the verse to mean), both of the just and unjust. Paul had been a Pharisee, and knew what their belief was and knew that they believed no such thing. He knew that, contrary to the Sadducees, they believed in a resurrection of dead; and this Paul, too, believed. To this extent Paul and the Pharisees were agreed on the subject of resurrection. But Paul tells us that, beyond this, the Pharisees believed in a resurrection of unjust. Paul does not say that they believed in a resurrection of the unjust (which Orthodoxy would say means all the unjust). He does not impute that to them; nor does Paul say that he believed in such a resurrection as that; but he says they believed in a resurrection of dead, of just indeed, kai, but, or, also, of unjust. Did the Pharisees believe in a resurrection of all the dead, Gentiles and all? Certainly not. They believed that they themselves, by reason of their being of the flesh and blood of Abraham—would all be raised from the dead. Whether they believed from Isa. xlv. 25; lx. 21, and perhaps some other verses, that all Israel would be saved, as being of the flesh and blood of Abraham, I don't know. Did Paul believe that all Israel would be saved, or even that all the Pharisees would be saved,—raised from the dead? He had heard better teaching, and had accepted it; a teaching which his brother Pharisees had refused and still refused to accept. He had learned that flesh and blood, i. e., that being of the flesh and blood of Abraham,—children of Abraham—was not sufficient to entitle one to be a child of resurrection. Read E. V., Matt. v. 20; . . . . ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven: Rh., you shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven: the Gr. is, you shall not come into basileian, sovereign rule, and government, of [i. e., proceeding from] the heavens. And at the end of v. 19, where the Rh., and E. V., have, the kingdom of heaven, the Gr. is, basileia of [proceeding from] the heaven: and in all other places where the Rh. and E. V. have the kingdom of heaven, the Gr. is, the basileia, &c. Read in E. V., Matt. ix. 11, 12; xii. 34; xv. 14; xvi. 6, 11, 12; where Jesus tells his disciples to take heed and beware of the leaven—of the doctrine—of the Pharisees, and of the Sadducees: thus condemning the doctrine both of the one and of the other; showing that the Sadducees were wrong in saying there would be no resurrection at all; and that the Pharisees were wrong in saying that unjust would be raised. And Paul was a disciple—a learner—scholar—of the Christ. And yet orthodoxy would have us so read Acts xxiv. 15, as to make Paul say that the Pharisees believed in a resurrection of the dead, i. e., as orthodoxy says, of all the dead, both of the just and unjust; and that he Paul believed just as they did. And the orthodox Olshausen says, as the orthodox Alford tells us, that this verse is "a direct declaration of a bodily resurrection of the unjust as well as of the just." Acts xxii. 8 shows that Paul, before he embraced the Christ, had been a persecutor of him, like his brother Pharisees.

To show that the Pharisees were deadly enemies of Jesus, and of course of the converted Paul who had deserted them, read in E. V. Matt. xii 14; xv. 12; xix. 3; xxi. 45, 46; xxii. 15.

Did Paul, when he stood accused before the council, Acts xxiii. 6, believe that there would be a resurrection of unjust? Not at all; as all his teaching on the subject of resurrection conclusively shows. If he did, why had he left the Pharisees? He left them because he embraced Christianity; that being what he means by "the way," in Acts xxii. 4; and so our Ed. says in the margin.

It is clear, therefore, that when Paul spoke what he said before the council, Acts xxiii 6, there was a point beyond which his doctrine of resurrection did not agree with that of the Pharisees. But what he said, and the way he arranged his words (even if we take it that they were put together as here reported by Luke, as they appear in my copy of the Greek), had the effect of dividing the crowd of his accusers into two opposing parties, Pharisees and Sadducees;—an effect to produce which he was at least excusable for an ellipsis and for the collocation he made of his words in the subsequent part of the verse; if indeed he had any such intention by the ellipsis and such collocation; for they were both perfectly natural and consistent with the usage of the language. Paul was a Hebrew, a learned Hebrew; and ellipses frequently occur in the Hebrew, and also in the Greek.

The Greek, as well as the Hebrew, was written without points. The E. V. verse uses the word allow with a comma after it, and has a resurrection in the nominative case, whereas in the Gr., and in the Lat., resurrection is in the accusative: and so the E. V., by putting a resurrection in the nominative, was compelled to insert that there before its words, shall be a resurrection. Now by inserting the true word expect instead of allow, and putting no comma after expect, and striking out the E. V. word the before dead and before just, and putting which resurrection together (they agreeing with each other in the accusative), the E. V. verse, without filling the ellipsis, will read thus: And have hope toward God, which resurrection they themselves [the Pharisees] expect shall be of dead, both of just and unjust. And this plainly shows that there is an ellipsis after the words toward God. And by filling the ellipsis (as before) and taking out the comma and the improper words used in the E. V. the verse is perfectly plain: And have hope toward God, of a resurrection of dead, which resurrection they themselves expect shall be of dead, both of just and unjust.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Those who wish to procure Judge HALSTED's work, and have it sent them by mail, should send to him direct, as he offers to send it free of postage to the purchaser, on the receipt of $3. Address, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, No. 417 Broad St., Newark, N. J."

GEO. W. YOUNG, of this city, keeps the work only for the benefit of those in the city, or whose business calls them here, and wish to take the book with them.

THE PASSOVER, OR LORD'S SUPPER.—The friends of Jesus in this city and vicinity, will meet to attend to that Supper, April 18th, probably in the Cooper Institute, where they have met for several years past, corner of 4th Ave. and 8th Street. It will be free for all who choose to unite in it, who love our LIFE-GIVER. While we thus meet, let none suppose it is necessary to leave their own houses to make attention to the Passover Supper valid to them. If Providence prevents your associating with others, for this purpose, you can celebrate it alone to your comfort and to Divine acceptance. The hour, in this city, will be half past seven o'clock in the evening. We trust no believer in this yearly celebration will neglect it for the lack of associates.

The Metaphors of St. Paul.

[Concluded from No. 164.]

One part of the armor remains—the SWORD—"the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God,"—i. e., the sword which the Spirit gives, and which is none other than God's revealed truth. This is the one offensive weapon. We are not sanctioned in the use of any other: all the rest of our armor is defensive; and this is very instructive. Our conflict is not with man, but with sin. We have no angry passions of our own to gratify. Our duty is steadfastly to resist: and when we strike, we must strike only with the weapon which God puts into our hands. All this is made more emphatic, if we observe that one weapon—the most characteristic weapon of the Roman soldier—the great pilum or pike, which Macaulay has introduced with strict truth into one of his "Lays of Rome"—this weapon is entirely omitted. Here the parallel is left incomplete. Can we doubt that this was done purposely? The silence of scripture has its meaning as well as its actual words.

I abstain from further and closer practical comments. These would enter into the regions of christian experience, and would belong to a treatise of a deeper kind. I will only now, through a few remaining paragraphs, follow the same thread of thought, where it conducts us to one or two other places, in which (as I have said) military metaphors are employed, less obviously at first sight, though not less forcibly.

Some of these relate to the long operation of campaigning, rather than the mere putting on of armor. Thus, when Timotheus is admonished to "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ," it is added by the apostle: "No man that goeth on a campaign entangleth himself with the common affairs of life, that he may please him that hath chosen him to be a soldier." It is to be regretted that the expression "this life" should have found a place in the English version, inasmuch as it mixes the metaphor with the thing intended, besides stating what is not true. For if one thing above all others belongs peculiarly to this life, it is war. This, however, does not hinder war, in the form of a prolonged campaign, from furnishing most apt illustrations of three things which are expected from the christian—patient endurance, firm separation from those interests which are not compatible with his main purpose, and an earnest desire to please his Commander.

There is again a passage in the early part of the second Epistle to the Corinthians, which involves no difficulty as to its general meaning, but great part of the vividness of which we lose by not noticing how imagery, drawn from the conduct of a campaign, runs through the whole of the context. In the last passage the reference was to an individual soldier; here it is to a commander. St. Paul is speaking in peremptory language of his apostolic power and authority. The military phraseology starts suddenly to view in the third verse—"Though we walk in the flesh, we do not war after the flesh." This is clear enough. But in what follows it is not always remarked that every phrase to the end of the sixth verse is appropriate to some part of a campaign, and drawn in fact from the familiar experience of those terrible Roman wars which were well remembered in every region through which the apostle travelled. No one will question this as regards the words "weapons," and "warfare." But the "strongholds" are the rock forts, such as those which once bristled along the coast of his native Cilicia, and of which he must often have heard, when his father told him how they were "pulled down" by the Romans in their war against the pirates. Those "high things that exalt themselves"—those high eminences of the pride of nature—occupied in force by hostile troops—had been a familiar experience in many wars throughout Asia Minor, while one of the grandest of all was the Acropolis that towered over Corinth. But this is not all. Ancient warfare ended with the taking of prisoners who were carried into some safe place [such as this very Acropolis] where obedience would be secure. So the apostle speaks of "bringing into captivity every thought unto [or rather into] the obedience of Christ." And then, further, if in a country that had been conquered on the whole, rebellions were here and there to break out again, it was not the habit of the Romans to desist till complete subordination was established. So the apostle holds himself in readiness to "revenge all disobedience," even when on the whole (for this he will not doubt) the general "obedience" of the Corinthian church is "fulfilled." Here then are a series of phrases which describe the vigorous prosecution of a campaign, and the determined subjugation of the last symptom of rebellion. And who will say that we do not lose by failing to notice this character of the language? Who will say that we do not gain by allowing it to have its natural and close association with what history tells of the course and the consolidation of Roman military conquest?

And more yet remains to be said concerning even this section of the subject. St. Paul pursues the progress of the campaign till it reaches that which, in a Roman's eyes, was the most glorious of all consummations, the progress of the triumphal procession after final victory; and he introduces God himself as the victor and the leader of the triumph Twice we find this image expressed with the technical and classical word which belongs to the subject: once when the great conquest effected through the death of Christ is the topic of the apostle's enthusiastic sentences, and once when the progressive advance of the gospel of Christ is represented in language strictly suitable to the long procession of conqueror and captives by the Sacred Way to the Capitol. In the former case the words are brief and simple which describe the "open display" of the defeat of "principalities and powers." In the latter the description is prolonged and given in detail. The doctrine preached by the apostle "in every place" is compared to the fragrance which filled the streets from clouds of incense, while the fatal doom of the captives contrasted with the exulting joy of the citizens is an expressive image of the awful alternative which separates the hearers of the gospel into "them that are saved," and "them that are lost."

And still the whole subject of the military metaphors of St. Paul is not exhausted. There are other passages where the same expressive imagery occurs; as when he tells us that "without were fightings, within were fears," a description of his own experience which may well give encouragement to us: or as when he speaks of the "law in our members waging war against the law of the mind and taking us captive," and perhaps our own experience is enough to make us aware that no metaphor would be more suitable to the case than one derived from the dreadful realities of war: or as when he assures his most consistent converts that "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall garrison their hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." It is a beautiful instance of holy irony, like that which we noticed before, when we saw that "the preparation of the gospel of peace" was an essential part of the "armor of God." And the natural conclusion of these remarks is an allusion to the Great Resurrection, when "the trumpet shall sound," and every faithful christian warrior shall have his place in his own "order" or "division" of the vast army of the Lord of Hosts. [1 Cor. xv. 23.]

"Alone," By Elder J. Parry.

This is a grand good piece. I feel it so, just now in particular; for it is within a few days of the 2nd anniversary of my son-in-law and my daughter's death. "Nature will mourn departed friends," and cause one to feel lonely. I can truly sympathize with you, Br. and sister, in your bereavement. "Alone," and yet I am not alone; my Saviour is near. He is, I sometimes think, just trying me to see whether I will still cleave to, and trust him or not. "Alone." No, not while I have brothers and sisters such as write for the HERALD OF LIFE. How I would love to meet with those of like precious faith, at the next anniversary of the Christian Passover. I feel thankful for the hope of meeting them where parting will never come. I remain truly your friend in sympathy.

Letters and Extracts.

From Helen Robertson.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., March 20, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Yours, with the money order enclosed, I got this morning all right. Thank you and the Lord very much. Thanks also to the friend in South Boston for the five dollars to help the poor. There are many poor needy ones, and I am exceedingly thankful to have something to give when they come saying they have nothing to eat, or they have no shoes, &c. I go among them too, at their destitute homes; so they can't impose on me very easily.

This is a cold, wet, stormy spring, and the poor creatures are indeed suffering. All acknowledge that this is the hardest season the poor in the South have yet had.

Lately an unknown friend in Auburn, N. Y., sent me one dollar. The Lord knows all such, and will reward. Sr. Mary J. Leonard, Pompey, N. Y., who before sent one dollar, has sent ten since. She says she got it mostly among the members of her own family. Br. Denny, and other friends in New Haven, Conn., have sent some clothing, and four dollars in money. Sr. Eliza J. Jackson, Oceanport, N. J., has also sent me two dollars. In the name of the suffering poor, I thank these dear brethren and sisters, and shall distribute all their alms as faithfully as I can. I wish they could see the thankful ones when their needs are relieved.

Who would not pray for the time to come when all this extreme poverty, suffering and degradation shall be at an end forever? Methinks all would, unless those who believe in eternal, unmitigated torture. That now appears so horrible that we wonder if any really sane mind can believe it. Suffering from extreme poverty only for a winter or two is truly hard; but what would it be if the old theological, God-dishonoring doctrine were true? Thank God our eyes have been opened to see that it is a lie on his government, and has no foundation in his blessed word. It is good to be free from it. The truth has made us free, and we are free indeed. Yes, and feel like standing fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, never again to be entangled with the yoke of bondage. It was a hard yoke indeed.

We are glad, too, to find that the Bible doesn't teach that the wages of sin is torment, even of the shortest duration; but death. Nothing more or less.

The majority think that is not sufficent punishment. God must have the poor victims brought back to life so he can pour out a revengeful spirit on them, and thus be satisfied! We are afraid many such measure God by themselves, instead of by the plain declarations of his holy word.

Let us be patient. The leaven is working, and the truth will stand. We are glad to see that another strong one has been added to our number, namely, Judge HALSTED, of Newark, N. J. Honest, truth-seeking minds are at work; and we believe the day will declare many such. Would that they had courage to take a bold stand for truth, and thus honor God and his word.

Your sister, desiring to be on the side of God and truth.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The articles in "The Truth Promoter," sent from Scotland, are too stale to be worth noticing on this side the Atlantic. The fallacy of their positions has been so often exposed and refuted, here, that our readers would consider it a waste of time and money to add another review of them. If the Scotlanders wish to Promote Truth let them send for "THE BIBLE THEOLOGY," by HON. O. S. HALSTED, Newark, N. J., and they will find they have more light on the truth than is ever likely to appear in the path they are now treading. What are the Life Believers in England and Scotland doing, that such stale arguments as appear in This Truth Promoter should dare be published by intelligent men? Where is Mr. ROBERTS, who battled with Mr. NIGHTINGALE so nobly last year? We have tried to draw him out, and have sent him the HERALD OF LIFE for months without eliciting a response. We would be glad to know that he and others have not settled down on their laurels of past victories. Up, men of God, on the other side of the Atlantic, and let us hear the sound of battle there, as well as in America. Fear not the Goliahs of immortal-soulism. They must, and they will fall by the hands of those whom they now "defy." God is against their vain traditions, and all good men must soon be against them, too. So onward to the battle.

HORNSBY, ILLS., March 11, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I am, through the mercy of my heavenly Father, in good health; and so are all God's dear children out here. They are contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and fearlessly proclaim that life is only to be obtained by belief in the LIFE-GIVER and being "Baptized by one Spirit into one body;" all such "are the body of Christ, and members in particular." Thank God that we see the body of Christ cannot be divided; but is one. Hence, the LIFE-GIVER prays for all believers, no matter by what name called, "that they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me: and the glory which thou gavest me, I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one." It is no wonder that the world do not believe, because they do not see the so called churches of God "made perfect in one." No, no; but they are a perfect "legion:" for they are many. And no one, from the manner in which they bite and devour one another, would think that they are the children of a God who is Love, and that one God created them all.

And how divided are the Baptists, who make so much ado about "Immersion being the outward sign of an inward work." It looks to me more like the sign to separate from all that have not been immersed, according to their order, no matter how holy the Minister, or the Brother. I cannot see any outward sign of an inward work in going down into the water. Praise the Lord, the world can see an outward sign in all that are baptized with the Spirit and walk in the Spirit, and do not fulfil the lust of the flesh; but bear the fruit of the Spirit: the outward sign, or fruits of which are, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. And the reason is this, "that they are in Christ, and have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts." These fruits are the sign, that can be seen, and tell all men, at all times, that the Spirit is doing an inward and glorious work. Yes, praise the Lord, it is like the leaven hid in three measures of meal; it leavens the whole lump, and will give new or more excellent life from the dominion of death. I pray that the Lord will give us all understanding according to his word; and hope we all may keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; to the end he may establish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, with all his saints.

I am glad to hear from Br. R. Wendell, and to see Br. W. S. Campbell's name. I love to hear from them, and also Br. J. T. Curry. It seems strange, and out of place, not to be gleaning something from their pens. May the Lord bless them. I had a visit from our Dear Br. Fisk, of Kenosha, Wis. He was in good health, and strong in the faith of the gospel. 'Tis good to have old acquaintance drop in unexpectedly. May the Lord bless him, and may his last days be his best. He has gone to St. Louis.

I have been kept at home, because the roads were too bad for horses to travel, and are still. It has stormed all this day. I could not walk forty miles, because my boots would not keep out the water. I could not go on the cars because my purse was nearly emptied, and the wood-pile had all consumed into smoke; but, thank God, the "corn-sheller" was throwing out cobs in abundance, so that I could back all we wanted to keep us warm; and if it had not been for them, I do not know what we should have done. They could not draw wood. Thank the Lord, I have been warm, and have had enough; and I know I shall not want any good. I believe that if I am faithful to my Master, he will open the hearts of the friends to give; and I hope that my finance will improve so as to go forward to victory. Praise the Lord, the mighty God, even the Lord, has spoken, and his word will not return void, but will accomplish that for which it is sent. Yours, in hope of life eternal.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—We have sent to you and Br. Lewis, each, $6 worth of Books and Pamphlets, to be sold for your private use. Yours were mailed to Hornsby, and Lewis' to Mode. Have they been received?

From Elder J. Lewis.

MODE, Ill., Mar. 14, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—May the dear HERALD OF LIFE long live and triumph over error. May the Editor, and all the Board of Managers, together with those that write for its columns, be filled with all the fulness of God, which is love without dissimulation; love without alloy; love to God and all men. I will say, for the encouragement of my ministering brothers, that the prospects out here are brightening every day. Glory to God: praise his holy name for giving us the victory over error. We replied, by way of a review, to the christian minister that Br. Walter spoke of in the HERALD of Feb. 27. Well, we will just say, that he failed entirely to prove either point, his own members being judges. Well, the truth is, they have come to the conclusion that it is best to let the "old soul-sleeper" alone, with this exception, they will cry "mad dog," &c. But it recoils on themselves; and sometimes their heads get affected, and they threaten to "egg" us. But, unmoved, we press onward, and gain friends whilst they lose; and you may be sure they "howl," for their pasture (salary) is in danger of being "dried up." Keep up good courage; for the hardest of the battle is over. The field is ours.

From James H. Jacobs.

FREETOWN, N. Y., March 8, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—While thinking of you, the HERALD, and the goodness of God to men, and to myself and my family, I am led to say, O that men would praise the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever. We have been sick, but are better now; for which I thank God. Jesus said, "As the Father hath life in himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in himself; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish." Though he may sicken and die, he cannot perish; that is, he will not become extinct; for his life is hid with Christ in God; two undying sources. Therefore, he cannot perish, if he is connected with the LIFE-GIVER. The only danger is in not having a union with him who has life in himself; for he says, he that believeth in me should not perish, but have everlasting life. Thank God. While reading of the death of your son, I thought he could not perish, but will have everlasting life. Thank God for the thought. May you and I, and all, with him, have the Spirit in us which raised Jesus from the dead. Then we shall live again, if overtaken with death; and if alive, it will change us from mortal to immortality. O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness to the children of men.

From Emeline T. Hobbs.

CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS., March, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I have been intending to write you for a long time; and this afternoon being rather more at leisure than I care to be, having literally "nothing to do," I have concluded to write. I was in Bergen, N. J., this winter, and called at your office, but you had gone home. I had no opportunity to call afterwards.

I would have been very glad to have seen you. I often think how largely, under God, I and scores of others are indebted to you for the light we have on the scriptures concerning the "state of the dead," and "non-immortality of the soul."

I often think what courage was needed, and what a reliance you must have felt on Him who is the source of truth. A great number have been benefited who do not know where the agitation arose, and therefore know not who first stepped in after the waters were troubled.

Last Sabbath I heard a noted divine of Boston assert the immortality of the soul and did not back it up, as he did most of the rest of his sermon, with scripture proof. Why? We know he could not. The Hymn-book would have been a help, but the Bible never.

I sympathize with you and your family in your loss; having known myself what the sorrow is which death causes. I feel like longing for the time when the LIFE-GIVER shall bring immortality and incorruptibility.

How do you think it would answer to have your Son's writings, which he prepared for the HERALD, printed in pamphlet form? If I had money I would pledge enough to make it an object to have it done.

P. S. March 19.—Last Sabbath I was at a Baptist Bible class, conducted by the pastor. The lesson was in Matthew xxvii. commencing at the 26th verse. After explaining the lesson according to his opinion, he asked us what was meant by the term "wailing and gnashing of teeth?" He said some people might say, "You believe they will really be plunged into fire and brimstone, there to weep and wail." He said, he did not think they would; but he said, their anguish would be so great, mentally, that the Saviour employed that figure to express intense suffering

Then he passed to the Saviour's coming, and he labored earnestly to show that Christ would come to this world, as described, and argued ably against the universalist's idea that he came at the destruction of Jerusalem. If I have opportunity I will try and hear him on the remainder of the chapter.

He took the ground that we have immaterial, immortal souls. Cannot you give a few words on this in the HERALD before long?

I think it was a clear case of the blind leading the blind. The hearers sat and swallowed it down without a word of comment or dissent. The immortal soul is served up quite often in the church by him, and his members.

With my best wishes for your success in your labors, I am as ever, yours.

"MRS. E. B.," in the far West writes:—The doctrine of "Life only in Christ" has appeared to me in a very clear light of late; so much so, that I could almost reduce to an algebraic formula, and make a mathematical demonstration thereof, thus:

Given: Animal life; probation; a Saviour accepted, equals immortality.

Animal life; probation; a Saviour rejected the result is death.

SAMUEL ROBB, Manchester, Iowa, writes:—I do not know how I could do without the HERALD, for it is truly a feast of fat things. For me it has given meat in due season and light to the weary traveler. I have also read your works on The Nature and Destiny of man; The Essential Baptism, and Human Depravity; which, after a careful examination, I can heartily indorse and recommend to all intelligent minds inquiring after truth. We have no preaching here, but light is on the increase. The HERALD does missionary work. Your brother in Christ.

A SISTER, in Ills., writes:—I have read your paper ever since it was published, and supported by my needle till two years past; since then I have received it gratis till January last, when it was discontinued. I am not able to work to pay for it, but I don't feel as if I could live without it. I am 73 years old, and am "knocking on the Lord," and hope I will get the paper again. Yours was the first advent paper I ever took, and you are the first one that ever gave me light on the "destruction of the wicked." Both my husband and myself are believers in the second advent. My husband is 75 years old; and we don't expect to be here much longer, for we are both very feeble. May the Lord bless you, and may you live to see Jesus come. That blessed hope supports us in our old age. I long to see our blessed Saviour.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have entered your name on our mail book again, and sent you what back numbers we could. The Lord hears your "knocking," dear aged pilgrim, and soon He will "knock" for us; and may we "be ready to open to Him immediately." Then our poverty and tribulation will be ended forever.

EDWARD KELLY, Hinesburg, Vt., writes:—I am trying to dig out and search after truth as it is in Jesus; and I thank God I find a little every day. It is worth all the world to know the truth: it is the only thing that makes us free. I am glad for humanity's sake that there is no suffering beyond death. Yes, God's love and mercy, even to sinners, is manifested in the truth that the wages of sin is death.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

Congress was prepared to adjourn till December, the Senate having passed a bill to that effect, when a reconsideration took place, at the suggestion of Gen. Grant, who intimated that he expected trouble in enforcing the new plan of reconstruction. This must mean from the President who has done his utmost to thwart Congress, vetoing every bill tending that way, passed by it. A bill has passed the House, which will be concurred in by the Senate, directing Congress to re-assemble in May, June, September, November, unless otherwise directed by joint proclamation of the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, ten days preceding either of those dates, declaring such meeting unnecessary at such time, until each is passed. The Southern papers are very generally favoring the measures of Congress, and are urging the people to comply in good faith with every condition, and point out many advantages long overlooked, in giving the colored people political rights. Large meetings have also been held in many of the cities urging acquiescence in the Congressional measures. Gen. Longstreet and even Gen. Lee, advise a modified acquiescence. He thinks the people of Virginia should make every effort to avert their ruin; that it is idle to talk of resistance or inactivity. He acknowledges that the bill is a bitter one, but says he can suffer nothing more than Appomattox. Commenting on this, a Richmond paper says:—Who will now say that Virginia will degrade and dishonor herself by acting under the Sherman law? General Lee can now be placed among the advocates of reconstruction.

On St. Patrick's day there was a terrible riot in the streets during the procession. More blood was shed in the riot than all expended in every Fenian insurrection that has yet taken place.

The arrival of the Colorado at San Francisco on the 20th of March, on her return—the first round trip ever made by a steamship—from China and Japan, and the instantaneous transmission of her news to Europe by way of San Francisco and New York, suggest a prodigious revolution in the commercial history of the world.

It is said that the late Vice-President of the late Southern Confederacy has counselled the South to do nothing, but wait. This is bad advice from Mr. Stephens.

FOREIGN.

The accession of Wurtemberg to the treaty concluded by Prussia with Bavaria and Baden completes the military union between Northern and Southern Germany. No wonder that this news was received at Paris with great dissatisfaction, and was believed to have suggested the proposition from the Emperor, to the Governments of Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland, for a military alliance like the one concluded by Prussia with the minor German States, but Belgium has actually refused to accept the proposition.

M. Girardin predicted that the present Emperor would share the fate of Louis Philippe. Simultaneously, the Paris correspondents of the English papers hint mysteriously at renewed conspiracies in France, where republicanism and Orleanism are by no means quite extinct. M. Girardin is a gentleman of unquestionable talents, great wealth and high social position; he has been for many years prominent in French politics; he has been very intimate with Louis Napoleon, and the Prince Jerome. When a person of such standing deliberately recalls his adhesion to the empire the movement is ominous. But, beside this, M. Girardin is the first journalist in France; his writings influence many thousands of people.

The debate in the Corps Legislatif on the foreign policy of the empire has ended, as every one knew it must, in the endorsement of the Emperor's policy.

News from Crete is of more than ordinary importance. According to the most trustworthy accounts, the insurgents have been successful in two important battles, and the whole island was again in arms. The people were more determined than ever to be satisfied with nothing short of annexation to Greece. The insurrection will rage more fiercely than ever; the Government of the Sultan will be left without the sympathy of the European Powers; and it is not improbable that by this very means the solution of the Eastern question will be hastened.

A conspiracy has been discovered in Russia. The conspirators, being dissatisfied with the reforms of the present reign, are said to be aiming at the life of Alexander II.

Mr. Gladstone made a speech in which he declared against the Government plan of reform and opposed the second reading of the bill.

The British Parliament seems determined to rush the scheme for the kingdom of Canada through. Therefore, in as far as the Canadian Confederation can be affected on the other side of the ocean, we may look upon it as established. As a majority of the British American provinces have declared in favor of it, we may consider the new kingdom on our northern border as good as formally created. The sovereign, the throne and the titled nobility are, of course, to follow in due time.

So great was the personal popularity of General Garibaldi in the late Italian elections that he was returned for three different cities. This is ominous, because he has recently avowed his determination not to rest until Rome became the capital of Italy, even if it involved war with France.

Dispatches have been received from Thessaly which indicate that the insurrection against the authority of the Sublime Porte is rapidly spreading.

The war against Paraguay continues as a matter to be left to fortune or to capability of endurance. We often have reports that Paraguay is failing and must soon collapse, but later developments contradict the report. Last week the fleet ascended the river and for some hours bombarded Fort Curupaity, but there was no combined attack, and no great result.

Marshal Bazaine and the last of the French troops in Mexico left Vera Cruz for France on the 12th inst. All that remains of French intervention now is Maximilian and his few adherents. This is an ignoble termination to a grand programme. The Napoleonic ideas, which included the supremacy of the Latin race, the balance of power on this continent, the great scheme to develop the commercial and mineral resources of Mexico and establish a stable government there on the ruins of republicanism, have fizzled out with the last French soldier that embarked at Vera Cruz.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

GEO. STORRS,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

MISS WHY-WHY.

Little Kate asked a great many questions. "Why is this?" "What is that for?" "What makes it so?" were continually on her tongue's end, so that her big cousin called her Miss Why-why. Still, she was not like some children I have known, who asked such questions thoughtlessly and do not remember the reasons and explanations when they are given. I do not blame older people for being displeased with such impertinence; but when a little girl or boy asks, like Katie, because of real desire to know the truth, why then I say, answer the questions.

One day, at dinner-table, the company were talking about the diving-bell, and she eagerly inquired what kept the water from coming inside the bell. This was a very proper question, but it was a very improper time to ask it, for she ought not to suppose that the company would stop their conversation to explain this to her, and so her grown-up cousin said shortly, "O, such a little child can't understand such things. Don't ask questions."

Katie was very sensitive, and the tears came into her eyes, and she sat silent during the remainder of the meal. After dinner they all went out on the veranda, and a benevolent gentleman soon began to talk with Katie and explain to her a great deal about the diving-bell, for which she was very grateful. He then told her that it was not wrong to ask questions at the proper time, but neither little children nor big ones should interrupt conversation for this purpose. They should learn all they can by listening, and then afterward they will be likely to find some one who will explain what they do not understand.

Kate pursued this plan after that, and was delighted to find that it worked like a charm. She lost the name of Miss Why-why, and grew up to be a very intelligent and agreeable woman.

But, my little one, you should be careful how you ask questions. If you hear others talking about what you do not understand, don't break in with your questions as little Kate was in the habit of doing.

SOWING LITTLE SEEDS.

Little Bessie had got a present of a new book, and she eagerly opened it to look at the first picture. It was the picture of a boy sitting by the side of a stream, and throwing seeds into the water.

"I wonder what this picture is about," said she; "why does the boy throw seeds into the water?"

"O! I know," said her brother Edward, who had been looking at the book; "he is sowing the seeds of water-lilies."

"But how small the seeds look!" said Bessie. "It seems strange that such large plants should grow from such little things."

"You are just sowing such tiny seeds every day, Bessie, and they will come up large, strong plants after a while," said her father.

"O, no, father; I have not planted any seeds for a long while."

"I have seen my daughter sow a number of seeds to-day."

Bessie look puzzled, and her father smiled and said, "Yes, I have watched you planting flowers, and seeds, and weeds to-day."

"Now I know that you are joking, for I would not plant ugly weeds."

"I will tell you what I mean. When you laid aside that interesting book, and attended to what your mother wished done, you were sowing seeds of kindness and love. When you broke the dish that you knew your mother valued, and came instantly and told her, you were sowing seeds of truth. When you took the cup of cold water to the poor woman at the gate, you were sowing the seeds of mercy. These are all beautiful flowers, Bessie. But I hope my little girl has been planting the great tree of 'love to God,' and that she will tend and watch it, until its branches reach the skies and meet before his throne."

"And the weeds, father?"

"When you were impatient with baby, you sowed the seeds of ill temper. When you waited some time after your mother called you, you sowed disobedience and selfishness. These are all noxious weeds. Pull them up. Do not let them grow in your garden."

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

If none, as the apostle Paul plainly intimates, can lay anything to the charge of God's elect, since it is God that justifieth, and that justification is now being effected, as we believe, why is the judgment of men—their trial—deferred till a future great assize? The trial is now going on. What will be found for adjudication in that great day? I want only the common sense view of the matter; it is not what we may have believed; not what popular theology may assert. Not at all! Much less what the avowed enemies of the doctrine of life in Christ only, may declare; who will assert that the judgment-day is made nothing more than the destruction of wicked men and innocent children. It is what do the scriptures assert, in a plain and common sense view of the subject? That is the question. In some sense, and of some men, the judgment is certainly now. I shall abide by this decision, whatever may be said of the future general judgment, upon the actions of all men, viz., a trial after they all shall have lived, the force of which I never could perceive even in the strongest argument that could be found on this ground, upon Universalism which I, also, with others was able to bring against that doctrine; but I never could see the full force of it! The reason especially why I shall abide by this decision is that I shall believe the language of the Son of God, who, also, declares, that "all judgment is committed to him because he is the Son of man," who said, on this point, that one of the offices of the Holy Spirit, in the world, should be to convince the world "of judgment." "Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged."

Here we have one of the distinct and distinguishing features of the divine plan made known to us. A state of things in the world, mark, in the absence of Christ. This present evil world, the prince of this world, of course we must understand as a figure representing the condition of the world, more or less fully as to its political relations, and consequently, the state of the world is brought to view. This brings into view the actions of men. Some people talk of the actions of men as if the action of nations should be entirely distinct. But the action of men constitutes the action of the governments of men; so that men are punished as men; but in a collective capacity, when the nations receive judgment: this has always been true. It is not any more true in fact under the gospel than it was before; but more strikingly manifest. His judgments are made manifest by the light of gospel. They are more fully made plain by the coming of Chirst and the establishment of the glorious kingdom of our God at the end of the dispensation.

Whatever the prince of this world may signify, particularly, it must be, in general, an opposition to Christ and his kingdom, for Christ says that "the prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me." Therefore, being judged, it is found wanting. It may suggest, too, that all that is not in him is of the prince of this world; for he says, "My kingdom is not of this world," and ye (the elect), are not of the world. Of this class, he says, they are in him. So saith the apostle, in the following style: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Also, "Of him are ye in Christ Jesus."

We say, therefore, that the language of Christ cannot be referred to nations as distinct from the individuals who compose the population of the kingdoms. It is a figure, and we believe we have explained it. It presents the present evil world in its condition of opposition to the plan and work of God—the kingdom of our Lord Jesus.

This judgment is going on, and will be especially exhibited in the execution at the end, when the angry nations shall be removed because they are not in him or with him; and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord. We may illustrate this subject by the position of Paul, who was sent out by the same spirit to preach. Acts xxiii. 25. Paul reasoned before the governor, of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come. There is no intimation that the judgment to come, even taking the common version for authority, was preached as in the world to come, or in the end of this present world. Judgment to come, which here, we will grant, signifies punishment for sin, for it is very natural that Paul should have taken the occasion to present to Felix the consequences of a sinful life, but particularly, the result of failing to administer the government faithfully must be a judgment simply future. He speaks of justice to a ruler, remember; and hence we say he talked of a just administration. Felix's life and example are also brought up, in Paul's reasoning of righteousness. Now this all must have been from law or laws which had an admitted force with the distinguished personage whom he addressed, who had the keeping and administration of the law of the province. The penalty, therefore, of the law was brought before him in the administration of the truth by the great apostle.

If it were not that the doctrine of a future general judgment of the actions of men was held through a previous prejudice, no person would ever gather it from this text. Judgment to come may be an infliction upon the offenders at any time future to the declaration of guilt; and the more palpable and definite, the more should the exposed culprit tremble, if the judgment be terrible. An instance may be noted here. Herod, the wicked and abominable murderer, made an oration in which he arrogated to himself powers that should not be counted within the human sphere. The people cried, "It is a God." He was at once smitten with a disease in which living worms bred in the death-struck system, while the rotten carcass was eaten up alive. That was a judgment. There was a time, when it was to come. It came.

There are many instances in which the judgment "to come" upon individuals—that is; the punishment for their sins—is presented in this same light, only the judgments are seen or are specially specified, and not liable to be mistaken for something else by the style of rendering which is made to subserve a theory of truth. It is manifest that this passage is so rendered, in our version, as to serve the doctrine of a general future judgment, so far as it could possibly be made to. The emphatic Diaglot, which, by the way, we must remark, would not intentionally favor the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," renders this, "He reasoned of justice, self-government and judgment, about to come." It could not have been, therefore, the future general judgment, and the end of the dispensation. For it was something about to come. We need not remain in doubt as to what it was, if we consider the wars that were sown to devastate that region of the world, or the manifest punishment that would come upon the personal offenders, especially a prince.

GOD'S PURPOSES OF REDEMPTION.

BY ELD. A. F. PAWLEY.

There can be no subject of more importance to the christian than that of redemption. Sin and its consequences are seen and felt everywhere; but what God has done and will do to counteract the evil is but indifferently understood; and truth as she knocks at the door of ignorance is to its inmates as a vagrant in rags, and little regarded.

It would seem evident that deductions made from a wrong premise are the fruitful source of error; and that wrong deductions from a true premise are not so liable to occur; and if they do, are the more readily corrected. Hence the importance of correctly understanding the scripture premiss of God's purposes in redemption.

The plain truth of God has ever suffered and been sacrificed at the altar of human inventions, when men ignorant or regardless of the divine government and promise, have made their suppositions the premise of theory. It is nevertheless true that much has been done since Martin Luther by his publications exposed to public contempt the exotic plants of that hot-bed of error, the Vatican of Rome. It would seem that God was pleading his right of election among the sons of earth by raising up men to advocate his purpose and promise prior to a great dispensational era, soon to be ushered in, under which "all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest." This work is, however, much hindred by the existence of patented errors; and more still perhaps by those who, embracing a part of the truth take it for the whole, which may prove a bed too short, and a cover too narrow. Many believe the Lord will come and reign on the throne of Isreal's King; but strange to say, give him nothing but immortal saints to rule over and give laws to; who, they concede, have passed into a state of perfection in which it is impossible to sin. Why then be subjects of a law they cannot transgress? Many believe the saints shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever and ever; and yet nearly all the promises of the glory of the inheritance of the saints in light are rejected, because the Jews rejected Christ! It is urged, there would have been, if the jews had accepted him at his first advent. We ask, if such had been the case, how would his death and resurrection, according to the scriptures, have been accomplished! Oh, say they, the Gentiles would have put him to death! Of course, the burden of proof belongs on the side of the assertion. I would, in all charity say, it needs proof. Alas! if man has destroyed the purposes of God, woe unto us; we Gentiles have done no better than they; and if the gospel dispensation closes for ever God's conditions of salvation, the kingdom may be great, but the subjects few indeed. But here the failure would almost eclipse the success; and God in all his greatness, power, might, and love, would only just check-mate the devil, while he carries his millions down to the vale of eternal night. But can the tithe gathered from the past and present dispensations be the only party who are in any way benefited by the reign of Christ on Mount Zion? Can this be the climax of God's benevolence and love? The Bible says, No. "His mercy endureth for ever." This "for ever" surely, must take us further than the calling of the Gentiles. Reason says, No. Death has no right to the majority, if the great God has risen to the rescue.

It must be admitted, however, that the views held by many, who end God's purposes in redemption by Christ leaving his Father's throne prior to the second advent, are an improvement on the horrid dogma of immortality in sin and suffering; but, like all errors, does injustice to the judgment of God, and draws a veil over his honor, benevolence, and power. Every age has had its laws, and obedience thereto, were God's only conditions of justification. These laws always embraced the idea that God would make his promises good; and hence the righteousness of Abraham, who "believed in God." Each succeeding age has presented a widening, or development of his purposes, and enjoined the pledges of the past with the developments of the present as the safe guarantees of the future. It is true that voluntary transgressions against those laws have marked man on the page of history as ungrateful to God who has "waited to be gracious;" but this has not overthrown his purpose in redemption; the second psalm being a witness to the statement. Each age has recorded the fact that some believed in God and have ministered accordingly "of the grace that should follow." Whilst others thought that God had reached the climax of his benevolence, and could bless no others than themselves. The gospel, under which joyful sound we live, has its laws and conditions of salvation, and will bring those who comply to immortal life and glory. It is the greatest development yet made. It presents, as an object of faith, the first fruits of them who sleep. It has developed the heir to the throne of the kingdom of God, future. It will develop a peculiar people, zealous of good works; denominated, saints; who are accounted to the Lord for a generation; who shall ascend the holy hill, when the everlasting doors are lifted up and the king of glory shall come in. This generation shall, according to the 22nd Psa. "declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born." But the text is not written that says, The gospel ends God's purposes in redemption. No pen has scribed the page of inspiration with the fact that mortality ceases on earth when Immortality takes the reins of state to legislate for the world. Judged by the gosgel we shall be; and if worthy, be rewarded according to promise. If unworthy, we have lost a saint's reward. Sad folly, when it was within our reach! If we are enemies, we shall perish. But who are enemies? is a question. Some may say, "all who have not complied." This might be true, had all, alike, equal opportunities. Let not clay cry out against the potter. A promise stands on the sacred page—it is a jewel of the first water from the river of life—O, wrest it not from its resting place in the purposes of the Almighty, by the puny arm of man's compliance to a condition. It is this: "Blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.... As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes; but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes; for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance."

"BE GOOD."

BY CHARLES A. HASTINGS.

"Be good, be good; it matters not what we believe, only be good." This saying (or something like it), we very often hear when we attempt to present the word of the Lord to a certain class of minds. It is made a sort of scape-goat to excuse themselves from feeling a responsibility to thoroughly search the word, to know what the Lord's will is concerning us; or what he intends to teach his people; or for fear there will arise some discussion, a little controversy, and some one's feelings may be hurt by having their darling theories assailed. Now I do not wish to be understood that I do not believe in people being just as good as they can; I do; for it frequently presents what spirit they are of; for the fruits of the Spirit present to us very many beautiful branches, under which it is a pleasure to recline. But I do object to people's placing their goodness in the scales, thinking that it weighs or merits anything. It may bring to some in this life, the applause of men. Then verily they have their reward. The prophet says, "All our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." Not worth much then.

One came to our Lord and said, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I might inherit eternal life?" Jesus said unto him, "Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God." He relied not on his goodness; the people were not astonished at his goodness; "they were astonished at his doctrine." He was as a root out of dry ground; they considered him a violator of the law; a Sabbath-breaker; they called him Beelzebub. He came not to receive the applause of men; he came to do the will of his Father which sent him. Shall a servant be greater than his Lord? And what is the will of the Father to us? It lies in his word before us; the command is, "search." "By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight."

Good works, then, without faith are of no avail; "for if there had been a law given which could have given life," (or a law by which some of our good works could have atoned,) verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe."

The question was once asked Jesus, "What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" He answered, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent."

Are we living in an age of the world that is better than it was in the days of Christ and the apostles? Do we not proclaim that the world is growing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived? Were there not many then, in their days, who loved to pray in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets and for a pretence make long prayers? And will it be any better just prior to his second coming? The apostle saith of Israel (and it might be with propriety said to-day of multitudes of church-going people), "I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge; for they being ignorant of God's righteousness and going about to establish their own righteousness" (that is relying on their own goodness) "have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness." Even so it may be with us. But will they not be saved? Possibly. They have a zeal of God. I am thankful the plan of salvation is so plain, "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shall be saved." Very plain, simple, easy to be understood; no hardness. God loves his people; he desires none should perish. He hath no pleasure in the death of the wicked. Whosoever will let him come. This is the foundation. "But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereon." "Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest . . . the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. . . . If any man's work shall be burned be shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire. If any man's work abide, he shall receive a reward."

The responsibility, then, rests on all who have the ability, and the means; and that is in our hand to-day, if we will. Then let us build with gold, silver, precious stones, so that we may have an adundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Suppose we believe not on Christ? Suppose we set at naught his counsel and heed not his command to search the scriptures, and to know what his will is? What then? "He that receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."

What more? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," (have life. Syriac,) "but he that believeth not shall be damned," (condemned not to see life. See John iii. 36.) Here is where we are all coming to; every soul of us, whether we believe yea or nay. Either "Modern Spiritualism," so called, is true, or our faith is true; and every thinking mind will ere long confess it; for there is no stopping place short of it.

THE DEVIL.

Is the devil a personal being? If he is, where did be come from? Som e say, he is a fallen angel. Others say, all the devil there is, is in man. Christ says, the devil is the prince of this world. What is a prince? A prince is a son. And if a son, he must have a father? Now, whose son is the devil, and who is his father? Some say, the devil has cloven feet, and horns in his head, and a spear-pronged tail. But if the devil is such a person, how strange it is that no one has seen the monster. I read that Christ cast seven devils out of Mary Magdalene. Were they horned and spear-tailed monsters? I would like to read the strongest evidence that can be produced, that there is a personal devil, separate from man. In the past, I have laid all my sins to the devil as a personal being. But of late I have been convinced by the spirit and word of God (which never separate) that sin came through the conception of the lust of the flesh. And since I have come to that conclusion, I have been enabled by the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead to overcome the flesh and the devil.

I have learned this about the devil, and everything else that I may write henceforth, since I began to read your works on the destiny of man and the atonement, &c. The greatest light that ever shone on the mind of man has shone on my mind of late. I shall endeavor to let my light shine through the HERALD; and hope soon to send you one dollar a month by the help of God. Shall try to commence on the 18th of March, 1867. So help me Lord Jesus.

VARIETIES.

At the general election recently held in Italy, Gen. Garibaldi was returned at three different places. The manifesto issued by him shortly before the election leaves no doubt that he will be an uncompromising opponent of the policy which the Government intends to pursue with regard to Rome and the clergy. That he will also be a formidable opponent is amply proved by the unbounded enthusiasm with which he was recently received by the people of Venetia. Garibaldi insists on the union of Rome with Italy, even if it should involve a war with France, and he strongly objects to presenting the clergy with an enormous property which he thinks can be more profitably employed for meeting the wants of the people.

It appears that Egypt is about to secure her independence. Whether Ismail Pacha will assume the title of Caliph or Sultan is immaterial, in view of the fact that, freed from the control of the imperial government at Constantinople, he will be at liberty to yield to the influence of European thought which is destined at no distant day to revolutionize the entire country over which he rules. Egypt is already in possession of several lines of railway, telegraphic lines connect the principal centres of population, and the Suez canal promises to be a success. Under a wise government the wealth of the country will be more fully developed, and Egypt may yet surpass the splendor to which she attained under the wisest of the Ptolemies.

It was stated officially in the French Legislature that the French Emperor is in favor of the partition of the Papal debt among the Catholic Powers. This is an indirect way of pledging a number of the Continental governments to the maintenance of the present state of things in Rome. Napoleon seems to be passing from one political blunder to another. His desire to retain a power of intervention in the affairs of the Pope blinds him to the consequences of this eternal policy of intermeddling. The checks which he has received in Italy, Germany and Mexico seem to have produced but little effect upon him.

The time for the Jews to accept Christ as the promised Messiah does not seem to have come, especially if the following from the Israelite, the organ of the Hebrews, published in Cincinnati, expresses the belief of all. After "disavowing its belief in a coming Messiah," it discourses thus: "Israel is the Messiah to the nations, it is 'the covenant people, the light of nations.' We need no personal Messiah. The prophet predicted glory to the house of David, and it was fulfilled in Hezekiah, Joshiahu, Zerubbabel and his children. We know nothing of the pagan man-worship; we put our trust neither in this nor that man—God is our banner. 'Our Redeemer, the Lord of Hosts is his name, is the holy one of Israel.' We know that our Redeemer lives; he was, he is, and he will for-ever be, the One and Eternal God. 'Israel is saved in the Lord an everlasting salvation.' What benefit could we expect of any Messiah? We do not wish to go back to Palestine or submit to any king: what good can we expect of a son of David? We are children of the house; we go to no steward, need no guardian, require no mediator, and need none to plead our cause with our Heavenly Father. We are of Israel."

BACKBITING.—Some one has written: "The longer I live, the more I feel the importance of adhering to the following rules, which I have laid down for myself in relation to such matters; 1. To hear as little as possible what is to the prejudice of others. 2. To believe nothing of the kind until I am absolutely forced to. 3. Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an ill report. 4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed toward others. 5. Always to believe that, if the other side were heard, very different accounts would be given of the matter."

FRENCH INFIDELITY.—Irreligion is making considerable progress in France. A society has been established called "Solidaires," the members of which take a pledge to be buried without the prayers of the Church, and it has been "working" some time, to the great annoyance of the clergy, and of religious people generally. A further step has now been taken, and the Radical papers quote with great glee one instance of a young gentleman who had dispensed with the religious celebration of his marriage.

THE AMENDED REVENUE LAWS.—The following has just been issued from the office of Internal Revenue: "The act approved March 2, 1867, amending existing laws relating to Internal Revenue, requires the assessment of annual taxes heretofore made in the month of May to be made on the corresponding days in the month of March. The principal changes in the law respecting the income tax are those increasing the exemption from $600 to $1,000 and the repeal of the tax of ten per cent, on sums above $5,000, so that the law now imposes a uniform tax of five per cent, on incomes in excess of $1,000. Profits on sales of real estate purchased since December 31, 1863, are made taxable as income.

A large number of the citizens of Middletown, Conn., believe that the end of the world will take place on the 16th of June next, and are setting their houses in order for that event. So says the Boston Universalist.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy or their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"GEO. STORRS,
BOX 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

MISS WHY-WHY.

Little Kate asked a great many questions. "Why is this?" "What is that for?" "What makes it so?" were continually on her tongue's end, so that her big cousin called her Miss Why-why. Still, she was not like some children I have known, who asked such questions thoughtlessly and do not remember the reasons and explanations when they are given. I do not blame older people for being displeased with such impertinence; but when a little girl or boy asks, like Katie, because of real desire to know the truth, why then I say, answer the questions.

One day, at dinner-table, the company were talking about the diving-bell, and she eagerly inquired what kept the water from coming inside the bell. This was a very proper question, but it was a very improper time to ask it, for she ought not to suppose that the company would stop their conversation to explain this to her, and so her grown-up cousin said shortly, "O, such a little child can't understand such things. Don't ask questions."

Katie was very sensitive, and the tears came into her eyes, and she sat, silent during the remainder of the meal. After dinner they all went out on the veranda, and a benevolent gentleman soon began to talk with Katie and explain to her a great deal about the diving-bell, for which she was very grateful. He then told her that it was not wrong to ask questions at the proper time, but neither little children nor big ones should interrupt conversation for this purpose. They should learn all they can by listening, and then afterward they will be likely to find some one who will explain what they do not understand.

Kate pursued this plan after that, and was delighted to find that it worked like a charm. She lost the name of Miss Why-why, and grew up to be a very intelligent and agreeable woman.

But, my little one, you should be careful how you ask questions. If you hear others talking about what you do not understand, don't break in with your questions as little Kate was in the habit of doing.

SOWING LITTLE SEEDS.

Little Bessie had got a present of a new book, and she eagerly opened it to look at the first picture. It was the picture of a boy sitting by the side of a stream, and throwing seeds into the water.

"I wonder what this picture is about," said she; "why does the boy throw seeds into the water?"

"O! I know," said her brother Edward, who had been looking at the book; "he is sowing the seeds of water-lilies."

"But how small the seeds look!" said Bessie. "It seems strange that such large plants should grow from such little things."

"You are just sowing such tiny seeds every day, Bessie, and they will come up large, strong plants after a while," said her father.

"O, no, father; I have not planted any seeds for a long while."

"I have seen my daughter sow a number of seeds to-day."

Bessie look puzzled, and her father smiled and said, "Yes, I have watched you planting flowers, and seeds, and weeds to-day."

"Now I know that you are joking, for I would not plant ugly weeds."

"I will tell you what I mean. When you laid aside that interesting book, and attended to what your mother wished done, you were sowing seeds of kindness and love. When you broke the dish that you knew your mother valued, and came instantly and told her, you were sowing seeds of truth. When you took the cup of cold water to the poor woman at the gate, you were sowing the seeds of mercy These are all beautiful flowers, Bessie. But I hope my little girl has been planting the great tree of 'love to God,' and that she will tend and watch it, until its branches reach the skies and meet before his throne."

"And the weeds, father?"

"When you were impatient with baby, you sowed the seeds of ill temper. When you waited some time after your mother called you, you sowed disobedience and selfishness. These are all noxious weeds. Pull them up. Do not let them grow in your garden."

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

If none, as the apostle Paul plainly intimates, can lay anything to the charge of God's elect, since it is God that justifieth, and that justification is now being effected, as we believe, why is the judgment of men—their trial—deferred till a future great assize? The trial is now going on. What will be found for adjudication in that great day? I want only the common sense view of the matter; it is not what we may have believed; not what popular theology may assert. Not at all! Much less what the avowed enemies of the doctrine of life in Christ only, may declare; who will assert that the judgment-day is made nothing more than the destruction of wicked men and innocent children. It is what do the scriptures assert, in a plain and common sense view of the subject? That is the question. In some sense, and of some men, the judgment is certainly now. I shall abide by this decision, whatever may be said of the future general judgment, upon the actions of all men, viz., a trial after they all shall have lived, the force of which I never could perceive even in the strongest argument that could be found on this ground, upon Universalism which I, also, with others was able to bring against that doctrine; but I never could see the full force of it! The reason especially why I shall abide by this decision is that I shall believe the language of the Son of God, who, also, declares, that "all judgment is committed to him because he is the Son of man," who said, on this point, that one of the offices of the Holy Spirit, in the world, should be to convince the world "of judgment." "Of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged."

Here we have one of the distinct and distinguishing features of the divine plan made known to us. A state of things in the world, mark, in the absence of Christ. This present evil world, the prince of this world, of course we must understand as a figure representing the condition of the world, more or less fully as to its political relations, and consequently, the state of the world is brought to view. This brings into view the actions of men. Some people talk of the actions of men as if the action of nations should be entirely distinct. But the action of men constitutes the action of the governments of men; so that men are punished as men; but in a collective capacity, when the nations receive judgment: this has always been true. It is not any more true in fact under the gospel than it was before; but more strikingly manifest. His judgments are made manifest by the light of gospel. They are more fully made plain by the coming of Christ and the establishment of the glorious kingdom of our God at the end of the dispensation.

Whatever the prince of this world may signify, particularly, it must be, in general, an opposition to Christ and his kingdom, for Christ says that "the prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me." Therefore, being judged, it is found wanting. It may suggest, too, that all that is not in him is of the prince of this world; for he says, "My kingdom is not of this world," and ye (the elect), are not of the world. Of this class, he says, they are in him. So saith the apostle, in the following style: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Also, "Of him are ye in Christ Jesus."

We say, therefore, that the language of Christ cannot be referred to nations as distinct from the individuals who compose the population of the kingdoms. It is a figure, and we believe we have explained it. It presents the present evil world in its condition of opposition to the plan and work of God—the kingdom of our Lord Jesus.

This judgment is going on, and will be especially exhibited in the execution at the end, when the angry nations shall be removed because they are not in him or with him; and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord. We may illustrate this subject by the position of Paul, who was sent out by the same spirit to preach. Acts xxiii. 25. Paul reasoned before the governor, of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come. There is no intimation that the judgment to come, even taking the common version for authority, was preached as in the world to come, or in the end of this present world. Judgment to come, which here, we will grant, signifies punishment for sin, for it is very natural that Paul should have taken the occasion to present to Felix the consequences of a sinful life, but particularly, the result of failing to administer the government faithfully must be a judgment simply future. He speaks of justice to a ruler, remember; and hence we say he talked of a just administration. Felix's life and example are also brought up, in Paul's reasoning of righteousness. Now this all must have been from law or laws which had an admitted force with the distinguished personage whom he addressed, who had the keeping and administration of the law of the province. The penalty, therefore, of the law was brought before him in the administration of the truth by the great apostle.

If it were not that the doctrine of a future general judgment of the actions of men was held through a previous prejudice, no person would ever gather it from this text. Judgment to come may be an infliction upon the offenders at any time future to the declaration of guilt; and the more palpable and definite, the more should the exposed culprit tremble, if the judgment be terrible. An instance may be noted here. Herod, the wicked and abominable murderer, made an oration in which he arrogated to himself powers that should not be counted within the human sphere. The people cried, "It is a God." He was at once smitten with a disease in which living worms bred in the death-struck system, while the rotten carcass was eaten up alive. That was a judgment. There was a time, when it was to come. It came.

There are many instances in which the judgment "to come" upon individuals—that is; the punishment for their sins—is presented in this same light, only the judgments are seen or are specially specified, and not liable to be mistaken for something else by the style of rendering which is made to subserve a theory of truth. It is manifest that this passage is so rendered, in our version, as to serve the doctrine of a general future judgment, so far as it could possibly be made to. The emphatic Diaglot, which, by the way, we must remark, would not intentionally favor the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," renders this, "He reasoned of justice, self-government and judgment, about to come." It could not have been, therefore, the future general judgment, and the end of the dispensation. For it was something about to come. We need not remain in doubt as to what it was, if we consider the wars that were sown to devastate that region of the world, or the manifest punishment that would come upon the personal offenders, especially a prince.

GOD'S PURPOSES OF REDEMPTION.

BY ELD. A. F. PAWLEY.

There can be no subject of more importance to the christian than that of redemption. Sin and its consequences are seen and felt everywhere; but what God has done and will do to counteract the evil is but indifferently understood; and truth as she knocks at the door of ignorance is to its inmates as a vagrant in rags, and little regarded.

It would seem evident that deductions made from a wrong premise are the fruitful source of error; and that wrong deductions from a true premise are not so liable to occur; and if they do, are the more readily corrected. Hence the importance of correctly understanding the scripture premiss of God's purposes in redemption.

The plain truth of God has ever suffered and been sacrificed at the altar of human inventions, when men ignorant or regardless of the divine government and promise, have made their suppositions the premise of theory. It is nevertheless true that much has been done since Martin Luther by his publications exposed to public contempt the exotic plants of that hot-bed of error, the Vatican of Rome. It would seem that God was pleading his right of election among the sons of earth by raising up men to advocate his purpose and promise prior to a great dispensational era, soon to be ushered in, under which "all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest." This work is, however, much hindred by the existence of patented errors; and more still perhaps by those who, embracing a part of the truth take it for the whole, which may prove a bed too short, and a cover too narrow. Many believe the Lord will come and reign on the throne of Isreal's King; but strange to say, give him nothing but immortal saints to rule over and give laws to; who, they concede, have passed into a state of perfection in which it is impossible to sin. Why then be subjects of a law they cannot transgress? Many believe the saints shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever and ever; and yet nearly all the promises of the glory of the inheritance of the saints in light are rejected, because the Jews rejected Christ! It is urged, there would have been, if the jews had accepted him at his first advent. We ask, if such had been the case, how would his death and resurrection, according to the scriptures, have been accomplished! Oh, say they, the Gentiles would have put him to death! Of course, the burden of proof belongs on the side of the assertion. I would, in all charity say, it needs proof. Alas! if man has destroyed the purposes of God, woe unto us; we Gentiles have done no better than they; and if the gospel dispensation closes for ever, God's conditions of salvation, the kingdom may be great, but the subjects few indeed. But here the failure would almost eclipse the success; and God in all his greatness, power, might, and love, would only just check-mate the devil, while he carries his millions down to the vale of eternal night. But can the tithe gathered from the past and present dispensations be the only party who are in any way benefited by the reign of Christ on Mount Zion? Can this be the climax of God's benevolence and love? The Bible says, No. "His mercy endureth for ever." This "for ever" surely, must take us further than the calling of the Gentiles. Reason says, No. Death has no right to the majority, if the great God has risen to the rescue.

It must be admitted, however, that the views held by many, who end God's purposes in redemption by Christ leaving his Father's throne prior to the second advent, are an improvement on the horrid dogma of immortality in sin and suffering; but, like all errors, does injustice to the judgment of God, and draws a veil over his honor, benevolence, and power. Every age has had its laws, and obedience thereto, were God's only conditions of justification. These laws always embraced the idea that God would make his promises good; and hence the righteousness of Abraham, who "believed in God." Each succeeding age has presented a widening, or development of his purposes, and enjoined the pledges of the past with the developments of the present as the safe guarantees of the future. It is true that voluntary transgressions against those laws have marked man on the page of history as ungrateful to God who has "waited to be gracious;" but this has not overthrown his purpose in redemption; the second psalm being a witness to the statement. Each age has recorded the fact that some believed in God and have ministered accordingly "of the grace that should follow." Whilst others thought that God had reached the climax of his benevolence, and could bless no others than themselves. The gospel, under which joyful sound we live, has its laws and conditions of salvation, and will bring those who comply to immortal life and glory. It is the greatest development yet made. It presents, as an object of faith, the first fruits of them who sleep. It has developed the heir to the throne of the kingdom of God, future. It will develop a peculiar people, zealous of good works; denominated, saints; who are accounted to the Lord for a generation; who shall ascend the holy hill, when the everlasting doors are lifted up and the king of glory shall come in. This generation shall, according to the 22nd Psa. "declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born." But the text is not written that says, The gospel ends God's purposes in redemption. No pen has scribed the page of inspiration with the fact that mortality ceases on earth when Immortality takes the reins of state to legislate for the world. Judged by the gospel we shall be; and if worthy, be rewarded according to promise. If unworthy, we have lost a saint's reward. Sad folly, when it was within our reach! If we are enemies, we shall perish. But who are enemies? is a question. Some may say, "all who have not complied." This might be true, had all, alike, equal opportunities. Let not clay cry out against the potter. A promise stands on the sacred page—it is a jewel of the first water from the river of life—O, wrest it not from its resting place in the purposes of the Almighty, by the puny arm of man's compliance to a condition. It is this: "Blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in.... As concerning the gospel, they are enemies for your sakes; but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes; for the gifts and calling of God are without repentance."

"BE GOOD."

BY CHARLES A. HASTINGS.

"Be good, be good; it matters not what we believe, only be good." This saying (or something like it), we very often hear when we attempt to present the word of the Lord to a certain class of minds. It is made a sort of scape-goat to excuse themselves from feeling a responsibility to thoroughly search the word, to know what the Lord's will is concerning us; or what he intends to teach his people; or for fear there will arise some discussion, a little controversy, and some one's feelings may be hurt by having their darling theories assailed. Now I do not wish to be understood that I do not believe in people being just as good as they can; I do; for it frequently presents what spirit they are of; for the fruits of the Spirit present to us very many beautiful branches, under which it is a pleasure to recline. But I do object to people's placing their goodness in the scales, thinking that it weighs or merits anything. It may bring to some in this life, the applause of men. Then verily they have their reward. The prophet says, "All our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." Not worth much then.

One came to our Lord and said, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I might inherit eternal life?" Jesus said unto him, "Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God." He relied not on his goodness; the people were not astonished at his goodness; "they were astonished at his doctrine." He was as a root out of dry ground; they considered him a violator of the law; a Sabbath-breaker; they called him Beelzebub. He came not to receive the applause of men; he came to do the will of his Father which sent him. Shall a servant be greater than his Lord? And what is the will of the Father to us? It lies in his word before us; the command is, "search." "By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight."

Good works, then, without faith are of no avail; "for if there had been a law given which could have given life," (or a law by which some of our good works could have atoned,) verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe." The question was once asked Jesus, "What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" He answered, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent."

Are we living in an age of the world that is better than it was in the days of Christ and the apostles? Do we not proclaim that the world is growing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived? Were there not many then, in their days, who loved to pray in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets and for a pretence make long prayers? And will it be any better just prior to his second coming? The apostle saith of Israel, (and it might be with propriety said to-day of multitudes of church-going people), "I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge; for they being ignorant of God's righteousness and going about to establish their own righteousness" (that is relying on their own goodness) "have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God." "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted unto him for righteousness." Even so it may be with us. But will they not be saved? Possibly. They have a zeal of God. I am thankful the plan of salvation is so plain, "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shall be saved." Very plain, simple, easy to be understood; no hardness. God loves his people; he desires none should perish. He hath no pleasure in the death of the wicked. Whosoever will let him come. This is the foundation. "But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereon." "Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest . . . the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. . . . If any man's work shall be burned he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved, yet so as by fire. If any man's work abide, he shall receive a reward."

The responsibility, then, rests on all who have the ability, and the means; and that is in our hand to-day, if we will. Then let us build with gold, silver, precious stones, so that we may have an adundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Suppose we believe not on Christ? Suppose we set at naught his counsel and heed not his command to search the scriptures, and to know what his will is? What then? "He that receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day."

What more? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," (have life. Syriac,) "but he that believeth not shall be damned," (condemned not to see life. See John iii. 36.) Here is where we are all coming to; every soul of us, whether we believe yea or nay. Either "Modern Spiritualism," so called, is true, or our faith is true; and every thinking mind will ere long confess it; for there is no stopping place short of it.

THE DEVIL.

Is the devil a personal being? If he is, where did he come from? Som e say, he is a fallen angel. Others say, all the devil there is, is in man. Christ says, the devil is the prince of this world. What is a prince? A prince is a son. And if a son, he must have a father? Now, whose son is the devil, and who is his father? Some say, the devil has cloven feet, and horns in his head, and a spear-pronged tail. But if the devil is such a person, how strange it is that no one has seen the monster. I read that Christ cast seven devils out of Mary Magdalene. Were they horned and spear-tailed monsters? I would like to read the strongest evidence that can be produced, that there is a personal devil, separate from man. In the past, I have laid all my sins to the devil as a personal being. But of late I have been convinced by the spirit and word of God (which never separate) that sin came through the conception of the lust of the flesh. And since I have come to that conclusion, I have been enabled by the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead to overcome the flesh and the devil.

I have learned this about the devil, and everything else that I may write henceforth, since I began to read your works on the destiny of man and the atonement, &c. The greatest light that ever shone on the mind of man has shone on my mind of late. I shall endeavor to let my light shine through the HERALD; and hope soon to send you one dollar a month by the help of God. Shall try to commence on the 18th of March, 1867. So help me Lord Jesus. VARIETIES.

At the general election recently held in Italy, Gen. Garibaldi was returned at three different places. The manifesto issued by him shortly before the election leaves no doubt that he will be an uncompromising opponent of the policy which the Government intends to pursue with regard to Rome and the clergy. That he will also be a formidable opponent is amply proved by the unbounded enthusiasm with which he was recently received by the people of Venetia. Garibaldi insists on the union of Rome with Italy, even if it should involve a war with France, and he strongly objects to presenting the clergy with an enormous property which he thinks can be more profitably employed for meeting the wants of the people.

It appears that Egypt is about to secure her independence. Whether Ismail Pacha will assume the title of Caliph or Sultan is immaterial, in view of the fact that, freed from the control of the imperial government at Constantinople, he will be at liberty to yield to the influence of European thought, which is destined at no distant day to revolutionize the entire country over which he rules. Egypt is already in possession of several lines of railway, telegraphic lines connect the principal centres of population, and the Suez canal promises to be a success. Under a wise government the wealth of the country will be more fully developed, and Egypt may yet surpass the splendor to which she attained under the wisest of the Ptolemies.

It was stated officially in the French Legislature that the French Emperor is in favor of the partition of the Papal debt among the Catholic Powers. This is an indirect way of pledging a number of the Continental governments to the maintenance of the present state of things in Rome. Napoleon seems to be passing from one political blunder to another. His desire to retain a power of intervention in the affairs of the Pope blinds him to the consequences of this eternal policy of intermeddling. The checks which he has received in Italy, Germany and Mexico seem to have produced but little effect upon him.

The time for the Jews to accept Christ as the promised Messiah does not seem to have come, especially if the following from the Israelite, the organ of the Hebrews, published in Cincinnati, expresses the belief of all. After "disavowing its belief in a coming Messiah," it discourses thus: "Israel is the Messiah to the nations, it is 'the covenant people, the light of nations.' We need no personal Messiah. The prophet predicted glory to the house of David, and it was fulfilled in Hezekiah, Joshiahu, Zerubbabel and his children. We know nothing of the pagan manworship; we put our trust neither in this nor that man—God is our banner. 'Our Redeemer, the Lord of Hosts is his name, is the holy one of Israel.' We know that our Redeemer lives; he was, he is, and he will forever be, the One and Eternal God. 'Israel is saved in the Lord an everlasting salvation.' What benefit could we expect of any Messiah? We do not wish to go back to Palestine or submit to any king: what good can we expect of a son of David? We are children of the house; we go to no steward, need no guardian, require no mediator, and need none to plead our cause with our Heavenly Father. We are of Israel."

BACKBITING.—Some one has written: "The longer I live, the more I feel the importance of adhering to the following rules, which I have laid down for myself in relation to such matters; 1. To hear as little as possible what is to the prejudice of others. 2. To believe nothing of the kind until I am absolutely forced to. 3. Never to drink in the spirit of one who circulates an ill report. 4. Always to moderate, as far as I can, the unkindness which is expressed toward others. 5. Always to believe that, if the other side were heard, very different accounts would be given of the matter."

FRENCH INFIDELITY.—Irreligion is making considerable progress in France. A society has been established called "Solidaires," the members of which take a pledge to be buried without the prayers of the Church, and it has been "working" some time, to the great annoyance of the clergy, and of religious people generally. A further step has now been taken, and the Radical papers quote with great glee one instance of a young gentleman who had dispensed with the religious celebration of his marriage.

THE AMENDED REVENUE LAWS.—The following has just been issued from the office of Internal Revenue: "The act approved March 2, 1867, amending existing laws relating to Internal Revenue, requires the assessment of annual taxes heretofore made in the month of May to be made on the corresponding days in the month of March. The principal changes in the law respecting the income tax are those increasing the exemption from $600 to $1,000 and the repeal of the tax of ten per cent, on sums above $5,000, so that the law now imposes a uniform tax of five per cent, on incomes in excess of $1,000. Profits on sales of real estate purchased since December 31, 1863, are made taxable as income.

A large number of the citizens of Middletown, Conn., believe that the end of the world will take place on the 16th of June next, and are setting their houses in order for that event. So says the Boston Universalist.

THE RESURRECTION.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

TO MRS. M. M. WEAVER: Dear Sister:—When we look into the word of God and fully believe its truthful declarations, it would seem an unnecessary task to attempt to disprove the idea that the righteous dead will be raised with mortal, corruptible bodies. And indeed this idea has never, till within a very few years, been held by Adventists. There must of course be found some reason why of late this notion has been so extensively endorsed by a certain class of Adventists. Is it because the scriptures of truth teach this idea? I am sure emphatically, no. I challenge the world to cite us a single text that even looks in that direction. None of the advocates of a mortal resurrection for the righteous pretend to prove it by direct scripture testimony. The most potent reason ever assigned by the individual who originated this dogma, why it must be true, is this: "If this is not true, then we must all turn non resurrectionists." Here lies the only reason why any believe it. It is a mere shift to try and get rid of what is to them an unwholesome doctrine. Mark you well, if the great and glorious truth, "a future life to believers only," had never been given to the world, the notion of a mortal resurrection for the saints of God would never have been heard among us. This is the reason. Our brethren who believe that all men will be made alive from the dead, put every act in the judgment beyond the second advent and resurrection of the dead. The trial, decision, and execution are all by them located beyond the resurrection. And they very readily see that if the righteous are raised immortal, two acts in the judgment are in the past when their resurrection takes place. Making the saints immortal separates them eternally from the wicked dead; and surely all must concede that this final separation must follow, not precede, the final decision of the Judge of quick and dead. In judicial proceedings, all must admit, the trial precedes the decision; consequently, if the righteous are raised immortal, God must have decided their case before he raised them; and deciding their case just as certainly fixes the doom of all the wicked. To be consistent, then, every individual holding the Crisis view of the judgment should endorse Munger's notion of a mortal resurrection, not only of all the saints, but also of Christ himself. Of Christ, because the great apostle to the Gentiles positively asserts that Christ in his resurrection was the first fruits of all who shall be raised in, through, or by him. See 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23. It follows, of course, that if Christ was raised immortal, then all who are raised by him will be raised to the same condition of life as was Christ, for the harvest must be just like the first fruits. Believing as they do that all men are raised in Christ, if they admit that Christ was raised immortal, they are driven inevitably to the conclusion that immortality by a resurrection from the dead awaits the entire race of Adam. To avoid this conclusion, it is assumed that even Christ, the Son of the Highest, was raised from the dead with a corruptible body.

Before treating more directly on the main question, I shall notice some of the consequences, if this position be true. First, it positively involves the doctrine of salvation by works. We do not get immortality, by this arrangement, through Christ. The plan of God through Christ, according to this idea, exhausts itself in giving back to Adam's race the life they lost in Adam. After this life is restored to the race, as every advocate of this theory will tell you, they are "rewarded according to their works." If they have done good, their reward is immortal life; but if they have done evil, they are "punished" by being buried up in a sea of fire. This view makes good works the only condition of salvation; consequently Christ has nothing to do with our future, eternal salvation, as far as his merits, death, or resurrection are concerned, whatsoever. Salvation in eternal life is wholly the result of our good works. This is of course the opposite extreme of Antinomianism, and is equally opposed to the plainest teaching of the word of God, which positively declares that eternal life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ.

A second necessary conclusion is, that if this sentiment be well founded in truth, then all infants are irredeemably lost. For infants have never done good, and as this plan only gives immortality to those who have done good, all must see that it excludes all infants. It will amount to nothing to say that they are purchased from death by a vicarious death of Christ; for they believe that all the unholy are just as much, and just as certainly, purchased back from death, as the infant. But this does not save them. No, it does not save even the righteous. Their salvation depends wholly on another contingency. They are saved because of having previously done good works. Barely being raised from the dead, according to this theory, saves nobody. The infant, therefore, having failed to do good, or, in other words, having from incapacity failed to comply with the only condition on which immortality can be given, must perish with the sinner in the fires of the last day. This conclusion is inevitable. There has been a great deal of drawing on the sympathies of mothers, and tender-hearted men and women, by charging upon us the "horrible idea" (which, by the by, we do not hold as a people) that infants will not be raised from the dead. But which is the most merciful arrangement: to let the little dears sleep in death eternally, or to raise them to life and burn them in the lake of fire? They of course do not believe that infants will be left to burn up, but it is simply because their hearts are more soft than their heads are logical.

If they were only legitimate in their reasoning faculties they must see at once that the above conclusion is inevitably fixed on them from their own premises. Before, therefore, they undertake to fasten on us a hated conclusion, consistency would require that they purge it from their own theory.

Another, and third necessary conclusion in which this sentiment involves those who hold it, is this: that God from eternity did devise a plan that in the grand sequel will place him under the absolute necessity of working a continuous miracle, so long as these sinners live, in order that they shall be kept alive that he may torment them. This certainly looks to me like a revised, condensed, and partially modified edition of Dr. Benson's orthodox (?) hell. We must all admit that nothing short of a miracle of Almighty power could ever bring dead sinners to life from the dead. And mark, a necessary part of this theory is, that they are all, saint and sinner, coming up "just as they went down." Imagine for a moment, the entire race of Adam, in all the hideous, ghastly deformity in which they have laid themselves down in death, marshalled, millions in number, a gloomy, pale-faced, haggard, motley band, with countenances whereon is written in characters of burning darkness, an awful suspense, almost worse than hell itself; and they to stand, with the doleful death-mark branded deep on their features, before "a bar," "or seat" of "inexorable justice" (?), I do not know how long, but until every word and thought, and deed and motive is made public before an assembled universe!! And remember, that as all the vital functions were exhausted when they died, else they would not have died, therefore they could not live a moment only as God by an almighty act of power makes them live. Then read alongside of this, the declaration of the inspired John, God is love. And of Christ: God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, etc., remembering all the time that this exhibition is the immediate and unavoidable result of the gift of God's darling Son. O, what a manifestation of love! Any scene that has yet transpired since God swung this earth out in the broad expanse of heaven, no matter how horrid, if we could but turn to it in that awful hour, and in its contemplation forget for the moment our dreadful surroundings, would afford us infinite relief. And all this climax of unimagined horrors is the practical result of the devising of that plan, that by the angel of God is declared to be peace on earth, and GOOD WILL TOWARDS MEN. And mark, there can be no plea of necessity urged here. Away back in the unmeasured past God could arrange it all as his infinite love and wisdom should dictate. He could have it all his own way. If there is any necessity involved in the carrying out of the plan, God was the author of it. And he alone is responsible for it. The idea that some are virtually inculcating, that God has somehow got into a difficulty in arranging his plan that places him under the necessity of adopting some unlucky expedient to get out of it, is simply saying that he is not God.

I have already shown that the idea of a mortal resurrection for the good is the legitimate child of this popular view of the judgment. But here arises a difficulty. A majority of these men and women believe that the righteous are raised one thousand years before the wicked. If this be true, it must necessarily follow that the case of all is decided before any are raised, whether the good are raised mortal or immortal.

This idea destroys the popular notion of the judgment. The true doctrine of the judgment is this: There are three distinct acts in the judgment. 1st, The trial. 2d, The decision. 3d, The execution. On this principle God has judged all men in the past; antediluvians, Sodomites, Egyptians, Babylonians, and Jews. And on this principle he will always deal with the children of men. Man's trial commences with his probation. Our probation as a dispensational people commenced with the beginning of the gospel age. The trial lasts during this age. In the end of this age, the judge decides the case of all who have lived during this dispensation—decides who are worthy of life, and who of death. He executes this decision by giving an incorruptible life to all who have secured it by being made partakers of that spiritual life which God sent Christ into the world to impart to them that believe; and by leaving eternally in death those who have refused or neglected to lay hold on Christ.

Now a few words on the main question will be entirely sufficent. First, then, when we settle the question as to the character of Christ's resurrection, we prove beyond any successful controversy what will be the life given to all who are raised through him. In a previous article I have proved, irrefutably, I think, that Christ was raised to an immortal, incorruptible life. I need not repeat the argument. Now, Christ being the first fruits of all who are raised, and he being raised immortal, all who are raised from the dead through him must also be raised immortal. If, therefore, none are raised from the dead except through Christ, none will be raised to a mortal life. Will any be raised outside of God's plan of life through Christ? I answer, Christ declares that he is the resurrection and the life. John xi. 25. If Christ is the resurrection, none will ever get the resurrection except through him. Paul declares, 1 Cor. xv. 21, that since by man came death, by man also came the resurrection from the dead. Just so certain then as death came by the first Adam, a resurrection from the dead can only come through Christ the second Adam. Again, Rev. i. 18, Christ declares, "I have the keys of hades and death.

If, therefore, any ever come out of hades, or death, Christ must unlock the charnel house and bring to life from the dead all who ever awake. None can get life from the dead, then, except through Jesus Christ. Christ being the great pattern, sample, or first fruits of the resurrection from the dead, and all who are raised through him, like their pattern, are raised to die no more; death will have no more dominion ever them; it follows that the righteous only will be raised, for to them alone is promised an incorruptible life.

When we turn to those portions of scripture where Christ and his apostles teach directly, clearly and plainly, the resurrection from the dead, there is not a single instance where they do not declare that resurrection to be an incorruptible, deathless state. This is so evident that one brother, in replying to a private letter written to him by myself, was compelled to take the conclusion that in all those scriptures, Christ and Paul were talking of the resurrection of the righteous only. The brother was right. And if in every argument used in inspiration to prove a resurrection from the dead the wicked are left out, it will be in vain to attempt to prove their resurrection to me from inferences drawn from Christ's parables, or by quotations from the symbolic language of the Apocalypse.

I will notice but a few of those scriptures. 1 Cor. xv. 35: Here Paul asks two questions. First: How are the dead raised up? Second: With what body do they come? He answers both these questions. In the figure of the grain sown, as also in the difference in glory in different heavenly bodies, he shows conclusively that the same body that is sown in death will not come up in an unchanged condition. There will be a positive difference between the body that is laid down in death, and that one which is raised from the dead. Pursuing this subject directly, he tells us plainly in verses 43, 44, in what that difference consists. It is this: the body that dies a corruptible, weak, natural body, arises from the dead an incorruptible, powerful, spiritual body. This is so plain that it seems to me none would ever have attempted to avoid the conclusion that the dead are raised to an incorruptible, spiritual, deathless existence, only to save a darling theory. No American Adventist ever questioned this position until it became necessary so to do in order to dodge "Non-resurrection." Again, in verse 52, is a positive declaration of the inspired Paul that the dead shall be raised INCORRUPTIBLE. And this text no individual, to my knowledge, who believes in a mortal resurrection, has ever attempted to meet, or even to explain away. Now I ask, in the face of such declarations as the above, and in the acknowledged absence of all positive scripture testimony, is it safe to adopt such a horribly absurd position? Christ is in harmony with Paul, and most positively declares (see Luke xx. 35–47. Mark xii. 25, and Matt. xxii. 29), that all who are raised from the dead are possessed of that spiritual life which angels have, therefore they cannot die, and are, in consequence of sharing in the resurrection from the dead, the perfected children of God in the age or world to come. In harmony with these quotations reads all the word of God. The only resurrection plainly taught in the Bible is a conditional, incorruptible, immortal resurrection.

May the grace of God enable us to obey the conditions, that we may with all the good attain unto that future endless life promised to the good alone. Then when a little way in the future the great LIFE-GIVER shall appear in his glory, to commence his eternal reign on David's throne in a kingdom that shall never end, the glorious privilege will be granted us to reign in life through Jesus Christ. Amen.

MORTALS AND IMMORTALS TOGETHER.

BY S. E. HOFFMAN.

BR. STORRS:—While reading this morning in the Watch Tower, a thought came to my mind: "Mortals and immortals dwelling together." A number of passages of scripture rushed upon me, which I will here present; and if you will be so kind as to throw some light upon them, it will be a great satisfaction to me, and no doubt to many others of the HERALD readers. I thank God that I ever saw the HERALD, OF LIFE. It has exalted my views of God, of life eternal, and of the principles of christianity in general.

Life only in Christ, that is brought to light by the HERALD, I believe firmly to be a fulfilment of the Revelator where he says, "And another book was opened, which is the Book of Life."

The first passage I will notice with respect to mortals and immortals dwelling together is, Christ's transfiguration, Luke ix. 29–35. "And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistening."

Now mark the consequences of mortals and immortals dwelling together; and that too, for only a brief space; and at that, not a reality, but only figuratively. First consequence: "But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep." Second consequence: "Let us make three tabernacles: one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias; not knowing what he said."

Now, if an apparition, or a figure of immortality, will cause mortal beings to be heavy with sleep, and take away their senses, what will its full reality effect? But again, turn to Rev. i. 13–17. Notice the description here given of the immortal Jesus. "Clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle; and his head and hair as white as wool, and his eyes as a flame of fire, and his feet like to fine brass glowing with fire, as in a furnace, and his voice as the voice of many waters," &c.

Now mark the consequences of mortals and immortals dwelling together. v. 17. "And when I saw him I fell at his feet as dead;" and had not the miraculous power of the immortal placed "his right hand on me (John) saying, fear not," it is doubtful if John would ever have revived. If then the beloved John would be so struck down at the sight of immortality, how could the ungodly (not saying wicked) bear the sight of Jesus when revealed in his full glory? Do you reply, They will not dwell with Jesus, for he will be in the Metropolis. But they will dwell with his saints. Then what shall we do with this passage of scripture, 1 John iii. 2. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him," &c. It is useless to quote all the passages to show that the children shall be joint heirs with Christ; equal to the angels. I cannot see, then, how immortals can dwell with mortals; but I still have some more passages to solve on this subject. Take the case of Paul's mission to Damascus, Acts xxii. 6–11. "Suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me." Now, what follows? "And I fell to the ground." Notice one thing in this history; there was nothing seen but the light; but he heard a voice that told him that it was Jesus that he was persecuting. Here we have only the light that shone from immortality, and it deprived him of eye sight. Again, take the case of Daniel x. 5–10. Here we have about the same description given of this grand personage as is given in Revelation. Daniel says, "I alone saw the vision; for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a great quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves: there remained no strength in me; for my comeliness was turned in me into corruption; yet heard I the voice of his words." And what is the consequence? "Then was I in a deep sleep on my face." It seems to me, if such is the effect, that a voice of immortality should so benumb, stupefy, and, as it were, deaden a righteous man like Daniel, I cannot see how mortals and immortals could dwell together.

Once more, and then I quit. Ex. xxxiii. 18–23. "I beseech thee, show me thy glory." Answer to this request: "And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee: ....and he said, Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me and live." Moses here was permitted to see the back parts of God's immortality, but no more; and I judge that the only reason why he was not permitted to see immortality in full, was that he would have died that instant; for, "no man shall see my face and live." There is one more idea as to those angels that visited Abraham and Lot. I think it would be hard to prove that they were immortal. The washing of their feet shows that they had been travelling like men. The same thing is again performed when they come to Sodom; which shows that they had travelled from Mamre to Sodom; but had they have been immortals, commissioned or sent from God's throne, they would more likely have travelled in their own sphere, or mode of existence. The fact that they went to bed, like other men, is apparent; for, the history says, before they laid down, &c.

Middleville, Minn, Feb. 21, 1867.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR—We will notice some of our brother's objections to the idea that mortals and immortals may dwell together. If we show that they have associated together, his objections will vanish. But we will first remark on some of the texts he has urged as objections. Peter, on the mount of transfiguration, when he got "awake" wished to dwell there, and said "It is good to be here" So those "left of the nations" will find "it good to be" there, under a perfect government. The largest part of the christian world are "asleep," like Peter, to the glory of the coming dispensation; but when they get fairly "awake" to the subject, they may feel as Peter did when he opened his eyes on the glory of his Master.

The description, Rev. i., of Christ, our brother admits was "in his full glory;" and it is not necessary to suppose that the "full glory" of Christ or his immortal saints will be seen by "the left of the nations." That Christ's disciples to the number of at least "five hundred," saw him after his resurrection, and hence after He was immortal, is a clearly revealed truth; "then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." But His "full glory" was still hidden from them; yet He was none the less an "immortal," dwelling among them for "forty days;" and if so long, He could have done it forty years, for all immortality would prevent.

Paul's and Daniel's cases are the same as John's; that is, a case of the manifestation of "full glory;" and hence do not touch the question before us. This also is a sufficient reply to the case of Moses, who evidently wished to see God in "full glory," which no mortal can see.

The effort to make out that the persons who came to Abraham and Lot were not immortals, seems to us an utter failure. The supposed fact that these angels "went to bed" does not appear: the language requires no such construction, but the reverse. But how about the "Captain of the LORD's host," that appeared to Joshua, Josh. v. 13–15? and the angel that came to Manoah and his wife, and ascended up towards heaven "in the flame," Judges xiii.? And how about Gabriel who came to Daniel, more than once? Ay, and how about this same personage coming to the father of John, in the Temple? And finally how about Gabriel coming to Mary to announce the conception and birth of Jesus? These samples will serve to convince our brother, that his objections have not the weight he supposed. We therefore add no more, at present.

"FOLLOW THOU ME."

The words of Jesus are not as man's words—often devoid of interest. His words are few, emphatic, simple, truthful, and deep.

The power of truth is the more seen and felt when we view it in its simplicity, plain common sense, or matter of fact view.

To follow Jesus is, what? Evidently to pattern after him, resemble him, be like him, have a corresponding disposition, being possessed of a like prompter to action, hence acting like him; his life being the pattern or substance, ours the shadow, resembling his.

The first and all-important thing is the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. This "secret spring" must bubble up from the depths of our hearts. This also, like the watch-spring, must be the moving power to all right action. Thus prepared, "Follow me." Jesus' mission was to bless the world; so should ours be. He blessed it by hourly and daily work, doing good of every kind, and to every one, to the utmost, as opportunity presented; yea, and he was ever seeking out opportunities whereby he might bless somebody. Neither was he afraid of lacking in means, he was a dispenser of bounty: and in dispensing, God gave him to dispense.

His rule was man's rule reversed; man waits to get much before he gives little, and his toil in getting makes him hold fast to it after he has got it. But Jesus' heart was so sympathetic he only needed to see want and he went about to alleviate it with the means first at hand; his bountiful Father always supplying all lack. His faith in God was a reason of his abundant supply from God.

Let me repeat this idea. His great efficiency consisted not in his individual resources, but in his faith, or an intimate reliance on, and trust in him who possesses all power in heaven and in earth, and who doeth all his pleasure. His action was always prompt, being "sent of God;" his business was to obey orders, not to be thinking of rations, or supplies, a higher one attending to such matters, his being a holier mission.

What a life of wonders, of goodness, of blessing, was his! And why? All because his will was merged, lost in his Father's. Nothing more, nothing less. "I and my Father are one." This shone out brightly everywhere, even to suffering and death. "Follow thou me." For this purpose was the Son of God manifest (by his first advent into the world), that he might destroy the works of the devil. 1st. In his own personal example, having the Spirit without measure, by which he ruled over the animal man completely, and also gained a triumph over death and the grave. 2nd. In the promise of this Spirit after his ascension, to be with, and dwell in his followers, by which they, too, might "work the works of God" with a like glorious result.

That, then, which gave him his sufficiency, gives the church theirs. He was an humble, poor, and isolated individual; born in obscurity, and not accounted of; yet his life-work was the astonishment, admiration, and reformation of the world, so far as it told upon it.

Christian—professor of the name, deny no longer this Jesus by a want of his faith. Live no longer under the law of bondage, and dead works. Accept the Holy Spirit, which God, through Christ, will pour out upon you till all is swallowed up in a sea of glory and bliss; then will your feet run with delight in the ways of the Lord your God. Then shall you find a truthfulness in the Saviour's words, "Give and it shall be given to you again; pressed down, shaken together, and running over, shall men pour into your bosoms." Some do not give aright; keeping self and giving of our substance will do for Law-christians, but the Gospel requires "thy heart." Who, think you, would accept the fair maiden's hand in holy wedlock if her heart was known to be pledged to another? The heart first. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart;" (and, O, how worthy of all thy love is he!) then are you accepted as his bride, to bear his fame and glory all abroad. Keep the love ardent and he will add the accomplishments and all the adornments which may be fitting your station and usefulness. But, ah, this delusion of satan, which, like the frost of winter creeping through every crevice and chilling the inmates of the house, causes men in every position in the church to "think they are something when they are nothing." This fixing up the exterior, painting and varnishing (all right in their place), while the sills are rotten, the whole building filled with rubbish, and contaminated with disease and death! O my brethren, let us become divorced from the world, from self; think you Christ will accept a service of feigned love? Will he be satisfied with what we would not be from another? Who of all the host of God will take the lead in this matter? who will, David like, go forth to face the army of the Philistines? Those who have proved the sling of faith. Yes, these can go and nothing can harm them; they too shall triumph gloriously. To others we say, "go buy oil," while Jesus lingers; but be quick about it; no time to linger; haste thee, haste, for the morn breaketh; e'en now I see its glimmering light! Awake, arise, put on thy beautiful garments, O Zion.

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

Besides, as he reasoned of self-government, or personal righteousness, he should have spoken in particular of the judgment of God against those who commit such things as are forbidden by the law of God—such as are worthy of death—it is reasonable, therefore, to conclude that he referred to personal punishment. The judgment of God is death against those who live in violation of the law by which God designed that they should be governed, and it is according to truth, too.

The doctrine of the judgment at the close of the dispensation should be distinctly stated. Instead of its being a trial by a court, or assize, at the bar of God, as if the throne of judgment or seat, were literal, and evidence adduced that should convict or justify, after which a decision should be arrived at, and sentence passed; it is the judgment of execution, or punishment, which shall be inflicted when the Lord cometh to judgment, as he says.

When we say that the judgment is now, and the decision passed, we do not refer to the execution, the infliction of the penalty; for that is the state that is to continue; that is what the law demands. There is no power of recovery left; no life is promised or even threatened, to the dead sinner on which he can ever expect to come out.

We are not, then, like the Universalists, who believe that the judgment is passed as

THE RESURRECTION.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

To MRS. M. M. WEAVER: Dear Sister:—When we look into the word of God and fully believe its truthful declarations, it would seem an unnecessary task to attempt to disprove the idea that the righteous dead will be raised with mortal, corruptible bodies. And indeed this idea has never, till within a very few years, been held by Adventists. There must of course be found some reason why of late this notion has been so extensively endorsed by a certain class of Adventists. Is it because the scriptures of truth teach this idea? I am sure emphatically, no. I challenge the world to cite us a single text that even looks in that direction. None of the advocates of a mortal resurrection for the righteous pretend to prove it by direct scripture testimony. The most potent reason ever assigned by the individual who originated this dogma, why it must be true, is this: "If this is not true, then we must all turn non-resurrectionists." Here lies the only reason why any believe it. It is a mere shift to try and get rid of what is to them an unwholesome doctrine. Mark you well, if the great and glorious truth, "a future life to believers only," had never been given to the world, the notion of a mortal resurrection for the saints of God would never have been heard among us. This is the reason. Our brethren who believe that all men will be made alive from the dead, put every act in the judgment beyond the second advent and resurrection of the dead. The trial, decision, and execution are all by them located beyond the resurrection. And they very readily see that if the righteous are raised immortal, two acts in the judgment are in the past when their resurrection takes place. Making the saints immortal separates them eternally from the wicked dead; and surely all must concede that this final separation must follow, not precede, the final decision of the Judge of quick and dead. In judicial proceedings, all must admit, the trial precedes the decision; consequently, if the righteous are raised immortal, God must have decided their case before he raised them; and deciding their case just as certainly fixes the doom of all the wicked. To be consistent, then, every individual holding the Crisis view of the judgment should endorse Munger's notion of a mortal resurrection, not only of all the saints, but also of Christ himself. Of Christ, because the great apostle to the Gentiles positively asserts that Christ in his resurrection was the first fruits of all who shall be raised in, through, or by him. See 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23. It follows, of course, that if Christ was raised immortal, then all who are raised by him will be raised to the same condition of life as was Christ, for the harvest must be just like the first fruits. Believing as they do that all men are raised in Christ, if they admit that Christ was raised immortal, they are driven inevitably to the conclusion that immortality by a resurrection from the dead awaits the entire race of Adam. To avoid this conclusion, it is assumed that even Christ, the Son of the Highest, was raised from the dead with a corruptible body.

Before treating more directly on the main question, I shall notice some of the consequences, if this position be true. First, it positively involves the doctrine of salvation by works. We do not get immortality, by this arrangement, through Christ. The plan of God through Christ, according to this idea, exhausts itself in giving back to Adam's race the life they lost in Adam. After this life is restored to the race, as every advocate of this theory will tell you, they are "rewarded according to their works." If they have done good, their reward is immortal life; but if they have done evil, they are "punished" by being buried up in a sea of fire. This view makes good works the only condition of salvation; consequently Christ has nothing to do with our future, eternal salvation, as far as his merits, death, or resurrection are concerned, whatsoever. Salvation in eternal life is wholly the result of our good works. This is of course the opposite extreme of Antinomianism, and is equally opposed to the plainest teaching of the word of God, which positively declares that eternal life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ.

A second necessary conclusion is, that if this sentiment be well founded in truth, then all infants are irredeemably lost. For infants have never done good, and as this plan only gives immortality to those who have done good, all must see that it excludes all infants. It will amount to nothing to say that they are purchased from death by a vicarious death of Christ; for they believe that all the unholy are just as much, and just as certainly, purchased back from death, as the infant. But this does not save them. No, it does not save even the righteous. Their salvation depends wholly on another contingency. They are saved because of having previously done good works. Barely being raised from the dead, according to this theory, saves nobody. The infant, therefore, having failed to do good, or, in other words, having from incapacity failed to comply with the only condition on which immortality can be given, must perish with the sinner in the fires of the last day. This conclusion is inevitable. There has been a great deal of drawing on the sympathies of mothers, and tender-hearted men and women, by charging upon us the "horrible idea" (which, by the by, we do not hold as a people) that infants will not be raised from the dead. But which is the most merciful arrangement: to let the little dears sleep in death eternally, or to raise them to life and burn them in the lake of fire? They of course do not believe that infants will be left to burn up, but it is simply because their hearts are more soft than their heads are logical.

If they were only legitimate in their reasoning faculties they must see at once that the above conclusion is inevitably fixed on them from their own premises. Before, therefore, they undertake to fasten on us a hated conclusion, consistency would require that they purge it from their own theory.

Another, and third necessary conclusion in which this sentiment involves those who hold it, is this: that God from eternity did devise a plan that in the grand sequel will place him under the absolute necessity of working a continuous miracle, so long as these sinners live, in order that they shall be kept alive that he may torment them. This certainly looks to me like a revised, condensed, and partially modified edition of Dr. Benson's orthodox (?) hell. We must all admit that nothing short of a miracle of Almighty power could ever bring dead sinners to life from the dead. And mark, a necessary part of this theory is, that they are all, saint and sinner, coming up "just as they went down." Imagine for a moment, the entire race of Adam, in all the hideous, ghastly deformity in which they have laid themselves down in death, marshalled, millions in number, a gloomy, pale-faced, haggard, motley band, with countenances whereon is written in characters of burning darkness, an awful suspense, almost worse than hell itself; and they to stand, with the doleful death-mark branded deep on their features, before "a bar," "or seat" of "inexorable justice" (?), I do not know how long, but until every word and thought, and deed and motive is made public before an assembled universe!! And remember, that as all the vital functions were exhausted when they died, else they would not have died, therefore they could not live a moment only as God by an almighty act of power makes them live. Then read alongside of this, the declaration of the inspired John, God is love. And of Christ: God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, etc., remembering all the time that this exhibition is the immediate and unavoidable result of the gift of God's darling Son. O, what a manifestation of love! Any scene that has yet transpired since God swung this earth out in the broad expanse of heaven, no matter how horrid, if we could but turn to it in that awful hour, and in its contemplation forget for the moment our dreadful surroundings, would afford us infinite relief. And all this climax of unimagined horrors is the practical result of the devising of that plan, that by the angel of God is declared to be peace on earth, and GOOD WILL TOWARDS MEN. And mark, there can be no plea of necessity urged here. Away back in the unmeasured past God could arrange it all as his infinite love and wisdom should dictate. He could have it all his own way. If there is any necessity involved in the carrying out of the plan, God was the author of it. And he alone is responsible for it. The idea that some are virtually inculcating, that God has somehow got into a difficulty in arranging his plan that places him under the necessity of adopting some unlucky expedient to get out of it, is simply saying that he is not God.

I have already shown that the idea of a mortal resurrection for the good is the legitimate child of this popular view of the judgment. But here arises a difficulty. A majority of these men and women believe that the righteous are raised one thousand years before the wicked. If this be true, it must necessarily follow that the case of all is decided before any are raised, whether the good are raised mortal or immortal.

This idea destroys the popular notion of the judgment. The true doctrine of the judgment is this: There are three distinct acts in the judgment. 1st. The trial. 2d. The decision. 3d. The execution. On this principle God has judged all men in the past; antediluvians, Sodomites, Egyptians, Babylonians, and Jews. And on this principle he will always deal with the children of men. Man's trial commences with his probation. Our probation as a dispensational people commenced with the beginning of the gospel age. The trial lasts during this age. In the end of this age, the judge decides the case of all who have lived during this dispensation—decides who are worthy of life, and who of death. He executes this decision by giving an incorruptible life to all who have secured it by being made partakers of that spiritual life which God sent Christ into the world to impart to them that believe; and by leaving eternally in death those who have refused or neglected to lay hold on Christ.

Now a few words on the main question will be entirely sufficent. First, then, when we settle the question as to the character of Christ's resurrection, we prove beyond any successful controversy what will be the life given to all who are raised through him. In a previous article I have proved, irrefutably, I think, that Christ was raised to an immortal, incorruptible life. I need not repeat the argument. Now, Christ being the first fruits of all who are raised, and he being raised immortal, all who are raised from the dead through him must also be raised immortal. If, therefore, none are raised from the dead except through Christ, none will be raised to a mortal life. Will any be raised outside of God's plan of life through Christ? I answer, Christ declares that he is the resurrection and the life. John xi. 25. If Christ is the resurrection, none will ever get the resurrection except through him. Paul declares, 1 Cor. xv. 21, that since by man came death, by man also came the resurrection from the dead. Just so certain then as death came by the first Adam, a resurrection from the dead can only come through Christ the second Adam. Again, Rev. i. 18, Christ declares, "I have the keys of hades and death.

If, therefore, any ever come out of hades, or death, Christ must unlock the charnel house and bring to life from the dead all who ever awake. None can get life from the dead, then, except through Jesus Christ. Christ being the great pattern, sample, or first fruits of the resurrection from the dead, and all who are raised through him, like their pattern, are raised to die no more; death will have no more dominion ever them; it follows that the righteous only will be raised, for to them alone is promised an incorruptible life.

When we turn to those portions of scripture where Christ and his apostles teach directly, clearly and plainly, the resurrection from the dead, there is not a single instance where they do not declare that resurrection to be an incorruptible, deathless state. This is so evident that one brother, in replying to a private letter written to him by myself, was compelled to take the conclusion that in all those scriptures, Christ and Paul were talking of the resurrection of the righteous only. The brother was right. And if in every argument used in inspiration to prove a resurrection from the dead the wicked are left out, it will be in vain to attempt to prove their resurrection to me from inferences drawn from Christ's parables, or by quotations from the symbolic language of the Apocalypse.

I will notice but a few of those scriptures. 1 Cor. xv. 35: Here Paul asks two questions. First: How are the dead raised up? Second: With what body do they come? He answers both these questions. In the figure of the grain sown, as also in the difference in glory in different heavenly bodies, he shows conclusively that the same body that is sown in death will not come up in an unchanged condition. There will be a positive difference between the body that is laid down in death, and that one which is raised from the dead. Pursuing this subject directly, he tells us plainly in verses 43, 44, in what that difference consists. It is this: the body that dies a corruptible, weak, natural body, arises from the dead an incorruptible. powerful, spiritual body. This is so plain that it seems to me none would ever have attempted to avoid the conclusion that the dead are raised to an incorruptible, spiritual, deathless existence, only to save a darling theory. No American Adventist ever questioned this position until it became necessary so to do in order to dodge "Non-resurrection." Again, in verse 52, is a positive declaration of the inspired Paul that the dead shall be raised INCORRUPTIBLE. And this text no individual, to my knowledge, who believes in a mortal resurrection, has ever attempted to meet, or even to explain away. Now I ask, in the face of such declarations as the above, and in the acknowledged absence of all positive scripture testimony, is it safe to adopt such a horribly absurd position? Christ is in harmony with Paul, and most positively declares (see Luke xx. 35–47. Mark xii. 25, and Matt. xxii. 29), that all who are raised from the dead are possessed of that spiritual life which angels have, therefore they cannot die, and are, in consequence of sharing in the resurrection from the dead, the perfected children of God in the age or world to come. In harmony with these quotations reads all the word of God. The only resurrection plainly taught in the Bible is a conditional, incorruptible, immortal resurrection.

May the grace of God enable us to obey the conditions, that we may with all the good attain unto that future endless life promised to the good alone. Then when a little way in the future the great Life-giver shall appear in his glory, to commence his eternal reign on David's throne in a kingdom that shall never end, the glorious privilege will be granted us to reign in life through Jesus Christ. Amen.

MORTALS AND IMMORTALS TOGETHER.

BY S. E. HOFFMAN.

BR. STORRS:—While reading this morning in the Watch Tower, a thought came to my mind: "Mortals and immortals dwelling together." A number of passages of scripture rushed upon me, which I will here present; and if you will be so kind as to throw some light upon them, it will be a great satisfaction to me, and no doubt to many others of the HERALD readers. I thank God that I ever saw the HERALD, OF LIFE. It has exalted my views of God, of life eternal, and of the principles of christianity in general.

Life only in Christ, that is brought to light by the HERALD, I believe firmly to be a fulfilment of the Revelator where he says, "And another book was opened, which is the Book of Life."

The first passage I will notice with respect to mortals and immortals dwelling together is, Christ's transfiguration, Luke ix. 29–35. "And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistening."

Now mark the consequences of mortals and immortals dwelling together; and that too, for only a brief space; and at that, not a reality, but only figuratively. First consequence: "But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep." Second consequence: "Let us make three tabernacles: one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias; not knowing what he said."

Now, if an apparition, or a figure of immortality, will cause mortal beings to be heavy with sleep, and take away their senses, what will its full reality effect? But again, turn to Rev. i. 13–17. Notice the description here given of the immortal Jesus. "Clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle; and his head and hair as white as wool, and his eyes as a flame of fire, and his feet like to fine brass glowing with fire, as in a furnace, and his voice as the voice of many waters," &c.

Now mark the consequences of mortals and immortals dwelling together. v. 17. "And when I saw him I fell at his feet as dead;" and had not the miraculons power of the immortal placed "his right hand on me (John) saying, fear not," it is doubtful if John would ever have revived. If then the beloved John would be so struck down at the sight of immortality, how could the ungodly (not saying wicked) bear the sight of Jesus when revealed in his full glory? Do you reply, They will not dwell with Jesus, for he will be in the Metropolis. But they will dwell with his saints. Then what shall we do with this passage of scripture, 1 John iii. 2. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him," &c. It is useless to quote all the passages to show that the children shall be joint heirs with Christ; equal to the angels. I cannot see, then, how immortals can dwell with mortals; but I still have some more passages to solve on this subject. Take the case of Paul's mission to Damascus, Acts xxii. 6–11. "Suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about me." Now, what follows? "And I fell to the ground." Notice one thing in this history; there was nothing seen but the light; but he heard a voice that told him that it was Jesus that he was persecuting. Here we have only the light that shone from immortality, and it deprived him of eye sight. Again, take the case of Daniel x. 5–10. Here we have about the same description given of this grand personage as is given in Revelation. Daniel says, "I alone saw the vision; for the men that were with me saw not the vision; but a great quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves: there remained no strength in me; for my comeliness was turned in me into corruption; yet heard I the voice of his words." And what is the consequence? "Then was I in a deep sleep on my face." It seems to me, if such is the effect, that a voice of immortality should so benumb, stupefy, and, as it were, deaden a righteous man like Daniel, I cannot see how mortals and immortals could dwell together.

Once more, and then I quit. Ex. xxxiii. 18–23. "I beseech thee, show me thy glory." Answer to this request: "And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee: ....and he said, Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me and live." Moses here was permitted to see the back parts of God's immortality, but no more; and I judge that the only reason why he was not permitted to see immortality in full, was that he would have died that instant; for, "no man shall see my face and live." There is one more idea as to those angels that visited Abraham and Lot. I think it would be hard to prove that they were immortal. The washing of their feet shows that they had been travelling like men. The same thing is again performed when they come to Sodom; which shows that they had travelled from Mamre to Sodom; but had they have been immortals, commissioned or sent from God's throne, they would more likely have travelled in their own sphere, or mode of existence. The fact that they went to bed, like other men, is apparent; for, the history says, before they laid down, &c.

Middleville, Minn, Feb. 21, 1867.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We will notice some of our brother's objections to the idea that mortals and immortals may dwell together. If we show that they have associated together, his objections will vanish. But we will first remark on some of the texts he has urged as objections. Peter, on the mount of transfiguration, when he got "awake" wished to dwell there, and said "It is good to be here." So those "left of the nations" will find "it good to be" there, under a perfect government. The largest part of the christian world are "asleep," like Peter, to the glory of the coming dispensation; but when they get fairly "awake" to the subject, they may feel as Peter did when he opened his eyes on the glory of his Master.

The description, Rev. i., of Christ, our brother admits was "in his full glory;" and it is not necessary to suppose that the "full glory" of Christ or his immortal saints will be seen by "the left of the nations." That Christ's disciples to the number of at least "five hundred," saw him after his resurrection, and hence after He was immortal, is a clearly revealed truth; "then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." But His "full glory" was still hidden from them; yet He was none the less an "immortal," dwelling among them for "forty days;" and if so long, He could have done it forty years, for all immortality would prevent.

Paul's and Daniel's cases are the same as John's; that is, a case of the manifestation of "full glory;" and hence do not touch the question before us. This also is a sufficient reply to the case of Moses, who evidently wished to see God in "full glory," which no mortal can see.

The effort to make out that the persons who came to Abraham and Lot were not immortals, seems to us an utter failure. The supposed fact that these angels "went to bed" does not appear: the language requires no such construction, but the reverse. But how about the "Captain of the LORD's host," that appeared to Joshua, Josh. v. 13–15? and the angel that came to Manoah and his wife, and ascended up towards heaven "in the flame," Judges xiii.? And how about Gabriel who came to Daniel, more than once? Ay, and how about this same personage coming to the father of John, in the Temple? And finally how about Gabriel coming to Mary to announce the conception and birth of Jesus? These samples will serve to convince our brother, that his objections have not the weight he supposed. We therefere add no more, at present.

"FOLLOW THOU ME."

The words of Jesus are not as man's words—often devoid of interest. His words are few, emphatic, simple, truthful, and deep.

The power of truth is the more seen and felt when we view it in its simplicity, plain common sense, or matter of fact view.

To follow Jesus is, what? Evidently to pattern after him, resemble him, be like him, have a corresponding disposition, being possessed of a like prompter to action, hence acting like him; his life being the pattern or substance, ours the shadow, resembling his.

The first and all-important thing is the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. This "secret spring" must bubble up from the depths of our hearts. This also, like the watch-spring, must be the moving power to all right action. Thus prepared, "Follow me." Jusus' mission was to bless the world; so should ours be. He blessed it by hourly and daily work, doing good of every kind, and to every one, to the utmost, as opportunity presented; yea, and he was ever seeking out opportunities whereby he might bless somebody. Neither was he afraid of lacking in means, he was a dispenser of bounty: and in dispensing, God gave him to dispense.

His rule was man's rule reversed; man waits to get much before he gives little, and his toil in getting makes him hold fast to it after he has got it. But Jesus' heart was so sympathetic he only needed to see want and he went about to alleviate it with the means first at hand; his bountiful Father always supplying all lack. His faith in God was a reason of his abundant supply from God.

Let me repeat this idea. His great efficiency consisted not in his individual resources, but in his faith, or an intimate reliance on, and trust in him who possesses all power in heaven and in earth, and who doeth all his pleasure. His action was always prompt, being "sent of God;" his business was to obey orders, not to be thinking of rations, or supplies, a higher one attending to such matters, his being a holier mission.

What a life of wonders, of goodness, of blessing, was his! And why? All because his will was merged, lost in his Father's. Nothing more, nothing less. "I and my Father are one." This shone out brightly everywhere, even to suffering and death. "Follow thou me." For this purpose was the Son of God manifest (by his first advent into the world), that he might destroy the works of the devil. 1st. In his own personal example, having the Spirit without measure, by which he ruled over the animal man completely, and also gained a triumph over death and the grave. 2nd. In the promise of this Spirit after his ascension, to be with, and dwell in his followers, by which they, too, might "work the works of God" with a like glorious result.

That, then, which gave him his sufficiency, gives the church theirs. He was an humble, poor, and isolated individual; born in obscurity, and not accounted of; yet his life-work was the astonishment, admiration, and reformation of the world, so far as it told upon it.

Christian—professor of the name, deny no longer this Jesus by a want of his faith. Live no longer under the law of bondage, and dead works. Accept the Holy Spirit, which God, through Christ, will pour out upon you till all is swallowed up in a sea of glory and bliss; then will your feet run with delight in the ways of the Lord your God. Then shall you find a truthfulness in the Saviour's words, "Give and it shall be given to you again; pressed down, shaken together, and running over, shall men pour into your bosoms." Some do not give aright; keeping self and giving of our substance will do for Law-christians, but the Gospel requires "thy heart." Who, think you, would accept the fair maiden's hand in holy wedlock if her heart was known to be pledged to another? The heart first. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart;" (and, O, how worthy of all thy love is he!) then are you accepted as his bride, to bear his fame and glory all abroad. Keep the love ardent and he will add the accomplishments and all the adornments which may be fitting your station and usefulness. But, ah, this delusion of satan, which, like the frost of winter creeping through every crevice and chilling the inmates of the house, causes men in every position in the church to "think they are something when they are nothing." This fixing up the exterior, painting and varnishing (all right in their place), while the sills are rotten, the whole building filled with rubbish, and contaminated with disease and death! O my brethren, let us become divorced from the world, from self; think you Christ will accept a service of feigned love? Will he be satisfied with what we would not be from another? Who of all the host of God will take the lead in this matter? who will, David like, go forth to face the army of the Philistines? Those who have proved the sling of faith. Yes, these can go and nothing can harm them; they too shall triumph gloriously. To others we say, "go buy oil," while Jesus lingers; but be quick about it; no time to linger; haste thee, haste, for the morn breaketh; e'en now I see its glimmering light! Awake, arise, put on thy beautiful garments, O Zion.

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

Besides, as he reasoned of self-government, or personal righteousness, he should have spoken in particular of the judgment of God against those who commit such things as are forbidden by the law of God—such as are worthy of death—it is reasonable, therefore, to conclude that he referred to personal punishment. The judgment of God is death against those who live in violation of the law by which God designed that they should be governed, and it is according to truth, too.

The doctrine of the judgment at the close of the dispensation should be distinctly stated. Instead of its being a trial by a court, or assize, at the bar of God, as if the throne of judgment or seat, were literal, and evidence adduced that should convict or justify, after which a decision should be arrived at, and sentence passed; it is the judgment of execution, or punishment, which shall be inflicted when the Lord cometh to judgment, as he says.

When we say that the judgment is now, and the decision passed, we do not refer to the execution, the infliction of the penalty; for that is the state that is to continue; that is what the law demands. There is no power of recovery left; no life is promised or even threatened, to the dead sinner on which he can ever expect to come out.

We are not, then, like the Universalists, who believe that the judgment is passed as men go along; but who, believing in the immortal soul, do not see death as a penalty; and consequently, do not believe in a judgment at the end of time, if they believe it will end; but those who believe that the atonement paid the debt, and that man is no longer under Adam's sin; and, consequently, not under condemnation. They are like the older believers in Universalism; for those belivers took this same ground, substantially, that all being raised to life, all would be saved. A very logical conclusion indeed. This leaves the law without a penalty inflicted.

The believers in eternal torment, I suppose, all take the ground that the judgment must be after the righteous shall have been in heaven, and after the wicked shall have been in hell—the torment hell. That makes a mere farce of it. There is no need of it. There would be no justice in it. There would be a positive injury to the righteous, besides trifling with the wicked. It would present the character and administration of God in a light entirely opposed to the view of the Bible.

But what better is it in the principle? If God raises the wicked merely to judge them, i. e., make them feel sensible of the positions they occupy, and then having mixed them all up with the righteous, who shall, as some assert, be mortal, and must be, if they are to be tried then; for immortality is the reward that is given to the good, and is called a resurrection to life; therefore it is after the judgment by which character is determined: if, I say, he does all this, raising the wicked by a miraculous power to a miraculous life, if it is indeed a mortal one; and all this to punish them, to torment them out of being again, I cannot see any more justice or reasonableness than in the former p sition. There is no necessity in either case for the action. To suppose that God will bring men to a trial of that kind merely for the impression of his majesty on their minds, and the torment of going out of being again, with no good to be effected for any class, is to make the judgment an unmeaning and unrighteous thing; and also to make it conflict with the determinate principles of the Divine government. Then, if they are all mortal, where will they all stand? and how will the immense myriads live, while some are passing the ordeal, till the turn comes for the later ones to be examined? Remember, they are to be mortal! for they are to have a condition which shall follow the adjudication, and determined character by trial. They will be made to live only by the laws by which mortals live; for, they are mortal; "Oh, it will only be for a day." It will be a long time if a judgment of a judicial character takes place. It will take time, for the examination of each one; and so each mortal man, saint or sinner, must be sustained for a long time, else the saint, who is yet mortal, would die: but the word declares they shall not die any more. Also the wicked would die; and being dead the second time the advocates of a mortal resurrection could not claim, for them, a notice at the general judgment; nor even the privilege of an especial exhibition of wrath, in being destroyed out of being by his power; for they would have suffered the "second death."

Now here are some things that we must consider. This resurrection of mortal men, to a trial-judgment, must require time; and physical space, as well as to require that throne or seat to be literal. It will require the provisions necessary to support life, in the case of each class, till it is passed through with; which, in the nature of the case, should be a long time.

The thing is somewhat mixed up. At one time, we are told that all men are to stand before God at the last day, which becomes inharmonious altogether with the second advent doctrine and the kingdom, with the literal resurrection of the dead men who are to be literally tried. Then we are assured by some that the dead, to raise whom required the special life-power which is only vested in Jesus Christ, and who, we are most plainly told, shall be raised incorruptible, shall all literally stand before God; which, with the circumstances of mortal life assumed, is not only incompatible with the world-to-come condition, but utterly impossible.

We ask why some expositors should urge a few passages in support of the doctrine of a general judgment, when the very idea of such a court is absurd and impossible? If the passages cannot be taken in harmony with this view, and with the scriptures, which shall be surrendered?

"A Good Idea.—A church in Columbus, Ohio, has a printed notice requesting gentlemen to leave their tobacco at the door.—An Exchange.

Shame on such a church! just as though a "gentleman" would use the filthy weed at all; and especially be guilty of leaving it at "the church door!" Such a "church" must be a stench in the sight of the pure and holy One. What, a man so wedded to filth that he can't leave it only "at the door" of the "church!" and then, only by having "a printed notice" before his eyes! We think the "gentleman" that is so callous to purity as that had better go into his "closet" and stay—we hardly dare say, pray—till he is cured of his lust for that which but two inferior animals are simple enough to eat, viz: "the tobacco worm, and the filthy wild goat of Africa." Keep clear of that "abomination of desolation," you that hope to have part in the renovated earth. No unclean thing will be allowed there.

Those who possess the elements of peace in their own minds will seek to promote peace among others.

Christian Liberty.

A christian is a disciple, a learner of Christ, a person who receives Jesus as his divine teacher and guide, and who studies to understand on purpose that he may obey his teachings. The very idea of a christian implies that he is free from all men, that he acknowledges the authority of no man under heaven, either as teacher or Lord; that Christ is his all; that his principles and conduct are regulated solely by a regard to the will of God as revealed and exemplified by Christ; that other teachers or Lords are nothing in his view; that he rejects what he believes to be contrary to the teachings of Jesus, though taught and urged as essentials by the whole world; that he receives the plain doctrines of Christ, though denounced as heretical or infidel; that he does what he believes to be required of him by Christ, though all others should pronounce it rebellion; that he refuses to do what he believes to be at variance with the doctrine of Christ, though enacted by the greatest authorities on earth, and declared to be essential to the order and peace of the church. In short, the idea of a christian implies, that he stands, as it were, alone in the universe, without any one in the capacity of master, but Jesus, without any one in the relation of father, but God. The relation in which he stands to men is that of a brother. He can neither be a master nor a slave, a ruler nor a subject, without inconsistency. He can be a servant, a minister, a helper, a benefactor; but he cannot be a slave, he cannot be a master. He cannot acknowledge the authority even of a church, much less of a body or corporation outside the church. He cannot acknowledge the authority of a teacher. He must try the teachers whether they be a of God, and he must prove or test the teaching even of the best of teachers. He is, under God and Christ, his own sole ruler, his own sole master, his own sole judge, his own sole guide. The will of God, as recognized and understood by himself, is his own sole rule. It is not the will of man, it is not the will of popes, it is not the will of conferences, it is not the will of churches or of pastors that is his rule; it is the will of God. It is not the will of God as understood by others; but the will of God as understood by himself. To his own master he stands or falls; and by his own conscience, as enlightened by the revelation of God, he must be guided in all things. Such is the christian, free from all men, free in all things, perfectly free, free in all circumstances, "free indeed." Free in thought, free in action, free in speech. Free, not to do wrong, but to do right only; but still free to judge for himself what is wrong and what is not. Bound in all things to obey the law of God, but perfectly at liberty to judge what is God's law as well as to judge what God's law means. Men may teach us, but not dictate to us; they may help us to think and understand, but not think or understand in our stead; they may help us to a knowledge of God's will, but not impose on us their own interpretations or inventions. Such is the christian. He is very teachable; but his teacher is Christ: he is very submissive; but his Lord is in heaven: he is very peaceful; but it is in the enjoyment and use of his liberty.

A christian church is a company, or assembly, or an association of such persons. It is a company or association of persons who will not be lords, and who will not be slaves; who will neither give commands themselves, nor receive commands from others: who will neither rule their brethren, nor allow their brethren to rule them; who think and act and speak with liberty themselves, and who respect and encourage and love liberty in all their brethren. The greatest of them are servants, the highest are helpers. They all are servants and helpers; servants and helpers to each other. And when this state of things does not exist in a church, the church is no longer a christian church.

The Jews did not more certainly cut themselves off from God when they acknowledged the godhead of the golden calf, than christians cut themselves off from Christ when they acknowledge the authority of conferences or popes. Whether the authority acknowledged be in one or many; whether it be the authority of laymen or clergy (if we may use such words), it is still the same; it cannot be acknowledged in the church of Christ, without utterly changing its character—without changing it from a church of Christ into an essentially different thing. We cannot serve two masters; we cannot be ruled by two wills. If we become the servants of men, we cease to be the servants of God; if we are resolved to be the servants of God, we must cease to be the servants of men. The doctrine of christianity annihilates the authority of man, and acknowledges only the authority of God. You will see therefore, that we consider it not only dangerous but fatal to the church, when it places itself under any authority but that of Christ. You will also see, that we consider most, if not all the churches in our land, as in a wrong position; as churches of some one else, and not of Christ. The Methodist churches are all bound by the laws and doctrines of Wesley, or by the authority of their preachers or conferences. The independent churches are in subjection to their pastors, as well as to creeds and regulations. The papists are in subjection to the Pope; and all, we fear, to something or other. Now to us there appears to be no essential difference between the Protestants and Papists, so long as they are both in subjection to the authority of man. The position of both is anti-christian. We meet with some who say that it is impossible for churches to exist on the principle of unrestrained christian liberty; who tell us that churches must either have some human authority or crumble to pieces. We reply, if we must either give up church organization or sacrifice individual liberty, let church organization be given up. If we must either be in subjection to men or cease to be churches, let us cease to be churches. It is essential to our divine life that we act freely; but it is not essential to it to be organized churches. Our plan is this: endeavor to know what is the will of God, and to act accordingly. Endeavor to learn the truth and to spread it; to detect error, and to expose it. We believe it our duty to live for the good of our fellow-men, and labor to serve them in just such ways as seem best to us. Let us acknowledge no one's authority either in matters of truth or duty. Let us believe in God, and love him; and labor so to act that we may always please him. Let us believe in Jesus as God's appointed teacher, example and guide; and let us study his doctrine, and labor to drink in his spirit, and to walk as he also walked. Let us accept help or instruction from any one; but acknowledge no man as our Lord. Popes, priests, conferences, and yearly meetings, are alike. Let us pay no more regard to their authority than to the will of a wayward child; no more regard to their creeds and laws, than to the talk of a stranger in the street. Let us feel it essential to peace of conscience: essential to confidence in God, and to our eternal life, to be free from all authority but the authority of God. We could no more join a church that would expect to rule us, than we could join a press-gang; no more tie ourself with creeds or laws of man's making, than sell ourself to the sultan, or hire ourself to a pirate. Let us meet with any church or with any single christian that can receive us as a brother and a friend; but let us meet with none that cannot leave us free. Let us make no confession of faith or opinion to any one, except in the way of free conversation, or for purposes of instruction; and ask no confession of faith or opinion from others. If we find out men to be profligate or faithless, cease all fellowship with them, though still endeavor to serve them, and reclaim them from their errors. Speak, print, and publish with perfect liberty, respecting no dictation but that of God and our own conscience. Be a slave to none; a lord to none; draw up no creeds; make no laws; establish no governments. We are in favor of christian union; in favor of association and co-operation, so far as they are consistent with perfect, individual christian liberty. Some co-operate with us, but they would never dream of our requesting them to obey us. Many are associated or united with us, but none regard us otherwise than as a friend, a brother, or a helper. All we care for is the spread of truth and righteousness, and the welfare of mankind; and we take such steps and use such means, as appear to us the most likely to accomplish this great object.

"Jump in."—Into what? Into heaven, to be sure! How is that? Just listen to the following which we clipped from the scraps of an "Editor's Table."

"This morning the brightest of my little flock, a darling boy, who has only numbered three and a half years, was walking with his nurse; as they approached a small ice-pond which is near the house, she told him that he must never go near that pond.

"Why not?" (Children must always have a reason given them for every assertion.)

"Because," she replied, "Georgy, you would get drowned, and then I should feel so bad."

"Then, Eliza, I would not speak to you, but I'd go up to heaven."

"I should feel so sorry for that," replied the nurse; "I should cry, for what should I do without George?"

He stood in a thoughtful posture a moment, and then turning around, he says:

"Eliza, just you jump in and drown yourself, and come up to heaven, and I will let you in!"

There is a text for going-to-heaven-at-death preachers. Aye, a sermon, ready at hand, by a young theologian who is making rapid progress to eminence in theological deductions from the popular theory of the inherent immortality of Adam's race. There should be an application for a "D. D." to his name immediately. Such shining talents should not go unrewarded. He will soon "jump" into an "ice-pond," no doubt.

"Drive out the God."

Some years ago Dr. Frothingham gave his "Estimate of Phrenology." In his remarks he gave vent to the following:

"But we wish to record our widest dissent from those who see in this so-called science, either an experimental or logical philosophy of the human mind. And we do wish to bear our most earnest testimony against that large left wing of its small host, who set up their banner against the powers of a reverent spiritualism and the armies of the living word: who have mapped out man's head, that they might materialize his soul—thus dividing the temple that they might drive out the god."

So it appears an "immaterial soul" is "The God" in man. To us this is nothing new. Soul worship is the "Idolatry" of this age, disguise it as theologinas may. "It is immaterial, indivisible, uncompounded, indestructible," they affirm. Truly, it is "The God!" But we do not worship at that shrine. Papacy and her daughters are at full liberty to monopolize all the benefits of such homage. Let Dr. Frothingham or any other man show from "the armies of the living word," if they can, that man has this fancied entity which they call "soul." They can assume it: that is easy; but to prove it by "the law and the testimony" is entirely another matter. The time has come when something more than declamation and assumption will be demanded from the advocates of any theory; especially when we are called "reverently" to bow and worship "the God," called the "immaterial soul." Give us the testimony of the "living word," if you have it. We have looked for it in vain, and so, in our opinion, will all others, if they rely alone on the words of God.

Ritualism.

Some time last year one of our correspondents, in calling attention to the prevailing evils of modern theological bodies, spoke of the movement in the Episcopal church to carry that body back into Catholicism. This statement brought out a very impertinent and ill-tempered communication from an anonymous correspondent attacking the Editor of the Herald. This was published with a reply, but not one agreeable to the aggressor, who rejoined in a long, rambling dissertation on religious duty, given in the true Roman Catholic spirit, but failing to meet the real issue by any argument save the writer's own opinions. We think by this time even such stubbornness as his to facts must have given way. Since that time the extent of this trouble in the Episcopal church has been brought to light in the numerous charges made by bishops and ministers to guard its members from the great danger into which many have already fallen. Nearly every parish, both in England and in this country, has its two parties termed Ritualists and Anti-Ritualists. The movement is, no doubt, the work of the "Tractarians," who made a great stir some years ago in favor of going over to the Roman Catholic church; who have been artfully disseminating their heresies among the laity in accordance with the spirit they had adopted—"the end justifies the means." In some of the Episcopal churches in New York, ministers may be seen with the peculiar vestments of the Catholic priests. Some of them, if not all, proclaim it wrong for the clergy to marry, the host is exhibited, they burn incense, and make all the genuflections during service heretofore confined to the Catholic service. They have also called into requisition a class of young females who, like the Catholic nuns, are pledged to devote themselves to the service of the church. If such scenes may be witnessed in America, it is easy to divine to what lengths this spirit must have reached in the English churches. It most surely is one of the signs of the times, and it is only on that account we have ever called attention to it.

"Diotrephiasis."

A writer in a certain journal has been giving some attention to that phase of human pride that centers in self, which has in every age led men to claim for themselves some mysterious mission. It is not confined to religion, but may be regarded as primarily a religious disease rather than military or political. The writer thinks it ought to be termed "Diotrephiasis," from Diotrephes, who in John's Epistle, is complained of as having too much desire for pre-eminence. He says:

"This disease has assumed in this country a very interesting type within the last thirty-five years. Like modern bronchitis and laryngitis—the "minister's sore throat"—it has become so distinct and virulent as to require a special name and special treatment. It seems even to be contagious and epidemic. We were told years ago that there were not less than three hundred persons among the Spiritualists, each of whom beileved himself to be "the coming man," i. e., the central medium of modern inspiration, and the predestined inaugurator of the "good time coming." The number must be much greater now. We ourselves saw among Perfectionists, before Spiritualism was born, probably not less than a hundred victims of this disease—persons who suddenly became inflated with the insane notion that they were Christs and had the destiny of the world on their shoulders. The stages by which the disease progressed were sometimes curious. In a little clique of illuminati there would arise a strife to outstrip each other in startling testimony. One would claim to be a son of God; another, going a little beyond the first, would testify that he was the Son of God; a third, pressing on for the primacy, would affirm that he was the only begotten of the Father; and a fourth would cap the climax by announcing that he was God himself, the very Father in person! We use the masculine pronouns in the above descriptions, but the persons engaged in these races were as often females as males.

We may laugh at these phenomena as eccentricities, or scold at them as blasphemies; but the truer and better way is to study them as diseases. These monstrous swellings of egotism have causes as subtle and as real as the causes of goitre, and are almost as involuntary. They are states of the brain and solar plexus, affected by evil spirits, and though generally harmless enough to keep out of the lunatic hospitals, are actually forms of incipient mania, and often pass into real insanity. All lunatic asylums are full of patients who believe themselves to be sole potentates. In fact, this enlargement of the ego is the most constant symptom of virulent mania."

Satan's Sifter.

"And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat." Luke xxii. 31.

This scripture has been impressed on my mind with weight, and I have been stirred in spirit to write. I pray the good Lord to help me, for vain is the help of man.

It is evident to all the readers of the Herald that chaff needs no sifting; it is the wheat. When we sift wheat it is to separate the chaff from it; the wheat dropping through the sieve. The chaff is blown away and destroyed.

Believers in Christ are represented as wheat: it is of a heavier nature than chaff. Peter was a believer, and it constituted him wheat. This kind is worth its weight in gold. Yea, I might say, thrice its weight in gold.

It is very evident to our mind, that Satan looks at the wheat in this light. If it were not very valuable to him, he would not be so earnest to sift them and make them chaff. Wheat is much heavier than chaff, and as it is shaken it drops through the sieve, it is saved for the Master's use.

The work of the Master with his holy truth, is to make wheat out of chaff; for man is taken out of the dust; is of the earth, earthy; and unless he is connected with the great Life-giver by faith in his name, and the great work which he is to do, he must perish in his own corruption.

The work of Satan is to reverse the work we have been speaking of, and make chaff out of wheat. He does this work by sifting the wheat. He has at work many sieves. I do not intend to speak of but one, at this time. I find in my labors in different places a class of people, who, when I ask them how they are getting along in the ways of religion, show a spirit that would ward off anything that could be said, and refer you to professors who do not live any better than they do. I call this one of his sifters. No wonder they are weak, living on the poor natural man's failings.

Now, my dear brother or sister, whoever you are, that have been drawn into this sieve, and are being sifted in this manner, let me tell you, if you don't get out you will become so poor that the enemy will make you chaff. This is one of his artful ways of weakening your faith, destroying your confidence, and bringing us into captivity to his will.

The nature of the natural and spiritual man is not so well understood as it ought to be. The better this is understood, the more beauty we can see in the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. It is necessary we should have a mark to look at while we are running the christian course. We have it in the holy scriptures, abundantly.

John came to prepare the way of the Lord. In his preaching he says, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. John i. 29.

The prophet John labored to collect a bride for our Lord, and prepare her to be presented to him, when he should make his appearance. At length he appeared on the banks of Jordan, and John sees him coming to him, and cries, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world; and presenting the bride to him, they left John and followed Jesus. Fixing his eyes intently upon him, singling him out, and regarding him with special attention.

My dear brethren and sisters, here, in the blessed Saviour, you will find a character that will bear examination. He is the spiritual man. Look at him, at any point you please; he will bear the test. Glory be to his holy name, the character that shines out in the holy scriptures, outshines the sun at noonday. All the characters brought out in the scriptures fall into insignificance before his. So John understood it. He says, I must decrease; he must increase. The grand and glorious principles that he developed in his preaching are in harmony with his character; showing him to be of an increasing nature. And while the ceaseless ages shall continue to roll, his glorious character will continue to shine; his wisdom will continue to be developed.

Now let me ask one and all, if we have looked too much at the natural man, let us heed John's words. Stop looking at the natural man, and behold the spiritual. By so doing we shall grow stronger, more healthy; and be able to walk alone. It is poor food to feed on professors' failings.

Is Elijah yet to Come?

I design to say but a few words in reply to the remarks of Eld. J. S. White, in the issue of March 20th. If I see the matter in its true light, very little is needed to be said. I do not write for the purpose of strengthening my former argument: for I think I shall not be accused of egotism if I say that Br. White has failed to touch a single point in that argument. The main question does not in the least depend on whether the "Greek text" will admit of the reading I gave it, or whether it will not. In the opinion of Br. White "a prophet" "is not in the Greek text." But in the opinion of all those men who translated our version of the Bible, "a prophet" is in the Greek text. So they have put "a prophet" in the margin. I repeat what I said in my former article, that in a large majority of cases the marginal readings are the most literal rendering of "the Greek text." Again, in the opinion of Prof. James Murdock, "a prophet" is positively in the original Syriac. Mark well, Br. White, no better authority is known to exist than the Syriac Peshito Version of the N. T. So much for this. Now to the main question. Was John the Elijah which was to come? Let us turn to Mal. iv. 5, 6, and we shall find just how much is contained in the "Elijah Mission." Hear it.

"Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

How much then is contained in the "Elijah Message?" Simply this, "the turning of the heart of the fathers to the children—and of the children to the fathers; and positively no more. This is all that Malachi gives; and as he is the only prophet who speaks of the coming of Elijah, to say there is more in the "Elijah Message" than Malachi puts in it, is simply to be "wise above what is written."

Here then we anchor down on the plain, positive language of the prophet of God, and hold with an unyielding grasp the simple proposition that all that Elijah was to do when he did come, was to "turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the fathers." Now how much of this did John fulfill? Br. White admits that he fulfilled "some" of the work that is contained in the Elijah Message. Does he not see that even this admission kills his theory? Was John's mission of God? And did God send John to do a work which did not belong to him? Most certainly John did the very work God sent him to perform. If therefore he did fulfill a portion of the Elijah Message (and Br. White admits he did), then, unless he mistook his calling, was out of his proper sphere, he was "the Elijah which was for to come." I remark farther, it is fair to conclude that if he fulfilled a part of the Elijah Message, he did the whole work of Elijah. To suppose that he was sent of God to accomplish a certain work; that he commenced that work, and by some trick of the devil the plan of God failed in its full accomplishment; and consequently God must send another man, that he must "try again," is simply preposterous. This is not God's manner of fulfilling prophecy. But to put all theorizing forever at rest, we simply say, John the Baptist did do all that Malachi, or any other prophet, has ever said that Elijah would do when he did come. We say this on the authority of the angel Gabriel. What says Gabriel? See Luke i, 17. "He (John) shall go before him (the Lord) in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." Now, unless the mission of John failed, he did accomplish all that any prophet ever said that Elijah would do. And God does not fulfil his word twice. Neither does God make a mistake and send the wrong man to do a work he has declared shall be accomplished. As John did fulfil all that Elijah was to do, the conclusion is inevitable that he is "the Elijah which was for to come."

With this agree the clear, positive, unqualified declarations of the Son of God. Hear him. In Mat. xi. 13, he says, "If ye will receive it this is Elias which was for to come." What can be more positive? Again, Mat. xvii. 10–13. "And his disciples asked him saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?" Christ is here questioned on the very point on which Br. White and I differ, viz., the coming of Elijah. It is plain from this text and the context that the Jews had urged as an argument against the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth, that Elias had not yet come. On the mount of transfiguration the voice from heaven had settled the question forever as to the fact that Christ is the Son of God; the disciples therefore query about this, saying that "Elias must first come."

Will Christ mislead them? Will he not rather tell them all the truth? We think he will keep nothing back on this question. Hear his answer. "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come men go along; but who, believing in the immortal soul, do not see death as a penalty; and consequently, do not believe in a judgment at the end of time, if they believe it will end; but those who believe that the atonement paid the debt, and that man is no longer under Adam's sin; and, consequently, not under condemnation. They are like the older believers in Universalism; for those belivers took this same ground, substantially, that all being raised to life, all would be saved. A very logical conclusion indeed. This leaves the law without a penalty inflicted.

The believers in eternal torment, I suppose, all take the ground that the judgment must be after the righteous shall have been in heaven, and after the wicked shall have been in hell—the torment hell. That makes a mere farce of it. There is no need of it. There would be no justice in it. There would be a positive injury to the righteous, besides trifling with the wicked. It would present the character and administration of God in a light entirely opposed to the view of the Bible.

But what better is it in the principle? If God raises the wicked merely to judge them, i. e., make them feel sensible of the positions they occupy, and then having mixed them all up with the righteous, who shall, as some assert, be mortal, and must be, if they are to be tried then; for immortality is the reward that is given to the good, and is called a resurrection to life; therefore it is after the judgment by which character is determined: if, I say, he does all this, raising the wicked by a miraculous power to a miraculous life, if it is indeed a mortal one; and all this to punish them, to torment them out of being again, I cannot see any more justice or reasonableness than in the former p sition. There is no necessity in either case for the action. To suppose that God will bring men to a trial of that kind merely for the impression of his majesty on their minds, and the torment of going out of being again, with no good to be effected for any class, is to make the judgment an unmeaning and unrighteous thing; and also to make it conflict with the determinate principles of the Divine government. Then, if they are all mortal, where will they all stand? and how will the immense myriads live, while some are passing the ordeal, till the turn comes for the later ones to be examined? Remember, they are to be mortal! for they are to have a condition which shall follow the adjudication, and determined character by trial. They will be made to live only by the laws by which mortals live; for, they are mortal; "Oh, it will only be for a day." It will be a long time if a judgment of a judicial character takes place. It will take time, for the examination of each one; and so each mortal man, saint or sinner, must be sustained for a long time, else the saint, who is yet mortal, would die: but the word doclares they shall not die any more. Also the wicked would die; and being dead the second time the advocates of a mortal resurrection could not claim, for them, a notice at the general judgment; nor even the privilege of an espepecial exhibition of wrath, in being destroyed out of being by his power; for they would have suffered the "second death."

Now here are some things that we must consider. This resurrection of mortal men, to a trial-judgment, must require time; and physical space, as well as to require that throne or seat to be literal. It will require the provisions necessary to support life, in the case of each class, till it is passed through with; which, in the nature of the case, should be a long time.

The thing is somewhat mixed up. At one time, we are told that all men are to stand before God at the last day, which becomes inharmonious altogether with the second advent doctrine and the kingdom, with the literal resurrection of the dead men who are to be literally tried. Then we are assured by some that the dead, to raise whom required the special life-power which is only vested in Jesus Christ, and who, we are most plainly told, shall be raised incorruptible, shall all literally stand before God; which, with the circumstances of mortal life assumed, is not only incompatible with the world-to-come condition, but utterly impossible.

We ask why some expositors should urge a few passages in support of the doctrine of a general judgment, when the very idea of such a court is absurd and impossible? If the passages cannot be taken in harmony with this view, and with the scriptures, which shall be surrendered?

"A Good Idea—A church in Columbus, Ohio, has a printed notice requesting gentlemen to leave their tobacco at the door.—An Exchange.

Shame on such a church! just as though a "gentleman" would use the filthy weed at all; and especially be guilty of leaving it at "the church door!" Such a "church" must be a stench in the sight of the pure and holy One. What, a man so wedded to filth that he can't leave it only "at the door" of the "church!" and then, only by having "a printed notice" before his eyes! We think the "gentleman" that is so callous to purity as that had better go into his "closet" and stay—we hardly dare say, pray—till he is cured of his lust for that which but two inferior animals are simple enough to eat, viz: "the tobacco worm, and the filthy wild goat of Africa." Keep clear of that "abomination of desolation," you that hope to have part in the renovated earth. No unclean thing will be allowed there.

Those who possess the elements of peace in their own minds will seek to promote peace among others.

Christian Liberty.

A christian is a disciple, a learner of Christ, a person who receives Jesus as his divine teacher and guide, and who studies to understand on purpose that he may obey his teachings. The very idea of a christian implies that he is free from all men, that he acknowledges the authority of no man under heaven, either as teacher or Lord; that Christ is his all; that his principles and conduct are regulated solely by a regard to the will of God as revealed and exemplified by Christ; that other teachers or Lords are nothing in his view; that he rejects what he believes to be contrary to the teachings of Jesus, though taught and urged as essentials by the whole world; that he receives the plain doctrines of Christ, though denounced as heretical or infidel; that he does what he believes to be required of him by Christ, though all others should pronounce it rebellion; that he refuses to do what he believes to be at variance with the doctrine of Christ, though enacted by the greatest authorities on earth, and declared to be essential to the order and peace of the church. In short, the idea of a christian implies, that he stands, as it were, alone in the universe, without any one in the capacity of master, but Jesus, without any one in the relation of father, but God. The relation in which he stands to men is that of a brother. He can neither be a master nor a slave, a ruler nor a subject, without inconsistency. He can be a servant, a minister, a helper, a benefactor; but he cannot be a slave, he cannot be a master. He cannot acknowledge the authority even of a church, much less of a body or corporation outside the church. He cannot acknowledge the authority of a teacher. He must try the teachers whether they be a of God, and he must prove or test the teaching even of the best of teachers. He is, under God and Christ, his own sole ruler, his own sole master, his own sole judge, his own sole guide. The will of God, as recognized and understood by himself, is his own sole rule. It is not the will of man, it is not the will of popes, it is not the will of conferences, it is not the will of churches or of pastors that is his rule; it is the will of God. It is not the will of God as understood by others; but the will of God as understood by himself. To his own master he stands or falls; and by his own conscience, as enlightened by the revelation of God, he must be guided in all things. Such is the christian, free from all men, free in all things, perfectly free, free in all circumstances, "free indeed." Free in thought, free in action, free in speech. Free, not to do wrong, but to do right only; but still free to judge for himself what is wrong and what is not. Bound in all things to obey the law of God, but perfectly at liberty to judge what is God's law as well as to judge what God's law means. Men may teach us, but not dictate to us; they may help us to think and understand, but not think or understand in our stead; they may help us to a knowledge of God's will, but not impose on us their own interpretations or inventions. Such is the christian. He is very teachable; but his teacher is Christ: he is very submissive; but his Lord is in heaven: he is very peaceful; but it is in the enjoyment and use of his liberty.

A christian church is a company, or assembly, or an association of such persons. It is a company or association of persons who will not be lords, and who will not be slaves; and who will neither give commands themselves, nor receive commands from others: who will neither rule their brethren, nor allow their brethren to rule them; who think and act and speak with liberty themselves, and who respect and encourage and love liberty in all their brethren. The greatest of them are servants, the highest are helpers. They all are servants and helpers; servants and helpers to each other. And when this state of things does not exist in a church, the church is no longer a christian church.

The Jews did not more certainly cut themselves off from God when they acknowledged the godhead of the golden calf, than christians cut themselves off from Christ when they acknowledge the authority of conferences or popes. Whether the authority acknowledged be in one or many; whether it be the authority of laymen or clergy (if we may use such words), it is still the same; it cannot be acknowledged in the church of Christ, without utterly changing its character—without changing it from a church of Christ into an essentially different thing. We cannot serve two masters; we cannot be ruled by two wills. If we become the servants of men, we cease to be the servants of God; if we are resolved to be the servants of God, we must cease to be the servants of men. The doctrine of christianity annihilates the authority of man, and acknowledges only the authority of God. You will see therefore, that we consider it not only dangerous but fatal to the church, when it places itself under any authority but that of Christ. You will also see, that we consider most, if not all the churches in our land, as in a wrong position; as churches of some one else, and not of Christ. The Methodist churches are all bound by the laws and doctrines of Wesley, or by the authority of their preachers or conferences. The independent churches are in subjection to their pastors, as well as to creeds and regulations. The papists are in subjection to the Pope; and all, we fear, to something or other. Now to us there appears to be no essential difference between the Protestants and Papists, so long as they are both in subjection to the authority of man. The position of both is anti-christian. We meet with some who say that it is impossible for churches to exist on the principle of unrestrained christian liberty; who tell us that churches must either have some human authority or crumble to pieces. We reply, if we must either give up church organization or sacrifice individual liberty, let church organization be given up. If we must either be in subjection to men or cease to be churches, let us cease to be churches. It is essential to our divine life that we act freely; but it is not essential to it to be organized churches. Our plan is this: endeavor to know what is the will of God, and to act accordingly. Endeavor to learn the truth and to spread it; to detect error, and to expose it. We believe it our duty to live for the good of our fellow-men, and labor to serve them in just such ways as seem best to us. Let us acknowledge no one's authority either in matters of truth or duty. Let us believe in God, and love him; and labor so to act that we may always please him. Let us believe in Jesus as God's appointed teacher, example and guide; and let us study his doctrine, and labor to drink in his spirit, and to walk as he also walked. Let us accept help or instruction from any one; but acknowledge no man as our Lord. Popes, priests, conferences, and yearly meetings, are alike. Let us pay no more regard to their authority than to the will of a wayward child; no more regard to their creeds and laws, than to the talk of a stranger in the street. Let us feel it essential to peace of conscience: essential to confidence in God, and to our eternal life, to be free from all authority but the authority of God. We could no more join a church that would expect to rule us, than we could join a press-gang; no more tie ourself with creeds or laws of man's making, than sell ourself to the sultan, or hire ourself to a pirate. Let us meet with any church or with any single christian that can receive us as a brother and a friend; but let us meet with none that cannot leave us free. Let us make no confession of faith or opinion to any one, except in the way of free conversation, or for purposes of instruction; and ask no confession of faith or opinion from others. If we find out men to be profligate or faithless, cease all fellowship with them, though still endeavor to serve them, and reclaim them from their errors. Speak, print, and publish with perfect liberty, respecting no dictation but that of God and our own conscience. Be a slave to none; a lord to none; draw up no creeds; make no laws; establish no governments. We are in favor of christian union; in favor of association and co-operation, so far as they are consistent with perfect, individual christian liberty. Some co-operate with us, but they would never dream of our requesting them to obey us. Many are associated or united with us, but none regard us otherwise than as a friend, a brother, or a helper. All we care for is the spread of truth and righteousness, and the welfare of mankind; and we take such steps and use such means, as appear to us the most likely to accomplish this great object.

"Jump in."—Into what? Into heaven, to be sure! How is that? Just listen to the following which we clipped from the scraps of an "Editor's Table."

"This morning the brightest of my little flock, a darling boy, who has only numbered three and a half years, was walking with his nurse; as they approached a small ice-pond which is near the house, she told him that he must never go near that pond.

"Why not?" (Children must always have a reason given them for every assertion.)

"Because," she replied, "Georgy, you would get drowned, and then I should feel so bad."

"Then, Eliza, I would not speak to you, but I'd go up to heaven."

"I should feel so sorry for that," replied the nurse; "I should cry, for what should I do without George?"

He stood in a thoughtful posture a moment, and then turning around, he says:

"Eliza, just you jump in and drown yourself, and come up to heaven, and I will let you in!"

There is a text for going-to-heaven-at-death preachers. Aye, a sermon, ready at hand, by a young theologian who is making rapid progress to eminence in theological deductions from the popular theory of the inherent immortality of Adam's race. There should be an application for a "D. D." to his name immediately. Such shining talents should not go unrewarded. He will soon "jump" into an "ice-pond," no doubt.

"Drive out the God."

Some years ago Dr. Frothingham gave his "Estimate of Phrenology." In his remarks he gave vent to the following:

"But we wish to record our widest dissent from those who see in this so-called science, either an experimental or logical philosophy of the human mind. And we do wish to bear our most earnest testimony against that large left wing of its small host, who set up their banner against the powers of a reverent spiritualism and the armies of the living word: who have mapped out man's head, that they might materialize his soul—thus dividing the temple that they might drive out the god."

So it appears an "immaterial soul" is "The God" in man. To us this is nothing new. Soul worship is the "Idolatry" of this age, disguise it as theologinas may. "It is immaterial, indivisible, uncompounded, indestructible," they affirm. Truly, it is "The God!" But we do not worship at that shrine. Papacy and her daughters are at full liberty to monopolize all the benefits of such homage. Let Dr. Frothingham or any other man show from "the armies of the living word," if they can, that man has this fancied entity which they call "soul." They can assume it: that is easy; but to prove it by "the law and the testimony" is entirely another matter. The time has come when something more than declamation and assumption will be demanded from the advocates of any theory; especially when we are called "reverently" to bow and worship "the God," called the "immaterial soul." Give us the testimony of the "living word," if you have it. We have looked for it in vain, and so, in our opinion, will all others, if they rely alone on the words of God.

Ritualism.

Some time last year one of our correspondents, in calling attention to the prevailing evils of modern theological bodies, spoke of the movement in the Episcopal church to carry that body back into Catholicism. This statement brought out a very impertinent and ill-tempered communication from an anonymous correspondent attacking the Editor of the Herald. This was published with a reply, but not one agreeable to the aggressor, who rejoined in a long, rambling dissertation on religious duty, given in the true Roman Catholic spirit, but failing to meet the real issue by any argument save the writer's own opinions. We think by this time even such stubbornness as his to facts must have given way. Since that time the extent of this trouble in the Episcopal church has been brought to light in the numerous charges, made by bishops and ministers to guard its members from the great danger into which many have already fallen. Nearly every parish, both in England and in this country, has its two parties termed Ritualists and Anti-Ritualists. The movement is, no doubt, the work of the "Tractarians," who made a great stir some years ago in favor of going over to the Roman Catholic church; who have been artfully disseminating their heresies among the laity in accordance with the spirit they had adopted—"the end justifies the means." In some of the Episcopal churches in New York, ministers may be seen with the peculiar vestments of the Catholic priests. Some of them, if not all, proclaim it wrong for the clergy to marry, the host is exhibited, they burn incense, and make all the genuflections during service heretofore confined to the Catholic service. They have also called into requisition a class of young females who, like the Catholic nuns, are pledged to devote themselves to the service of the church. If such scenes may be witnessed in America, it is easy to divine to what lengths this spirit must have reached in the English churches. It most surely is one of the signs of the times, and it is only on that account we have ever called attention to it.

"Diotrephiasis."

A writer in a certain journal has been giving some attention to that phase of human pride that centers in self, which has in every age led men to claim for themselves some mysterious mission. It is not confined to religion, but may be regarded as primarily a religious disease rather than military or political. The writer thinks it ought to be termed "Diotrephiasis," from Diotrephes, who in John's Epistle, is complained of as having too much desire for pre-eminence. He says:

"This disease has assumed in this country a very interesting type within the last thirty-five years. Like modern bronchitis and laryngitis—the "minister's sore throat"—it has become so distinct and virulent as to require a special name and special treatment. It seems even to be contagious and epidemic. We were told years ago that there were not less than three hundred persons among the Spiritualists, each of whom beileved himself to be "the coming man," i. e., the central medium of modern inspiration, and the predestined inaugurator of the "good time coming." The number must be much greater now. We ourselves saw among Perfectionists, before Spiritualism was born, probably not less than a hundred victims of this disease—persons who suddenly became inflated with the insane notion that they were Christs and had the destiny of the world on their shoulders. The stages by which the disease progressed were sometimes curious. In a little clique of illuminati there would arise a strife to outstrip each other in startling testimony. One would claim to be a son of God; another, going a little beyond the first, would testify that he was the Son of God; a third, pressing on for the primacy, would affirm that he was the only begotten of the Father; and a fourth would cap the climax by announcing that he was God himself, the very Father in person! We use the masculine pronouns in the above descriptions, but the persons engaged in these races were as often females as males.

We may laugh at these phenomena as eccentricities, or scold at them as blasphemies; but the truer and better way is to study them as diseases. These monstrous swellings of egotism have causes as subtle and as real as the causes of goitre, and are almost as involuntary. They are states of the brain and solar plexus, affected by evil spirits, and though generally harmless enough to keep out of the lunatic hospitals, are actually forms of incipient mania, and often pass into real insanity. All lunatic asylums are full of patients who believe themselves to be sole potentates. In fact, this enlargement of the ego is the most constant symptom of virulent mania."

Satan's Sifter.

"And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat." Luke xxii. 31.

This scripture has been impressed on my mind with weight, and I have been stirred in spirit to write. I pray the good Lord to help me, for vain is the help of man.

It is evident to all the readers of the Herald that chaff needs no sifting; it is the wheat. When we sift wheat it is to separate the chaff from it; the wheat dropping through the sieve. The chaff is blown away and destroyed.

Believers in Christ are represented as wheat: it is of a heavier nature than chaff. Peter was a believer, and it constituted him wheat. This kind is worth its weight in gold. Yea, I might say, thrice its weight in gold.

It is very evident to our mind, that Satan looks at the wheat in this light. If it were not very valuable to him, he would not be so earnest to sift them and make them chaff. Wheat is much heavier than chaff, and as it is shaken it drops through the sieve, it is saved for the Master's use.

The work of the Master with his holy truth, is to make wheat out of chaff; for man is taken out of the dust; is of the earth, earthy; and unless he is connected with the great Life-giver by faith in his name, and the great work which he is to do, he must perish in his own corruption.

The work of Satan is to reverse the work we have been speaking of, and make chaff out of wheat. He does this work by sifting the wheat. He has at work many sieves. I do not intend to speak of but one, at this time. I find in my labors in different places a class of people, who, when I ask them how they are getting along in the ways of religion, show a spirit that would ward off anything that could be said, and refer you to professors who do not live any better than they do. I call this one of his sifters. No wonder they are weak, living on the poor natural man's failings.

Now, my dear brother or sister, whoever you are, that have been drawn into this sieve, and are being sifted in this manner, let me tell you, if you don't get out you will become so poor that the enemy will make you chaff. This is one of his artful ways of weakening your faith, destroying your confidence, and bringing us into captivity to his will.

The nature of the natural and spiritual man is not so well understood as it ought to be. The better this is understood, the more beauty we can see in the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. It is necessary we should have a mark to look at while we are running the christian course. We have it in the holy scriptures, abundantly.

John came to prepare the way of the Lord. In his preaching he says, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. John i. 29.

The prophet John labored to collect a bride for our Lord, and prepare her to be presented to him, when he should make his appearance. At length he appeared on the banks of Jordan, and John sees him coming to him, and cries, Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world; and presenting the bride to him, they left John and followed Jesus. Fixing his eyes intently upon him, singling him out, and regarding him with special attention.

My dear brethren and sisters, here, in the blessed Saviour, you will find a character that will bear examination. He is the spiritual man. Look at him, at any point you please; he will bear the test. Glory be to his holy name, the character that shines out in the holy scriptures, outshines the sun at noonday. All the characters brought out in the scriptures fall into insignificance before this. So John understood it. He says, I must decrease; he must increase. The grand and glorious principles that he developed in his preaching are in harmony with his character; showing him to be of an increasing nature. And while the ceaseless ages shall continue to roll, his glorious character will continue to shine; his wisdom will continue to be developed.

Now let me ask one and all, if we have looked too much at the natural man, let us heed John's words. Stop looking at the natural man, and behold the spiritual. By so doing we shall grow stronger, more healthy; and be able to walk alone. It is poor food to feed on professors' failings.

Is Elijah yet to Come?

I design to say but a few words in reply to the remarks of Eld. J. S. White, in the issue of March 20th. If I see the matter in its true light, very little is needed to be said. I do not write for the purpose of strengthening my former argument: for I think I shall not be accused of egotism if I say that Br. White has failed to touch a single point in that argument. The main question does not in the least depend on whether the "Greek text" will admit of the reading I gave it, or whether it will not. In the opinion of Br. White "a prophet" "is not in the Greek text." But in the opinion of all those men who translated our version of the Bible, "a prophet" is in the Greek text. So they have put "a prophet" in the margin. I repeat what I said in my former article, that in a large majority of cases the marginal readings are the most literal rendering of "the Greek text." Again, in the opinion of Prof. James Murdock, "a prophet" is positively in the original Syriac. Mark well, Br. White, no better authority is known to exist than the Syriac Peshito Version of the N. T. So much for this. Now to the main question. Was John the Elijah which was to come? Let us turn to Mal. iv. 5, 6, and we shall find just how much is contained in the "Elijah Mission." Hear it.

"Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

How much then is contained in the "Elijah Message?" Simply this, "the turning of the heart of the fathers to the children—and of the children to the fathers; and positively no more. This is all that Malachi gives; and as he is the only prophet who speaks of the coming of Elijah, to say there is more in the "Elijah Message" than Malachi puts in it, is simply to be "wise above what is written."

Here then we anchor down on the plain, positive language of the prophet of God, and hold with an unyielding grasp the simple proposition that all that Elijah was to do when he did come, was to "turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the fathers." Now how much of this did John fulfill? Br. White admits that he fulfilled "some" of the work that is contained in the Elijah Message. Does he not see that even this admission kills his theory? Was John's mission of God? And did God send John to do a work which did not belong to him? Most certainly John did the very work God sent him to perform. If therefore he did fulfill a portion of the Elijah Message (and Br. White admits he did), then, unless he mistook his calling, was out of his proper sphere, he was "the Elijah which was for to come." I remark farther, it is fair to conclude that if he fulfilled a part of the Elijah Message, he did the whole work of Elijah. To suppose that he was sent of God to accomplish a certain work; that he commenced that work, and by some trick of the devil the plan of God failed in its full accomplishment; and consequently God must send another man, that he must "try again," is simply preposterous. This is not God's manner of fulfilling prophecy. But to put all theorizing forever at rest, we simply say, John the Baptist did do all that Malachi, or any other prophet, has ever said that Elijah would do when he did come. We say this on the authority of the angel Gabriel. What says Gabriel? See Luke i, 17. "He (John) shall go before him (the Lord) in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." Now, unless the mission of John failed, he did accomplish all that any prophet ever said that Elijah would do. And God does not fulfil his word twice. Neither does God make a mistake and send the wrong man to do a work he has declared shall be accomplished. As John did fulfil all that Elijah was to do, the conclusion is inevitable that he is "the Elijah which was for to come."

With this agree the clear, positive, unqualified declarations of the Son of God. Hear him. In Mat. xi. 13, he says, "If ye will receive it this is Elias which was for to come." What can be more positive? Again, Mat. xvii. 10–13. "And his disciples asked him saying, Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?" Christ is here questioned on the very point on which Br. White and I differ, viz., the coming of Elijah. It is plain from this text and the context that the Jews had urged as an argument against the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth, that Elias had not yet come. On the mount of transfiguration the voice from heaven had settled the question forever as to the fact that Christ is the Son of God; the disciples therefore query about this, saying that "Elias must first come?"

Will Christ mislead them? Will he not rather tell them all the truth? We think he will keep nothing back on this question. Hear his answer. "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things;" (all things of course that the prophet said he would restore,) "but I say unto you that Elias IS COME ALREADY, and they (the Jews) knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed: likewise also shall the Son of man suffer of them. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist."

Comment seems unnecessary. Now, if there was an Elijah yet to come, Christ failed to give these anxiously inquiring disciples the slightest intimation of it; but tells them plainly, and by the use of the most positive language, that Elias has already come, and that John the Baptist is that Elias.

One testimony more. Mark ix. 11–13. "And they asked him saying, Why say the scribes that Elias must first come? And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first and restoreth all things,.... But I say unto you that Elias IS INDEED COME, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, AS IT IS WRITTEN OF HIM." Who had written of Elias previous to this declaration of Christ? I answer, Malachi, and him only. Here again, when the disciples are uncertain as to the coming of Elijah, Christ, so far from giving the smallest notice of any Elijah yet to come, declares in the clearest language that the very Elijah has come of which the prophet wrote. Now it looks to me, and I say it in all kindness, and with all due deference to the opinion of Br. White, that if the modern doctrine of the Elijah message be true, either Christ made a blunder, or he purposely misled his disciples. Neither of these can be true; consequently these modern ideas must be erroneous. The difficulty seems to be that John said he was not Elijah. I simply remark in addition to what I have said in my former article, that in the sense in which the Jews looked for Elijah, John was not the Elijah. But in the true sense, he was the very Elijah that was to come; so says Christ, and so says also the angel Gabriel. The Jews had no correct ideas whatever of God's manner of fulfilling prophecy. Br. White's figure is directly in point. The Jews supposed Christ meant by eating his flesh, etc, to eat his literal flesh. They were mistaken. They were looking for the old Elijah with whom Elisha associated to come down from heaven and fulfil a mission on the earth. This is the idea doubtles contained in their question to John. In this sense John plainly declares he is not Elijah. But he is the Elijah in the true sense of the prophecy. Mark how faithfully he accomplished this work of "turning the hearts of the fathers to the children," etc. Mark i. 5. "And there went out to him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins." Mat. iii. 5, 6. "Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan; and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." Thus, by the most infallible evidences (in our opinion), we settle the question that the Elijah mission is all in the past, and that John the Baptist fulfilled every part of it, in the most faithful manner, just as that work is given by the only prophet who speaks of this mission. Amen. All which is respectfully submitted by PAULO.

Hope of Eternal Life.

A single portion of scripture, to one placing confidence in the teachings of the Bible, ought to put the whole matter at rest, and fix the mind directly upon the only way to life. I refer to the epistle of Paul to Titus. The apostle, in the course of this brief letter, elucidates every essential principle of christian experience, practice and hope, confining himself to the experience of himself and Titus directly, or applying general principles of the divine administration to themselves. (1.) The fallen and sinful condition of man—"foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful and hating one another. Titus iii. 3. (2.) The originating cause of man's recovery—"the kindness and love of God toward man,"—"not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy." iii, 4, 5. (3.) The mediatorial cause—"through Jesus Christ our Saviour." iii. 6. "Who gave himself for us." ii. 14. (4.) The instrumental causes—faith and truth—"Paul, a servant of God according to the faith of God's elect and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness." i. 1. Christians also designated by the phrase, "they which have believed in God." iii. 8. (5.) The recovery itself—"he saved us by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost," iii. 5; "justified by his grace," ver. 7. (6.) The extent of this salvation—"which he shed on us abundantly," ver. 6; "redeem us from all iniquity," ii. 14. (7.) The mode of life required of the saved—"Holding fast the faithful word," i. 9; "denying ungodliness, and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly, in this present world," ii. 12; "zealous of good works." ver. 14; "careful to maintain good works." iii. 8. Finally, the result of this experience—"that we might be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life," iii. 7. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ." ii. 13.

The following conclusions are legitimate:—

1. There is a state or condition properly denominated "eternal life," which state is to be enjoyed in another world; "for what a man hath, why doth he yet hope for?"

2. There is an exercise of the mind or heart, properly termed, "the hope of eternal life." This "hope" is a sincere desire for eternal life, associated with a well-founded expectation of enjoying it.

3. Eternal life is an inheritance, and as such belongs only to the legal "heirs."

4. Man, in his natural state, is not an "heir according to the hope of eternal life." Paul and Titus were made heirs by grace. Not naturally so—neither "by works of righteousness which we have done."

5. Man is an alien from the house of God, in such sense as deprives him of the rights and privileges of heirship; else, how could he be "adopted," how be "made" an heir?

6. No election before the world began, constituted any man an heir. Paul was one of "God's elect;" but his election did not make him an heir, because he was justified by grace that he might be made an heir according to the hope of eternal life. His heirship was a result of his justification; his justification was not the result of his election to heirship.

7. Genuine christian experience, faithfully maintained, will constitute any man an "heir according to the hope of eternal life."

Dear reader, "examine yourself whether you are in the faith." "Prove your own self." "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." "He that believeth hath the witness in himself." Whoever receives the same work of grace with Paul, will receive "the spirit of adoption," which will bear witness with his spirit that he is a child of God; and if a child, then an heir of God, and a joint heir with Jesus Christ. Rom. viii. 1-16. If, on examination, you have not been made an heir "by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost," rest not, till by repentance of all sin, renunciation of every false hope, and implicit faith in Christ as your present and everlasting Saviour, you fly for refuge from the consequences of alienation from God, and "lay hold upon the hope set before you in the Gospel." Having this hope, you may have "strong consolation," and "abound more and more in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." You may then be prepared to give a reason of the hope that is in you, claiming with the great apostle to the Gentiles, that you have been made an heir according to the hope of eternal life.—Zion's Herald.

Rewards and Punishments.

The man who does right cannot fail of his reward. The reward of righteousness is as certain as the righteous deeds themselves. The reward and the righteousness go together; they are inseparable. No man can do a kind action—no one can prefer duty to ease, or justice to interest, or charity to pleasure, or truth to reputation and friends, without being rewarded. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." Nor has the good and faithful man to wait for his reward. He is rewarded in his own heart. He is rewarded the moment he conquers self, and resolutely prefers the right, the true, the good. He is rewarded with an increase of spiritual strength, with an increase of spiritual freedom, with an increase of spiritual sensibility, with an increase of spiritual life and spiritual joy. He becomes a better man, a greater man, a more perfect man, and, therefore, a more happy man. Every exertion of spiritual power, increases that power; every exercise of holy affection increases its fervor; every conflict with temptation strengthens the principles of righteousness in our hearts. And in proportion to the growth of our hearts, in proportion as the principles of righteousness within us increase in power, in such proportion are we raised above the power of evil, above the power of the world; in such proportion do we become happy in ourselves, truly, divinely happy. We do not instantly feel our increased happiness, but we receive it. We receive the increased power over evil, and the pleasure to which this increased power gives birth will follow in its place.

Thus every man, according to the measure of his faithfulness, is becoming daily a more exalted, a more godlike being. Every man, according to his faithfulness, is rising to a higher sphere of being and of bliss, and becoming fitted for more extensive and important labors among his fellow men. He rises as surely as he proves faithful.

At the same time, this is not the good man's only reward. He will receive a future reward, a reward in a future state of being. Still, that future reward will probably resemble his present reward, and be in proportion to it. Man's portion will always be according to his character, and his character must always be according to his acts: man's character must always be of his own creation, by the aid of God's Spirit, and his character will eternally determine his lot.

How important are these thoughts. How needful it is to deal justly and truly with ourselves; to respect the voice of our consciences, and in all things to act according to our views of what is right and best. How awful it is for man to destroy or to degrade himself. How little do many people think what they are doing when they are transgressing the law of God, when they are going contrary to their knowledge or belief of what is right. How frightened men are at death, and how they shrink and flee from the hand of violence that would inflict death. How eager men are for life. What efforts they will make to lengthen life. Yet life and death are in the hands, or at the bidding, of every man on earth. We have our choice between eternal and endlessly increasing life, and between eternal, absolute, unalterable death. No man can take away our life, if we choose to live to God; and no one can prevent our death, our utter and everlasting death, if we live in sin.

How frightened men are at death; and what efforts they will make to shun it. Yet how many are inviting death to come and lay hold of them; how many are destroying themselves every day by living in opposition to the will of God. Men are frightened at death, and yet they are daily bringing it upon themselves. Every time they sin they are destroying their life, and bringing near to them eternal death. Every sinner is a self-murderer; a murderer of his whole life, his entire being. How eager men are for life; yet how few take the trouble to enlarge, to perfect, to perpetuate their life. How eager they are for life; yet they allow the opportunity of making their life complete and everlasting, to pass away unimproved.

We have opportunities of increasing our life, of improving our character and our portion daily. We are daily meeting with temptations to do wrong, and with discouragements to doing right; and in every instance when we do right in spite of discouragements, and shun wrong in spite of allurements, we increase our strength, we increase the fervor of good affections, we widen our capacity of enjoyment, we add to our highest bliss. Trade, family connections, afflictions, persecutions, all furnish us with opportunities of daily rising higher in being and in blessedness. All try us, and every trial is a favor, every trial is a means of growth in spiritual life, in spiritual power, in spiritual, everlasting bliss.

Let this, then, be borne in mind continually, that we are always gaining ground while we are struggling against evil, or toiling for what is good—that every holy effort has a blessing in it, as well as a blessing after it—that every event of life is designed by God to be a ministering angel, and, whether painful or pleasant, must breathe fresh life, fresh power, fresh bliss through our minds, and give fresh worth, and larger campass, and fuller perfection to our being, if we use it as we ought. HOMO.

"The Whole Truth."

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

We have, of late, frequently seen it more than intimated, that those who devote their time in preaching the doctrine of immortality through Christ, do not preach the "whole truth." I do not remember that I have seen it stated, what truth we should preach, which lies outside of this. If immortality, or eternal life through Christ, does not include the whole truth, contained in the gospel, which was to be preached in all the world, and which was in the commission of our Lord to his disciples, then I would be informed of that truth which is distinct and separate from future life only through Jesus Christ. If we speak of repentance, it is with its necessary reference to life in Christ as the result. It is the same with the hope of the gospel, and the faith of the gospel; and also of every practical duty and condition required of man.

If in the "age to come," as it is called, men are to be saved on any condition not contained in the gospel, and through any other medium save Christ, we must wait for a revelation of the fact; for there is no other name given under heaven, among men, by which we must be saved, save the name of Jesus Christ. Christ "abolished death and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Life and immortality, then, through Jesus Christ, is, I conceive, the central point of the whole truth, and cannot be fully presented without bringing out every brance of truth contained in the gospel, which was to be preached even to the end of the world. I am fully persuaded that in presenting this subject fully, I am preaching the "whole truth." If there be a point contained in this subject which I do not yet see, it nevertheless belongs to the subject, but it follows, that if this subject be fully presented that point will be seen and preached.

The more I contemplate this great subject, the more does my soul magnify the grace of God "which is to be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ."—Bible Ex. 1854.

HORNSBY, ILLS., Mar. 22, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I left Mode on Monday last, walked two miles with all my baggage through the mud to Br. Ponsler's; was kindly entertained. May the Lord bless him and his numerous family. Br. P. took me, next day, to Shelbyville in wagon; took the cars for this place; found Br. Walter and wife well; and from here we shall start for old Fulton Co., Ill., as the brethren have written for me to come; and more than that, furnish the means to go with; which is as it should be. Notwithstanding we leave our dear friends at Mode rather reluctantly; for we love them, and shall never forget to pray for them, that they may live to the glory of God and be saved in his kingdom. Now I must stop writing much more, as my hand is very weak. We received the last two packages of books and tracts. May our blessed Lord reward the dear brethren who have conferred favors on the old one-armed preacher, with eternal life It fills my whole soul (self) with joy to hear that the little band in Otto, Ills., are holding on, rejoicing in hope of soon seeing our Elder Brother, even Jesus. Br. Tefft writes—We have not had but one advent sermon since you left. But the little band here stands firm, and contend almost daily with those that believe the Lord will resurrect the wicked for the purpose of killing them again, and then plunging them into hell to make happy the saints, &c. When we get on our old battle-ground we will report ourself again. Pray for us.

A really good thing may stand at the door of our judgment, asking admittance, dressed in the rags of a very bad name.

Obituary.

Dr. F. B. Hahn.

BR. STORRS:—Visiting in Philadelphia after an absence of several months, my heart is saddened by the absence of one familiar face—that of our dear brother, Dr. F. B. Hahn; and as through some apparent oversight, no mention has been made of his death in the HERALD—a loving reverence for the deceased prompts the following:

IN MEMORIAM.

Our brother, F. B. HAHN, M. D., died suddenly in this city, Oct. 8, 1866. Aged 57 years.

Br. Hahn was a firm believer in the doctrine of immortality only through Christ, and that none but those who are in Christ will have a resurrection from the dead. It was his delight to dwell upon these topics in private conversation, and sometimes he spake publicly on them, in a clear and logical manner.

During the visits which I made to Philadelphia in the winters of '65 and '66, I was often entertained at his house, and had many interesting conversations with him in regard to these important bible doctrines. Once, he read to me a lecture on "The nature of man" which he had delivered in the Hall, cor. 9th and Spring Garden Streets. It was a learned and philosophical view of the subject. I should hope that his friends might offer it for publication in the columns of the HERALD OF LIFE. It was well known among his large circle of acquaintances—medical gentlemen as well as others—that he held and advocated these thorough scriptural positions in respect to the nature of the human soul and the future life.

Dr. Hahn was for a long time a believer in the immediate coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. I understood that he was among the first that embraced this conviction, and was identified with it during the dark time that followed the great disappointment of our hopes, in the early part of this expectation. He remained firm and faithful. Many of the brethren who preach the word, and who in those days labored in word and doctrine, will with interest call to mind the steadfast and self-sacrificing position of Br. Hahn, when a great stand was to be made for the truth in western New York. He lived then at Canandaigua. He was at one time Mayor of that city. He took a bold and unyielding ground; maintaining it at the expense of all things. It did cost all in those days to defend the truth. He was not backward when property and reputation were involved. His house was a home for the servants of God; his substance and his talents were all given to the great mission of the gospel of the kingdom.

Latterly, while equally interested, he was not so actively engaged, owing to business cares. He had an abiding faith in the bearing of the prophecies upon the time of Christ's coming, and once remarked to me that his convictions on that point, and his engagedness in the work, were always parallel to each other.

He was an old-school physician, a man of wisdom and experience, respected by the profession generally, and beloved by those who had occasion to employ his services in sickness; and one of the older and more solid type of gentlemen with whom it was a pleasure to spend time, as all can bear witness who enjoyed the privilege of his refined conversation and affable manners. He was a member of the Northern Medical Society, of Philadelphia, which, immediately after his death, adopted a series of resolutions—a testimonial of his worth as a christian gentleman, and honorable physician, which were transmitted in a letter of condolence to his bereaved family.

He was buried with the honors of the Masonic order, and his mourning wife and interesting family of children left to the care of a merciful heavenly Father, and the sympathy of his friends. May the Lord in his great and infinite mercy sustain them. Peace to his memory. W. S. CAMPBELL.

Philadelphia, Pa., March, 1867.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The above is the first thing sent us for insertion in relation to Dr. HAHN. Though personally acquainted with him, we were not sufficiently so with his early history and his last years to prepare an obituary notice, and waited for others to do it till now. So far as our personal acquaintance and intercourse with Dr. Hahn was concerned, it was always most agreeable and satisfactory; and in his family we always felt at home. May his bereaved ones find the grace of God in Christ their abundant support.

Piety has a transmuting power, and often turns the inconsistency of the understanding into food for the heart. Therefore, instead of murmuring we should rejoice, when we see the same christian holiness manifested under diverse opinions. For christianity embraced under one form, might have been rejected under another. All cannot see through the same telescope, but different eyes require the tube to be variously adjusted. And the image formed will be at best blurred and dim, unless Charity furnish us with her achromatic lens, and blend all the rays into one harmonious brightness.—Edinburgh Review.

May God grant to my sons, if they live to manhood, an unshaken love of truth, and a firm resolution to follow it for themselves, with an intense abhorrence of all party ties, save that one tie which binds them to the party of Christ against wickedness.—Dr. Arnold.

Summary of News.

DOMESTIC.

The XLth Congress adjourned on the 30th ult. until the first Wednesday in July; if no quorum is then present, it will stand adjourned till December. Its legislation upon Reconstruction was the most important of its acts. The debates on the impeachment of the President were the most exciting. General Butler made some remarkable statements in regard to the suppression of important testimony in relation to the assassination of Lincoln. This subject of impeachment is in the hands of the committee appointed for that purpose, and we shall hear more of it when Congress comes together again. An act was passed granting a company privilege to lay another telegraph cable on the American Atlantic coast.

A treaty has been concluded between the Russian Minister at Washington on behalf of the Czar, and the Secretary of State on behalf of the United States, in which the Russian Government agrees to convey to the United States all its possessions on the American continent known as Russian America, in consideration of the payment therefor of seven millions of dollars.

The people of Kansas expect a plague of grasshoppers this year. The country is filled with the eggs deposited by last year's swarms, and two months will hatch them out.

The Lindell House, in St. Louis, supposed to be the largest hotel in America, and, perhaps, in the world, was totally destroyed by fire on Saturday night lost. There were over four hundred guests in the house, but no lives were lost. The loss amounts to $1,600,000, only partly insured.

The election in Connecticut, on Monday, April 1st, resulted in the success of English, the Democratic candidate for Governor.

FOREIGN.

While there has been no matter of special interest to record about Europe or Asia, everything betrays the growing preparation for some conflict. England is disturbed by earnest demands for reform at home, while Ireland is in its usual state of unrest, and Canada is far from tranquil. France, balked by Prussia, forced from Italy, and disappointed in Mexico, threatens to renew those civil dissensions which there almost invariably follow defeat abroad. Neither Spain nor Portugal is in assured peace. Austria is suffering from as grave defeats as are recorded in all of her history, and Denmark from the loss of her richest territory. Prussia has suddenly risen to first-rate importance, and seems determined to consolidate and enlarge her acquisitions. The Greek and Catholic faiths are again at variance, Russia promising to support the former in a way which renders war quite possible. South America is experiencing the effects of a war which has involved the larger part of those nations by which it is divided, and Mexico is not cured of its chronic disquiet. Besides which, a state of disquiet exists among the minor divisions of the world. Japan and China are still revolutionary. A revolt has just taken place in Hayti, successfully overturning the present Government, and so on. From Mexico we learn the liberals were almost under the walls of the capital, and prevented supplies from entering. Maximilian's army at Queretaro was completely environed by the liberals. General Diaz had commenced besieging Puebla. The people in Vera Cruz were disposed to insist on a surrender of the place to the liberal forces outside. Over three hundred persons were in prison in Mexico City for expressing sympathy with the liberals and failing to pay their quota of the forced loans. Maximilian's Governor of the city had resigned and intended to leave for Europe, and in a few days Maximilian himself must follow.

An attempt was made to assassinate the King of Italy, near Milan, which failed.

Canada and the rest of the British Provinces of North America are at last to be confederated under a species of king furnished by the Home Government. Their troubles with the Fenians and apprehensions about the United States have led the people there to call for a "King Stork."

The appearance of anti-Prussian placards in the streets of Luxemburg creates much excitement in France and Germany. No answer has yet been made to the complaint of the Prussian commander, and, pending the settlement of the affair, the irritation is increasing on both sides of the Rhine.

Regret is generally expressed by the English press and in political circles at the proposed sale of the Russian Possessions in North America to the United States.

The great Paris Universal Exposition was formally opened on the 1st of April, and was a grand affair.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG, 35 Ann St., New York, is prepared to furnish the above to any who may wish to obtain it. He has made arrangements with the author—HON. O. S. HALSTED—for a supply. Price $3.

APPOINTMENTS.

ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL will preach at ROCKY BROOK, R. I., April 7th and 14th.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by DR. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

A HYMN OF TRUST.

Leave God to order all thy ways,
And hope in Him whate'er betide;
Thou'lt find Him in the evil days
An all-sufficient Strength and Guide.
Who trusts in God's unchanging love
Builds on the rock that naught can move.

What can these anxious cares avail,
These never-ceasing moans and sighs?
What can it help us to bewail
Each painful moment as it flies?
Our cross and trials do but press
The heavier for our bitterness.

Only your restless heart keep still,
And wait in cheerful hope, content
To take whate'er His gracious will,
His all-discerning love has sent;
Nor doubt our inmost wants are known
To Him who chose us for his own.

He knows when joyful hours are best,
He sends them as He sees it meet;
When thou hast borne its fiery test,
And now art freed from all deceit,
He comes to thee all unaware,
And makes thee own his loving care.

Nor in the heat of pain and strife,
Think God hath cast thee off unheard;
Nor that the man whose prosperous life
Thou enviest, is of Him preferred;
Time passes, and much change doth bring,
And sets a bound to everything.

Are all alike before his face?
'Tis easy to our God most High
To make the rich man poor and base—
To give the poor man wealth and joy.
True wonders still by Him are wrought,
Who setteth up and brings to naught.

Sing, pray, and swerve not from his ways,
But do thine own part faithfully;
Trust his rich promises of grace,
So shall it be fulfilled in thee;
God never yet forsook in need
The soul that trusted Him indeed.

LITTLE WILLIE TIGER.

Jamaica is one of the largest and richest islands of the Antilles. Near its southwest shore lived a gentleman by the name of Harpen. He had left Frankfort-on-the-Main in early life, and, having bought this place, he cultivated it with great care and profit. Mr. Harpen was young, vigorous, and zealous. His first care was to get his house in good condition, and to plant such trees as would most beautify it. He had a wife and one son. His son's name was Willie; but, because he was smaller than most boys at the age of eleven, he went by the name of Little Willie. Mr. Harpen hired a negro by the name of Peter, to take charge of Little Willie, and to go with him wherever he went. The colored woman, who was a servant in the family, was named Juno, and Juno had as black a face and as white eyes and teeth as ever you saw.

Little Willie was very fond of flowers, and Peter would gather them for him with the greatest pleasure. One of Peter's duties was to set nets in the little stream that emptied into the ocean; and nothing gave him greater pleasure than to take Little Willie out with him, where they could take in fish from the nets together. One day Willie's mother and father took a long ride from home into the interior of the island; but, before leaving, they cautioned Peter to take good care of Little Willie in their absence. While they were gone, Peter and Willie went down to the shore to get into the boat and set the nets again. They had gone to the nets and returned; and Peter had gotten out of the boat, expecting in a moment to pull it up to the shore with Willie in it. It so happened that some very large rushes grew right at the landing, and just as Peter jumped out he saw a large crocodile lying with open mouth ready to devour him. This, of course, frightened him very much; and in his fright, though he was not hurt by the crocodile, the boat drifted off from the shore with Little Willie in it. It soon got into the current, and was drifted out of the mouth of the creek into the ocean, and Little Willie was all the while crying for help. Peter swam as fast as he could to get to it; but it was of no use, and Peter saw that it was impossible to reach it.

That night, about one o'clock, an English man-of-war was cruising in the neighborhood of Jamaica, and the sailor who was on the watch cried out that there was something ahead.

"What is it?" shouted the captain.

"Don't know," replied the sailor.

Soon a large number of sailors were leaning over the bow of the ship, trying to find out what sort of an object that was before them. Some thought it was a great fish that was floating there; others, that it was a large log of wood; but as they steered close beside it they saw that it was a boat, and in it was a little boy asleep. That was Little Willie, who, by crying and by fear, had fallen into a deep sleep. He was taken on board, and thought to be dead; but he afterwards revived, though he could not tell much about himself. All that he knew was, that his name was Little Willie. "What shall we call him?" said the captain to the other officers of the vessel. "I propose," said one, "that we name him after our vessel. Her name is Tiger, and I propose that we name him 'Little Willie Tiger.'" By and by the news went all over the vessel that the little stranger was named "Willie Tiger."

Willie passed two years upon that man-of-war, and gained the favor of all on board. He went back to England in her, and returned again in another vessel named the Falcon, which also cruised in the waters about the West Indies. The Falcon, having cruised a while there, sailed to the Pacific ocean, and came back again in the course of a few years, Willie being still on board, and having risen to quite a high position. The sailors of the Falcon one day saw a sharp, dark-looking vessel, which seemed to them to be of a very peculiar character. In one hour after they first came in sight of her she proved to be a pirate vessel, and she was evidently doing the best she could to make an attack on the Falcon. She was well manned, and her captain was determined to whip the cruiser if possible. All at once a cannon was fired from the Falcon at the pirate vessel; but the latter did not reply, though it kept on its course as near the Falcon as possible, and, when it reached the broadside of the Falcon, it poured forth the contents of six large cannon. Two shots entered the side of the Falcon, while the third hit the mast, which fell with a tremendous crash. The fight did not last over twenty minutes, when the Falcon surrendered to the pirate vessel. Nobody was killed during the conflict, and all the crew of the Falcon were taken on board the pirate vessel.

Who should be found among the pirates but the servant of Mr. Harpen, Black Peter, who used to take care of Willie? He had been captured somewhere else by the pirates, and was compelled to become one of the crew. The meeting between these two persons, Little Willie and Black Peter, was affecting beyond description. Whenever they had an opportunity to talk, their conversation turned upod Willie's father and mother. Peter knew a little more about their history than Willie did; for he was in their employ two years after Willie had been carried out into the sea in the little boat. During that time Willie's mother had died, having never recovered from her great grief at losing her dear son. Willie's father had also been very sad, and his affliction was indeed extreme. He had sold his place on the island of Jamaica, and had gone somewhere else, Peter knew not where.

That pirate vessel, on which they were, was attacked by another English cruiser, called the Otter, some three months after the time of which we speak; and Willie and Peter were, of course, among the prisoners. They explained to the commander of the Ottor the cause of their being upon the pirate vessel—that they were both there against their will. They were taken into the employment of the captain, and received marked favor at his hands. Of course Willie was well received, but that Black Peter should get in favor was somewhat singular; but there was something about him which always created sympathy, and disarmed hostility and contempt. One day the vessel was lying off the island of St. Thomas, and Willie and Peter were among the number who were sent ashore to buy fruit and get a fresh supply of water. While they were on their way to the shore, Willie took from his bosom a little locket which he had worn ever since he was a child, and which was around his neck when he floated out into the ocean. "What do you do that for?" said Peter. "Never mind," said Willie, "I know what I am about." They went ashore on the island of St. Thomas, and walked around a good deal, endeavoring to get as good a supply of provisions as possible. They saw a large throng of people collected in front of a hotel where some gentleman was making an address. They stood on the outskirts of the throng, and listened to his words. In the midst of his address it was observed that he began to weep, for he told of his early history, and of his little boy named Willie. The rest of his address was on a political subject. Peter said, "I believe that is your father," and after the gentleman had finished his address, both Willie and Peter went up to him and spoke to him. No sooner had the gentleman seen the little locket hanging out of Willie's breast than he said, "My Willie! O, my Willie! You are a man now, but I see that it is you!" That was indeed a happy meeting.

Willie applied to the captain of the vessel for a release from duty, and it was granted to him. He and Peter were soon settled on the large plantation of Mr. Harpen. Joy prevailed in the house—joy that the lost was found. Willie reflected over the entire history of his life, and came to this conclusion; that God often brings great happiness out of great sorrow. If Peter and I had not been captured by the pirates, and afterwards recaptured by the crusier, we would never have met our dearest and best earthly friend again. But every man's life is in the hand of God, and he has his plans for us all. Often the most afflicting circumstance is the greatest blessing God can confer.—The Methodist.

WHAT IS CONSCIENCE.—When a little boy, my father sent me from the field home. A spotted tortoise in shallow water caught my attention, and I lifted my stick to strike it, when a voice within me said, "It is wrong." I stood with uplifted stick, in wonder at the new emotion, till the tortoise vanished from my sight.

I hastened home and asked my mother what it was that told me it was wrong.

Taking me in her arms, she said, "Some men call it conscience, but I prefer to call it the voice of God in the soul of man. If you listen to it and obey it, then it will speak clearer, and always guide you right. But if you turn a deaf ear, or disobey, then it will fade out little by little, and leave you in the dark, without a guide."

NATIONS IN THE MILLENNIUM.

While it is very evident to my mind that the millennial morning is soon to dawn upon us, ushered in by the glorious personal advent of the King of kings, it is not so clear to me that the subjects of Christ's reign will consist only of those classes of persons who are changed to be immortal. The millenarian view of two classes of people, one immortal, the other in the mortal state, rendering obedience to Jesus Christ, during the thousand years at least, seems to me to have much evidence in its favor. I only propose to present a few considerations, in this article, in support of the view to which I feel favorable.

In deciding whether there will be any human beings in the mortal probationary state, inhabiting our earth during the millennium period, we must appeal to the sacred scriptures. Though much inferential evidence may be drawn from various uninspired, but educated and pious writers, in the early period of the gospel dispensation, in support of such a view, we cannot feel sure of its truth, unless we are sure that the inspired word sustains it. In appealing to the Bible we must remember that the Old Testament is as truly inspired as the New—that the doctrines clearly taught in one sacred book are not contradicted in another; and that, in order to have our doctrinal views correct, we must have such as are not contradicted by any text in the Bible. A perfect machine consists of all its parts arranged in their proper place, and a Bible doctrine is one which meets the requirements of all the texts which have any reference to it. All this I doubt not you will readily admit. Keeping these facts before us, it seems to me that there is a class of predictions, regarding the destiny of those translated at Christ's second advent, which are not applicable to another class of people, who are to be obedient and happy, and to still another, who will be at all times disobedient and unhappy, under the mellennial reign of Christ, and, vice versa, that the predictions respecting the last two classes are not applicable to the first.

Concerning the saints, both the quick and dead, who are to be clothed with immortality when Jesus comes, it is affirmed that they "shall be like him, and see him as he is," that their "vile bodies will be fashioned like unto his glorious body," that they "shall shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father," that they "shall neither marry nor be given in marriage, but shall be as the angels of God," that they "shall not die any more;" that they "shall have a city whose builder and maker is God," that Christ, in whose "Father's house are many mansions, and who has gone to prepare places for his disciples, will come again and receive them to himself," that where he is they may be also; that they shall "be caught up to meet the Lord in the air," that they will "ever be with the Lord," "will reign with Christ," "wear crowns of righteousness," "sit down with Jesus on his throne," "have power over the nations," "see his face;" and have his name written on their foreheads, shed no tears, endure no pain, feel no sorrow, dwell in the New Jerusalem, and "inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world."

This glorified condition will belong to all the followers of Christ, who are to be caught up to meet him in the air, and if they are to be the only ones of the human race who are to inhabit the earth during the Millennium, this exaltation and glory will be enjoyed by all the saints who then dwell upon the earth.

If we now turn to some predictions of the Old Testament, even if we do not call to view the numerous ones concerning the restoration and establishment of the Jews in Palestine, I think we may find several in reference to earthly inhabitants, in the millennial period, which are incompatible with the idea of those people belonging to this glorified class.

In Isa. lxv. 17–25, we have a promise of the new heavens and new earth, and a glorious state of things to be enjoyed; a promise which is evidently referred to by Peter, in his second epistle, and which is not to be fulfilled before the close of the present age, which terminates at the coming of Christ. The scene here narrated has particular reference to inhabitants on earth, and in the flesh, not to the immortal multitude.

Three things seem to be predicted of these people of the new earth which do not appear applicable to the shining throng, who are like the angels, and live and reign with Christ.

It appears that, 1. They are mortal. 2. They have offspring. 3. They engage in architectural and agricultural pursuits. 4. There are a few sinners.

Their mortality I infer from verses 20, 22: "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner, being an hundred years old, shall be accursed. As the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands."

I am aware that a strong effort is being made to show that the dying of children referred to in the twentieth verse takes place in the present world, and that those children who now die and awake in the resurrection will then be as mature as a person a hundred years old; but really it seems to me like a very forced and unnatural explanation, adopted to save a human theory, however sincere its advocates may be, in such an interpretation; for first, the situation of the words makes it evident that the prophet is describing the longevity of human beings, when the new and glorious state of things is being enjoyed here below, when Jerusalem will have been created a rejoicing, and her people a joy. Then, again, as the prediction in the twenty-second verse, "that as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands," evidently is fulfilled, not in the present, but in the future age, and denotes a very long, but not an endless period, I conclude that the persons referred to are those in the flesh, and awaing a future change to incorruption.

It would seem absurd to represent the life of an immortal being by the duration of the life of a tree. For I dare not affirm of the incorruptible God, or of holy angels, and the redeemed of mankind, who are to live forever, and the duration, therefore, of whose existence cannot be measured by days or years, or equal definite portions of duration, however long they may be, that their days shall be, "as the days of a tree." Any tree, however many centuries it may last, is a temporal object, and its whole age is composed in some definite number of days. No human being, endowed with reason, has a right to conclude, while surrounded by numerous evidences of the decay of trees, that any of the trees which he beholds will last forever: and, while there will be people in the millennium, whose days will be as the days of a tree, i. e., very numerous, they will need, I think, some stronger expression than this, to make them feel quite sure that their lives will be not only very lengthy, but immortal. I conclude, then, that both verses 20 and 22 harmoniously teach the mortality, in connection with the longevity, of the people here referred to, and who dwell on earth in the millennial age, though none are to die who are merely infants, or merely old men who have not filled their days. I understand verse 20 not to teach that there will be no infants in that period, but, that no infants will die in infancy, or that there will be no infant whose life will be comprised by days, as infants will survive the period of infancy, and their days being "as the days of a tree," a person shall be considered as dying in childhood, who dies at the age of a hundred years. That there will be infants born at that time, is evident from verse 23, which affirms "They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble, for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them."

That architectural and agricultural pursuits will then be carried on is proved by verses 21 and 22. "And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat."

That not every inhabitant of earth will then be destitute of sin, is manifest from the expression, "but the sinner being an hundred years old, shall be accursed."

Now let us bear in mind that the translated saints are to be "as the angels," "neither marry nor be given in marriage," are to "die no more," that Jesus prepares for them their places of abode, that they are to dwell in mansions and be with Jesus, live in the New Jerusalem, the continuing city, whose builder and maker is God, and that into that city nothing can enter that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of Life.

From these considerations, it seems that during the millennium, there will be mortals inhabiting this planet, and, though during the thousand years, almost all the people may be righteous at heart, they will be liable, as probationers, to fall into sin; and some will so sin as to be accursed.

Really, I think, a fair and candid interpretation of this interesting portion of Isaiah's writing must favor the millenarian view of probation during the millennium.

Let us now turn to Micah, chapter iv. Here we have a prediction of what is to occur "in the last days," and these particular last days must, from the nature of the case, be the millennium days. It is not a conditional promise of something which might have been enjoyed, if the Jews had accepted Christ as their King and Saviour, when he was on earth, but an unconditional prophecy of what is yet to take place.

The last verse of the previous chapter affirms, "Therefore shall Zion for your sake be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house, as the high places of the forest."

This is the prediction which was literally fulfilled, long after Christ ascended to heaven, and the chapter under consideration predicts what is as literally to be fulfilled, subsequent to these events in the last days. The chapter opens with the words, "But in the last days," i. e., notwithstanding Zion shall be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, "it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. And nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob, and He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, for the law shall go forth out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." This seems to be a prediction as unconditional as any in the Bible, and we should look to the future for its fulfilment. The next verse announces, "And He shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Now this is as truly inspired discourse as any other words in the scriptures, and we shall endeavor to believe the doctrine it is designed to teach. If any say this prediction is not accurately to be accomplished, they might as well say the prophecies relative to the second advent of Christ, his kingdom, the resurrection of the dead, and future judgment are not to be literally fulfilled.

Jerusalem has been destroyed, and Zion has been ploughed as a field. Jerusalem, according to the words of the unerring Teacher, is to be trodden under foot of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled, and according to the inspired prophets, when Jerusalem in the last days becomes the headquarters of civil and religious knowledge and authority, the Lord will judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off. Jesus will now be reigning "in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." The times of Gentile rule being fulfilled, and universal supremacy over the world being assumed by Jesus Christ, the King of Zion, the King of glory, the King of kings, whom the heavens now receive until the times of restitution of all things, spoken by all the holy prophets, then seated upon the throne of his father David, to rule over the house of Jacob forever, will subject strong nations to the matchless authority of his everlasting kingdom. He will rebuke strong nations, and in consequence of this rebuke, instead of continuing the art of war, they will change their weapons of war to implements of agriculture, and learn war no more. Are the translated saints such a warlike race of beings, that as soon as they get established in their mansions they, in consequence of a sound and well deserved rebuke, somehow get hold of their spears and swords, and alter them into farming tools, and settle down to the peaceful business of agriculture? If not, we have a portrayal of another class of human beings who will inhabit the earth after Christ comes, and Jerusalem becomes the centre of influence and authority.

Let us now turn to the 14th chapter of Zechariah, where we have a description of the state of things after the "Lord comes with all the saints," and while he reigns as "King over all the earth."

To say that the predictions of this chapter are conditional, and the conditions not having been observed, these predictions are not to be fulfilled, seems to be preposterous, and laying the foundation for much mischievous interpretation of the Bible to suit cherished theories. In the first place, there is not the least hint in this, or the preceding chapter, that this chapter contains conditional predictions.

Secondly, that the blessings promised in this chapter, were not forfeited by the rejection of the Messiah, by the Jews, in the days of his flesh, is evident from the last verse of the preceding chapter, "And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried; they shall call on my name and I will hear them; I will say, It is my people; and they shall say, The Lord is my God." Here is a plain and unconditional prediction of what God designed at a future time to do, to his people, and of results which he knew would certainly take place.

If loyalty on the part of the Jews is to be produced by Christ's dealings with them, it is vain to say they will not enjoy the promised blessings, owing to their want of loyalty. If the 14th chapter is conditional on the reception of Christ by the Jews, it will be at the time and in the manner described in this verse, and as this is to certainly take place, the prophecies of the 14th chapter are certainly to be fulfilled.

The 14th chapter seems to consist of a fuller detail of what is partially glanced at in this verse.

That the Jews are to repent and become the disciples of Christ at this period, is plain from Zech. xii. 8–14, where we are taught, not that the inhabitants of Jerusalem will repent, if they do not continue in unbelief, but that God will pour upon them and the house of David, the spirit of grace and supplication, and they shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son; that there will be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon; and that the land shall mourn, every family apart.

Furthermore, if this 14th chapter of Zechariah consists of merely conditional predictions, I ask, how we can know any of the unfulfilled prophecies to be unconditional? How do we know Christ's second coming, the resurrection of the dead, the mellennium, and other promised blessings, not to rest on certian unmentioned conditions?

Assuming that this chapter contains conditional predictions, what rule have we for determining what prophecies are conditional, and what unconditional, and prevent us from perverting the Bible to suit preconceived ideas?
